WANTS HER DOWER

Robert Townsend's Widow Demands Her Rights.

ROMANTIC MARRIAGE RECALLED

The Love of a Swell Society Man for a Pretty Cook.

She Was a Good Cook Too—Just Before His Death, While Not Master of His Actions, He Made a Will Depriving His Wife of All That Was Lawfully Her's—Through Accident She Did Not Contest the Will—Will Sue For Her Share.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—A lawsuit which is about to be instituted by Lawyer Henry Hoyt, Broadway, against Hoffman Miller, head of the law firm of Miller & Peckham, reveals a case both picturesque and sensational. The plaintiff in the suit is Mrs. Mary Anne Townsend, widow of Robert Cornell Townsend, and her object is to have Mr. Miller, as administrator, turn over to her one-third of the proceeds of the sale of Mr. Townsend's place at Huntington Bay, Long Island.

It is not more than two years ago that Robert Cornell Townsend was one of the best known club and society men in New York. He was a scion of the old, wealthy and proud Townsend family of Flushing and New York, with which District-Attorney Delancey Nicoll and Robert Townsend, one of his assistants, are connected by blood. The Hon. Townsend, who so long represented the lower end of Long Island in Congress, was in his time the head of the family.

Born to wealth, Robert Cornell Townsend had before him a life of leisure and luxury and in his early manhood he fully enjoyed both. His first adventure that brought him forward and made him famous in society was his accompanying James Gordon Bennet on the first voyage across the ocean on the yacht Henrietta. On his return he made his home principally at the Union Club, where his dinners and other entertainments became famous. Mr. Townsend had always a taste for athletics and most heartily enjoyed a good rattling set-to with the gloves. In 1885, instead of going to Newport, Long Branch or some other of the fashionable watering places, he went down to Huntington Bay and put up for the summer at a hotel kept there by "Bill" Clarke, a once famous pugilist and old-time sport of Brooklyn.

Among the servants was Miss Mary Ann Murphy, only a short time in the United States. Miss Murphy was above the ordinary "greenhorn" girl. She had a dignified appearance, possessed much natural intelligence and was, if not accomplished, fairly educated. Her abilities as a cook were of high order and drew Mr. Townsend's special attention. From praising Miss Murphy's cooking Mr. Townsend advanced to love for her.

At first Miss Murphy was doubtful about Mr. Townsend's intentions, and as he kept troubling her she left and went to New York. But absence only increased Mr. Townsend's ardor and he wrote her many passionate appeals to return and become his wife. To prove his sincerity he called at the residence of Father Crowley, the Catholic priest of Huntington, and asked him to procure a dispensation such as is required in the Catholic Church when a Catholic marries a person of another faith. The dispensation was procured from Bishop Loughlin, and on Christmas eve, December 24, 1886, Father Crowley united in the holy bonds of wedlock Robert Cornell Townsend and Mary Anne Murphy.

Mr. Townsend's friends consulted lawyers to see if the marriage could not be annulled, but the circumstances were against the hope.

Mr. Townsend continued to reside at home but spent the greater part of the time in the village, much to the delight and enjoyment of that class of persons who lounge away their time around the hotels and bar-rooms of a country town. His wife made kindly and strenuous efforts to reform Mr. Townsend's drinking habits and might have succeeded if the idle fellows had only kept away.

In the early part of 1888 Mr. Townsend became sick. One day Schuyler Warren went down from the city with some friends. Mrs. Townsend says there was much drink consumed and next day Mr. Warren went back to New York and returned that evening with a lawyer. They had a will, which was signed that night. On May 23, 1888, Mr. Townsend died. Mr. Warren and others hastened down to New York and demanded possession of everything. On advice Mrs. Townsend had locked up the rooms where the deceased kept his papers, valuables and money.

Mr. Warren, the day after the funeral, produced the will, which appointed him executor, and said all the property of the deceased was in his possession from the moment Mr. Townsend died. He then, under threat, forced the widow to leave. The will was offered for probate at Riverhead before Surrogate Tuttle, of Suffolk County. Mrs. Townsend received a notice from the Surrogate's office on June 11. She says she was told by her lawyer, a resident of Suffolk County, that it was not necessary for her to appear, as nothing would be done.

The will left Mrs. Townsend the possession and use, during her lifetime, of one-third of the real estate in lieu of dower. As Mr. Townsend was known to be possessed of over $70,000 in stocks, bonds and money in bank as well as the real estate, Mrs. Townsend intended to contest the will on the ground that the deceased was not master of his actions when the will was signed. She had several witnesses to testify that the deceased was too much overcome by liquor to know what he was about, and that also when he subsequently became sober he repudiated the will altogether and declared he had do recollection of having made or signed any will. Mrs. Townsend received another notice to appear in the Surrogate's Court, but she found that her lawyer was away in New York.

She sent a telegram to the Surrogate stating that fact and requesting that the case be adjourned. But it appears from the records that the will was admitted to probate that day. Mrs. Townsend had no knowledge of this for a year afterwards.

Mr. Townsend has been dead over three years, but Mrs. Townsend has only received $100.

"Although," says Mr. Hoyt, "Mrs. Townsend never really had her day in court, I fear it is too late now to try and open the probate of the will. Had it been contested at the start, there is no doubt whatever that that it would have been rejected. The effect of this would be that Mr. Townsend died intestate and Mrs. Townsend would have come in for her full widow's dower, which would include her share of the stocks, bonds and money, as well as of the real estate. I have notified Mr. Miller to turn over to her the third of the proceeds of the sale of the real estate and if he does not do so we will bring suit.

A WILD LOCOMOTIVE.

Switched Just in Time to Prevent Collision With an Express.

BLAIRSTOWN, Pa., Nov. 2.—The wild run of John I. Blair's locomotive Saturday created intense excitement. The truant had been standing on the main track here, and was run into by a freight train. The throttle was thrown wide open. A passenger train on the New York, Susquehanna & Western road for New York was almost due, and every one expected a collision on the two tracks which are used jointly by the two roads, but by good fortune the engine reached the Poughkeepsie road crossing near Columbia and was switched on to that road two minutes before the Susquehanna train came along.

The switch was turned half a minute before the engine reached it, otherwise, nothing would have saved the passenger train. The engine dashed across the bridge in Portland at the rate of seventy miles an hour. Steam began failing on the grade west of there, the engine slackened its speed, and James Nealey, at the risk of his life, jumped on the tender and stopped it. The run from Blairstown to Portland, ten miles, was made in eight minutes. Thirteen miles was covered in as many minutes.

BEVERLY FLAME SWEPT.

A Disastrous Fire Which Did Over $200,000 Damage.

BEVERLY, Mass., Nov. 2.—Beverly was visited yesterday by a $200,000 fire. The fire was discovered about 2:15 p. m. in Allen's box factory on Revere street. The building was set on poles over the Danvers River. Owing to the inflammable contents of the factory, and the wind which prevailed, the factory was one sheet of flames before the fire department reached the scene.

Chief Engineer Goodhue summoned the whole department. Marblehead was called on for aid. Steamers from Salem and Peabody also responded.

The detailed losses follow:

Woodbury Bros., $95,000, insured for $80,000; Geo. H. Allen, loss, $25,000, insured $17,000; Roundy House, $2,000, insured $1,800; Salem Savings Bank, loss $1,000, insurance $1,600; Woodbury Bros., loss on contents of their building $5,000; Boston & Maine Railroad loss on car sheds and freight house, $2,000, on cars, $15,000; Pullman Company, loss $18,000; Morgan & Gray, loss $1,300, insurance $1,800; Delia Ober and others, loss on houses $22,500.

The fire is supposed to have been of incendiary origin.

MEXICO AND RECIPROCITY.

The Congress of That Country in Favor of the Scheme.

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 2.—Thomas Ryan, United States Minister to Mexico is at the Grand Pacific Hotel enroute to Washington, where he will report to the President and Secretary Blaine the sentiments of the Mexican Government on reciprocity and the results of the conferences on the subject so far held.

"Mexico is enthusiastically in favor of reciprocity with this Government, and it is the ardent wish of the officials of the Republic to bring it about," said Mr. Ryan. "The Mexican Congress, now in session favors the scheme to a man, and all are taking the keenest interest in formulating plans for the development of it. Before I left the City of Mexico, President Diaz expressed himself on the subject, and was sincere in wishing for an increase in the excellent good will and commercial relations already existing between the two republics."

Sir Edwin Arnold was given a dinner and reception at the Lotos Club, New York, Saturday night. Many prominent men were present.

The Albany "Evening Union" and the Albany "Times" will be consolidated soon after election, and the new publication will be issued as the "Times-Union."

Prominent Saratogians and others propose to establish a summer colony at Saratoga Lake and are negotiating for 50 acres of land on the Van Beuschooten place a picturesque bluff near John Riley's. The erection of cottages will be began in the spring.

CHILIAN BRUTALITY

Sailors Lassoed and Dragged in the Street.

CAPTAIN SCHLEY'S REPORT.

One of the Baltimore's Men Bitten and Several Clubbed With Muskets.

POLICEMEN WERE IN THE FIGHT.

While Taking the Sailors to Prison They Struck Them Repeatedly.

The Men Examined in Secret Vengeful Fury of the Chilian Mob—The Report Will Have an Important Bearing Upon the Diplomatic Relations—The Case Looking Blacker Than Ever—How the Matter is Regarded in London—One Journal Says Minister Egan is Responsible For the Trouble.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.—A cipher dispatch was received from Captain Schley of the Baltimore late yesterday afternoon.

It was at once written out, and proved to be the official report of the murderous assault upon United States sailors in the streets of Valparaiso.

Following is the dispatch:

"VALPARAISO, Oct. 31, 1891.

"Secretary of the Navy:

"Petty Officer Johnson, in whose arms Riggan was killed, declares that the act was done by the police guards. Apprentice Williams reports that he was arrested by a mounted policeman, who placed catgut nippers around his wrist and started his horse into a gallop, throwing him down. After that the policeman walked his horse. Coal-heaver McWilliams was arrested and taken to prison with catgut nippers around his wrists and a lasso around his neck. He was bitten in the arm after arrest.

Coal heaver Quigley while trying to effect escape from the mob was struck with a sword by a police officer. Apprentice Talbot was arrested, catgut nippers was placed around his wrists, and on his way to prison he was struck repeatedly by police. Petty officer Hamilton, dangerously wounded and unconscious, was dragged to prison. One of my people trying to make him comfortable was threatened with the butt of a musket and made to desist. My men in prison were examined secretly, although I sent an officer to the court to request authority to allow his presence.

"The request was denied on account of the proceedings being secret. Before discharge men were required to sign a paper, but before doing it Bineham asked court officials the meaning of the paper. He was informed that it was a mere form stating that the signer was not engaged in the trouble. Two are dead; three are dangerously wounded and about fifteen are slightly injured. Surgeons believe the wounded out of danger.

"(Signed) SCHLEY."

COMMENTS IN LONDON.

Egan Blamed—If There Were War Chili Would Regret It.

LONDON, Nov. 2.—The relations between the United States and Chili continue to form the principal subject of public interest and gossip. The "Observer" yesterdry contained a long leader, reviewing the history of the quarrel, and contrasting the Valparaisa fight with the New Orleans massacre, saying that in view of the course taken by the American government in response to Italy's protest and demands, it is monstrously inconsistent for the Washington authorities to issue a threat against Chili—a threat made, too, at a time when, by every consideration of international courtesy and humanity, Chili is entitled to the exercise of forbearance on the part of other nations, and especially of the strongest of American republics.

The article adds that the action of America is so extraordinary that if it were taken by any other nation than the one loudest in its declarations of a desire for world-wide peace and good will, we should be obliged to conclude unhesitatingly that it was taken in order to force a quarrel upon a welcome pretext. The "Observer" attributes the unfortunate coolness between the two countries to Mr. Egan, "whose selection to represent the United States at any foreign seat of government was, considering his antecedents, an insult and a departure from the code of common propriety among nations."

The "Sunday Times" says: "Our American cousins are not partial to warfare, but when war is begun they know how to carry it through. It is to be hoped that they will be able to settle their present quarrel with Chili on a basis of 'peace with honor.' Any other termination of the affair would be deeply regrettable. The war, if war proves inevitable, will be a very one-sided affair. It is hardly enough to say that Chili would have reason to regret an entrance into such a conflict. The fact is that such a war would mean the practical extinction of Chili, which could not avoid being crippled in such a degree as to forever thereafter to exist only on the sufferance of the great Republic of the North."

Gold at Kansas City.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Nov. 2.—Gold was found on the banks of the Missouri here, Saturday, at a depth of 117 feet. The discovery was made by borings that are being put down to find the location of rock under which to tunnel the Missouri river. The gold is rich and is found in great quantities on both sides of the river. Several tons of the sand will be taken out at once.

Filing on Indemnity Land.

ASHLAND, Wis., Nov. 2.—Excitement grows intense as the date for filing on Omaha indemnity land approaches. Whole colonies of filers arrive on every train. Large numbers have gone on to Iron River, where they will squat on land and take their chances on the squatters' rights giving them ultimate possession of it.

Murderer and Suicide.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—William Miller, the murderer of Minnie Rauhauser, killed himself at Englewood, N. J., a few hours after the slaying of the girl. He had first tried to kill himself with a knife and then shot himself.

TEN THOUSAND DEAD.

Many More Killed in the Japan Earthquake Than at First Supposed.

LONDON, Nov. 2.—Additional advices from Japan confirm the news that there have been many wrecks about the Island of Hondo as one of the consequences of the earthquake.

The severance of telegraphic communication with the death-visited districts continues to prevent accurate details being gathered as to the extent of the calamity.

Over two thousand persons were killed and about eighteen thousand houses were destroyed in the province of Nagoya, on the Island of Hondo, the capital of which is Nogoya, a city of one hundred and thirty thousand inhabitants.

In addition to this five thousand houses were destroyed and five thousand persons were killed by the earthquake at Gifu.

The towns of Kano and Kasamatsu were also destroyed, together with fifty miles of railroad.

It is presumed that the fire, which started among the wrecked buildings at Nagoya, may have had much to do with the great loss of life.

As the loss of life at Kano and at Kasamatsu is not mentioned, and as these towns are said to have been destroyed, it is estimated here that the total loss of life may eventually be shown to be over ten thousand.

Gloucester's Ship Losses.

GLOUCESTER, Mass., Nov. 2.—The number of vessels lost from this port during the year just closed was 17, with an aggregate tonnage of 1,493 tons, representing the value of $89,000, on which there was an insurance of $78,900. The lives lost foot up 78, against 86 last year. The total number of vessels of every description owned in this district, 481; aggregate tonnage, 32,242 tons, an increase of 15 vessels and 1,594 tons.

QUIET AT BRICEVILLE.

Governor Buchanan Offers a Reward of $25 for Each Convict Captured.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 2.—Everything is quiet at Coal Creek, and nothing is being done with the exception of the arrest of an occasional convict. Governor Buchanan and Superintendent Waller arrived last evening. The Governor will offer a large reward for the arrest and conviction of the leaders of the mob, and also, liberal rewards for the arrest and conviction of all participants in the riot, the burning of the stockade and the release of the convicts Friday night. The guards at Oliver Springs have been strongly reinforced, and a sharp watch is kept to avoid attack.

The Governor last night issued the following proclamation:

"Whereas, It is provided by Section 10, Chapter 204 of the Acts of 1889, that the lessees of the penitentiary, on the escape of any convict, shall be liable to pay such reward as the Governor may offer, not to exceed $25 for each convict, and all the expenses otherwise incurred (including advertising) in the capture and delivery of such prisoners to the State and its officers; now, therefore, I, John P. Buchanan, Governor of the State of Tennessee, do hereby offer a reward of $25 for each convict recently escaped from the branch prisons in Anderson County and their delivery to the warden of the main prison at Nashville, which sum shall be paid as required by law by said lessees.

"In witness thereof the great seal of the State is affixed.

"(Signed) JOHN P. BUCHANAN."

CHATANOOGA, Tenn., Nov. 2.—No further outbreaks have occurred at Briceville and the mines are all working full time. The convicts are hiding in the mountains of Kentucky. The prison officials report that about 350 convicts have been released.

Governor Buchanan has ordered the militia to be ready for duty at a moment's notice. There is much uneasiness at Oliver Springs, Tracy City and Inman, where convicts are employed, over a rumor that the miners throughout the State have organized with a view to liberate all convicts working at these places.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

Minnesota was visited by a blizzard Saturday.

The President and Mrs. Harrison gave a special reception Saturday afternoon to the delegates to the Women's Missionary Society Convention.

Samuel Moore, colored, who killed Henry Jandorf in the District jail, Washington, on September 24, has been sentenced to be hanged on Friday, January 15, 1892.

THE MAVERICK FAILS

One of Boston's Principal Banks Closed.

LIABILITIES NINE MILLIONS.

The Suicide of "Nervy" Evans Partly Responsible for the Crash.

His Connection With Asa P. Potter, President of the Bank, First Caused Alarm and the Country Banks Commenced to Draw Out Their Deposits—Death of an Examiner—No Other Bank Thought to Be Involved.

BOSTON, Nov. 2.—Intense excitement was created late yesterday afternoon when it became known that the Maverick National Bank, one of the richest and most powerful and best-known of all the financial institutions in New England, had been closed by the bank examiner at the instance of the Boston Clearing House.

It is true, that for a few days mutterings had been heard regarding the bank's condition but they were regarded as baseless rumors following naturally in the wake of the recent financial sensations of which the suicide of Irving A. Evans was one. The crash came in a shape that could not be doubted as follows:

"The National Bank Examiner, acting under the instructions of the Comptroller of the Currency, has closed the Maverick National Bank. The Clearing House Committee of the Boston Banks has called a meeting of the members of the Clearing House to take action upon a proposition recommended by the committee that all the banks composing the association unite in making advances in cash to the depositors in the Maverick Bank.

"The object of making these advances is to relieve the temporary embarrassment of the depositors.

"P. Beal, Franklin Haven, Jr., Albert Newman, Phinees and Moses Williams, Clearing House Committee."

Death of the Examiner.

As if to pile sensation upon sensation the news came at 8 o'clock that J. W. Magruder, one of the two bank examiners, had died at his residence in this city.

In a statement published on October 6 the bank's capital was given at $400,000, its surplus $800,000, its undivided profits $218,851, and its expenses and taxes paid $52,531.

Ever since the suicide of Irving A. Evans there have been unpleasant rumors afloat concerning the connection between Mr. Asa P. Potter, president of the Maverick, and the deceased broker. Several reports have been current and all of them contradictory.

It was said that Evans was heavily indebted to Mr. Potter and again it was said it was the other way and that Potter was heavily indebted to Evans. This was on a certain joint account, through which these gentlemen had been speculating.

It was said, in the newspapers that Mr. Potter's liability to meet his share of Mr. Evans' losses caused the latter to commit suicide.

Now this story is said to be one cause of the present difficulty, the country banks hearing it and concluding to draw out their accounts involved with Irving A. Evans, who had in a fit of desperation taken his own life.

The influence of this story soon became manifest. As is well known, a large part of the Maverick's deposits is from country banks throughout New England and elsewhere in the United States.

These banks are very sensitive, and the story of extensive speculation had the effect of frightening them. They commenced to withdraw their accounts and the drain which began last Wednesday became so serious that Mr. Potter was obliged to call to his aid Mr. George F. Baker, president of the First National Bank of New York, and several other capitalists of that city who had served him in a similar trying time eight years ago.

In the meantime the assistant examiner had been at work in response to a request from the Clearing House Committee, which had become alarmed at the serious aspect of affairs.

What the result of the examination showed is not known, but it is supposed that there were such heavy drains through the mails Saturday morning that it was thought best for all concerned to close the bank.

The bank held at the time of its last quarterly statement in October four and a half millions of deposits from smaller concerns.

The object of the action of the Clearance House Committee is to furnish the funds which these banks will need in their daily business.

Big Liabilities.

It is estimated that the Maverick Bank owes $4,000,000 to depositors and nearly $6,000,000 to other banks. Mr. Potter has maintained a bold front up to yesterday, and has given intimate friends to understand that he could rely for any necessary assistance on New York capital, presumably the Standard Oil people, who, it is rumored, lent him a helping hand once before.

It is stated that Mr. Potter's personal liabilities to the Evans estate amounts to over $700,000, though Mr. Potter claims that he was in no way indebted to Mr. Irving at the time of his death and he can satisfactorily account for the numerous checks bearing his indorsement that are now in the possession of the attorneys of the Evans estate.

Exportation of Wheat Prohibited.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 2.—The Russian government has assigned a further sum of thirty-two millions of roubles for the relief of the famine districts. A ukase was issued yesterday prohibiting the export of wheat, unless the wheat has been in the exporting vessels for three days.

CORRUPTION IS ALLEGED.

Allegheny City's Mayor and a Subordinate Accused by Accountants.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Nov. 2.—As a result of the labors of the sub-auditing committee of Allegheny Councils, Mayor Wyman and Chief of the Department of Public Safety John R. Murphy are charged with having levied blackmail upon the proprietors of several gambling places; with granting unlawful privileges to the owners of a wheel of fortune for a cash consideration; with having settled a case for $200; with extorting money from prisoners; with taking diamonds and other jewelry from the person of a prisoner and failing to return them; with illegally collecting and appropriating to their own use witness fees in an amount exceeding $1,500; with failing to account to the city for more than $600 vehicle license fees; with falsifying the public records; with compromising court cases contrary to law, and many more equally serious offences.

Among other things the auditors report as follows:

"We herewith submit a tabulation which shows cases wherein persons arrested on view have been taxed, and amounts collected from them for witness fees when the records show that a single witness was called upon to testify; also cases wherein officers testified and the fees for same collected and not returned to the city as they properly should be; and also, where a number of defendants appear in the case the fees for each witness have been taxed up to each individual defendant, thus extorting cumulative fees in utter disregard to State statutes; also concerning court costs, jail and workhouse committments, that out of $2,331.08 collected, there is a balance unaccounted for of $1,422.78. One singular feature connected with the witness fee receipt book in present use is the fact that of 3,188 witnesses supposed to have testified, the meagre number of fifty two names appear in the column devoted to the names of witnesses, while the insignificant number of twenty-five witnesses collected and signed for the fees paid them.

"One of the greatest points developed during this examination of the Mayor's books that we wish to note particularly, is the vicious, if not to say criminally careless, manner in which the original docket is kept. The entries therein made are by lead pencil, easily erased, and the records falsified thereby, and the evidence not wanting to show that a gum eraser is one of the chief implements in use in that office."

The auditors are not yet through their investigations, and their final report will be submitted to the auditing committee, by whom it will be brought before the Councils with a recommendation that legal proceedings be instituted promptly.

HEALY ELUCIDATES.

He Calls the Parnellites Dynamiters and Cowards.

LONDON, Nov. 2.—In an address at Longford yesterday, Timothy Healy was more vituperative than ever. He accused the Parnellites of cowardice. The Parnellites, he said, talked of English dictation and resorted to dynamite. Healy imputed to the Parnellites the dynamite explosion which took place in Glasgow some time ago, creating great excitement. He condemned what he called "the alliance of the Parnellites with Mrs O'Shea," who had written to Paris locking up the fund raised for the evicted tenants.

He said he was astonished that they should unite with an English prostitute, whose honor Harrison, a member of Parliament, had attempted to vindicate. Healy said he did not refer to the unhappy woman (meaning Parnell's sister), whom the Dublin wire-pullers had induced to write to Paris.

Healy advised unity in combating the landlords. At present, he said, the Parnellites tried to make up for brains with blackthorns.

The Factions Fight Again.

CORK, Nov. 2.—The two factions had a fierce struggle yesterday outside of Cork, where there were no police to interfere. The Parnellites came out ahead. In the struggle houses were wrecked and many persons were injured, and a good deal of blood shed, although no fatalities are reported. William Redmond announced at a meeting that he had challenged Dr. Tanner to fight, but that the doctor had declined.

Smokeless Powder in Field Guns.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.—The ordnance division of the War Department has recently made tests of smokeless powder with field guns and obtained very satisfactory results. The quantity of smokeless powder used—a half charge—gave the same velocity as double the amount of black or ordinary powder, while a full charge of smokeless powder gave a velocity of 2,050 feet per second, with perfect safety to the gun, which is 25 per cent. more than can be obtained with the same quantity of ordinary powder.

The Militia's Condition.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.—Inspector General J. C. Breckinridge in his annual report to the Secretary of War says that the work of inspecting the National Guard in encampment was never so completely accomplished as during this past year. The Inspector-General suggests the advisability of holding at Chicago, during the Columbia Exposition, an encampment of the militia forces of the nation and collecting there as many regulars as possible. He says we have no cause to be ashamed of our army.

PENNSYLVANIA BRIEFS.

John Schauen has assigned at Lancaster.

Lizzie Dunn, aged 14, was attacked by an Italian at Hazleton, but was rescued before injured. The man escaped.

Senator Quay has instructed his counsel, Mr. Shapley, to bring suit against Jacob Kerr, chairman of the Democratic State Committee, for $100,000 damages for libel and conspiracy.

THE DAILY PRESS.

W. L. & A. L. FORCE, Publishers and Proprietors.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - Managing Editor.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—The City Common Council will meet to-night.

—The Olympia will be open for bowling all day to-morrow.

—William Madden was fined $10 for intoxication this morning.

—A regular meeting of the Crescent League will be held on Wednesday evening.

—No paper will be issued from this office to-morrow, because of the legal holiday.

—Six persons united with the Congregational church at the Communion service yesterday.

—Thomas Dowd is to come up before the Mayor for drunkenness and disorderly conduct, to-night.

—The regular monthly meeting of the McAll Auxiliary will be held at the library to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

—Easter lodge Knights of Honor, will hold a regular meeting this evening in its rooms in the Music Hall building.

—The scarlet-coated huntsmen of the Essex County Hounds will enjoy a run across country from Fanwood Nov. 7.

—Alert hose company will turn out to-morrow morning at 10:30 to try the 4-way hydrant at Madison avenue and Third street.

—A. W. Waldron, jr., for so many years with C. Scheplin & Co., has entered into the livery business with councilman D. S. Roberts.

—The bowling section of the Y. M. C. A. will meet at the Olympia alleys to-morrow evening. Full information will be given by C. C. Dilts, or at the association rooms.

—Williams's Crescent pharmacy will remove this week from corner of Park avenue and Fourth street, to the Scheplin building, corner of Front and Grove streets.

—The regular monthly meeting of the Y's will be held to-morrow afternoon, at 4 o'clock, in the rooms, corner of Peace street and North avenue. All members are urged to be present.

—The boys who were arrested on East Front street last week for stoning a playmate had a hearing before justice Nash this afternoon. The court censured them severely and suspended sentence.

—The boy who was arrested in the act of hiding away his own gate, Saturday night, so that the Hallowe'en fiends would n't confiscate it, succeeded in explaining matters, and was discharged.

—The firemen of North Plainfield must be quiet workers. A gentleman who resides very near the house destroyed Saturday night, knew nothing about it until the next morning, when he discovered the ruins.

—Levi Bird of North Plainfield shipped from his mother's farm in the valley to Elizabeth, this afternoon, a chestnut pole 110 feet tall, for the Central railroad company's use. It is the tallest pole ever seen in Plainfield.

—The latest crop bulletin of the New Jersey State board of agriculture says: "The farmers of Union county are largely engaged in raising milk and vegetables, and the average price has been low and labor and taxes high. In my judgment, taking 100 as a prosperous year, the per cent. will not be more than 80."

—Yesterday afternoon at 5 o'clock locomotive sparks set fire to the grass in the Potter Press works yard, and from thence spread to a pile of lumber. After making an effort to notify the watchman in the office, Fritz Frazee and Billy Blimm climbed the fence and after a hard fight saved the buildings from catching.

—The sale of tickets for the entertainment which the Four Leaf Clover will give Nov. 17 has already begun in dead earnest, and as the number to be sold will of necessity be limited to the capacity of the Holy Cross parish building it behooves everybody to improve the fleeting hours and secure seats in advance.

—The Chautauqua Circle of the Congregational church will meet to-morrow evening at 8 o'clock in the church parlors. Visitors and new members are always welcome. The programme is to be as follows; Roll call, to be answered by quotations on colonial New Jersey; questions on American history; reading, Bacon's Rebellion; reading, from the Knickerbocker history of New York; the compact signed on board the Mayflower; questions on the lesson in social institutions of the United States. Informal talks on the same, by the class.

Excellent Work Among Plainfield Men.

Another largely attended men's meeting was held yesterday afternoon in the M. E. church. The speaker, S. H. Hadley, superintendent of the McAuley mission at 316 Water street, related the remarkable story of his own conversion and illustrated by the grand results of the mission work of New York city the power of Christ to save and keep the drunkard and outcast.

Master Howard Case sang a beautiful solo entitled "Cling to the Crucified".

Men who had requested prayers during the meeting were conversed with at the close of the service.

The market is flooded with deceptions under the name of Root Beer. Why should you experiment on such goods when the genuine Hires's Root Beer can be had? It is known to be a safe, delicious, and healthful temperance drink.

BURNED DOWN BEFORE THEIR EYES.

The Borough Developes a Fire-Bug, and Finds Itself Without Adequate Protection.

The boroughites of North Plainfield think they have a fire-bug within their borders. Their cause for such belief is the burning of a house on Mountain avenue, at the head of Westervelt, at 10:40 last Saturday night. The house was owned by Mulford Cole, and was quite a large, French-roofed building. It had been vacant for some time, but Mrs. David Jones was to move into it next month.

The fire was first seen by George Leland, who was on his way home from a late train. He gave the alarm, and Warren engine company turned out promptly. There was a plenty of time to save the property from destruction, but after all the available hose had been stretched the firemen lacked 540 feet of reaching the flames. Word was sent to Plainfield, for more hose, and chief Doane very kindly responded with help, but too late to be of any service. The house burned down before the firemen's eyes, and when they had a serviceable stream ready there was nothing but a heap of fallen blazing timbers to play upon.

The reason for the department being so crippled was because the water had not yet been turned into all the mains of the Supply company, and the nearest hydrant in service was far away from the fire.

The flames were first seen issuing from underneath the porch, and it is thought that the house was set afire at that point.

RUTGERS BEAT THE LEALS.

But 'Twas a Close Contest, and the Victory Was a Hard-Fought One.

A fine game of foot-ball was played on the Crescent League grounds Saturday afternoon, when the Leal school team and the team from the Rutgers College grammar school at New Brunswick battled for the supremacy. Both teams played an excellent game, and the contest was close and exciting. Rutgers finally won by the score of 9 to 6. Leal did some splendid running, and Rutgers did great tackling. The audience was large, and Leal's profits were $200. A number of Rutgers men were disabled, and substitutes had to be played. To-morrow afternoon, at 3 o'clock, the Leals will play against the Bicycle club team, on the Crescent grounds. The admission will be 15 cents.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

The Hon. J. R. McPherson, United States Senator, has procured a re-issue of pension for the borough veteran, F. M. Whitely.

The normal Bible class which usually meets every Monday evening, in the First Baptist church, will omit its regular meeting this week.

At 3 o'clock this afternoon there was a slight improvement in the condition of J. Linn Edsall, of Sandford avenue, son of Mr. and Mrs. Seeley Edsall.

Miss Victoria Hand of this city was married in Scotch Plains, Saturday, to Frederick I. Smith of Brooklyn. The Rev. J. H. Parks, D. D., officiated.

Rowland Cox, jr., who was injured in a game of foot-ball two weeks ago, is still confined to the house. The injury is to his knee-cap, which was knocked out of place. He will not be able to engage in active sports again this season.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. William VanArsdale, Miss Rachel Mair, William D. Murray, president of the Young Men's Christian association, Charles B. Brown, Joseph A. Goodhue, and several other Christian workers of Plainfield, will make a tour of the night missions in New York city this evening, under the guidance of the superintendent of one of the down-town missions.

Walter Vroom Adams, second son of Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Adams, 43 Madison avenue, died early yesterday morning of heart disease. He was a bright little fellow, nearly six years old. He had recently passed through sickness of scarletina, which left him with rheumatism; then followed heart trouble. He was at Sunday-school and church a week ago yesterday, with his parents. Funeral services will be held Wednesday afternoon at 1 o'clock, from his parent's residence. Interment will be made at Mt. Pleasant cemetery at Newark. This is the first death in the family. The bereaved parents have the sympathy of a host of friends.

Gunners Come to Grief.

Already, gunning accidents are being reported. This morning James Babbitt had his arm injured by a premature discharge; and George Staats, a lad living on East Third street, had his face badly burned by powder.

The injury to James Babbitt is a very serious but not fatal one. It appears that someone accidentally fired a gun back of him, and the entire charge of shot entered his arm. The worst injury is to his elbow. He is being cared for at the Muhlenberg Hospital.

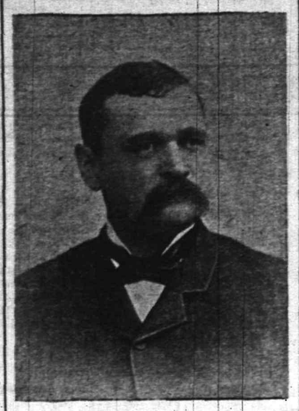
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

Candidate Flower Again.

Here's another picture of Sidney Elmer Flower who has been nominated by the Democrats of this district for the assembly.



Mr. Flower has conducted his canvass in such an honorable, fair and truthful manner, that even his political enemies find nothing but praise for him. Should he be elected his administration, like his private business life, will be clean, fearless, and honest. He will be controlled by no clique or faction, but will work and vote with but one object in view, and that for the best interest of his district.

A Young Plainfielder Will Carry God's Word Into Darkest Africa.

William P. Spangenberg of Netherwood, the elder son of Councilman Leonard Spangenberg, has decided to lay aside all worldly ambition and selfish aims, and devote his life to the service of the Lord. He will sail on the steamer "Majestic", of the White Star line, Wednesday morning, for Liverpool, from whence he will start on a journey to Freetown, Africa. He with eight others who have joined what is known as the "Kansas movement"—sending forth young men in foreign mission work—will establish a missionary station at Marampa, Africa, 75 miles inland, to be followed by other stations forming a chain into the dark interior. Mr. Spangenberg will be a month reaching his destination. His stay will be indefinite. The work of these young missionaries is purely undenominational.

Elston's Record Was Against Him.

As was stated in these columns Saturday, Charles Elston, who had pleaded guilty to robbing O. M. Dunham's store on Front street, was sentenced to State prison for a term of five years.

Counsel for Elston pleaded for a suspension of sentence, promising that the prisoner would leave the State. It was shown, however, that Elston had been in the State reform school, and in State prison, having been sentenced from Middlesex county for five years, but was pardoned before the expiration of his term. With this record against him, Judge McCormick said the court would be doing an injustice by suspending sentence.

A Deserted Wife's Appeal.

Mrs. John B. Gable writes to THE PRESS as follows:

"I have sewing to do, but I would like some more, as I must support my three children and myself. Their father does not send his children one cent, so I have taken care of them 6 months, and work hard for my little ones, and hope to get some more sewing to do. In the spring I will get a first-class upholsterer from New York and carry the upholstering business on as before; will make awnings and shades, and all other things in the upholstery line."

Notes of the Boys' Club.

The average attendance at the club last week was 61 each evening. The largest was 85, and the smallest 50. Sixteen boys joined during the past month, making the total membership of the club 407.

The Edwards Zouaves will meet for drill Wednesday evening. A full attendance is desired.

At the entertainment next Monday evening Dexter O. Tiffany will address the boys.

Two Years for the Hoodoo Doctor.

Harry Devine, the colored man known as the "Hoodoo doctor", and who was arrested in this city for stealing jewelry from a house in which he had gone to sell medicine, was sentenced to State prison for two years, at Elizabeth Saturday.

Prince of Wales' Residence Burned.

LONDON, Nov. 2.—Sandringham Hall the residence of the Prince of Wales was partly destroyed by fire yesterday. The second and third floor, the roof and much of the valuable furniture were destroyed, and the rooms below greatly damaged by water before the fire was extinguished. The damage amounts to twenty thousand pounds. A spark from a heating flue appears to have caused the fire.

Annexation an Issue.

MONTREAL, Nov. 2.—Mr. Mercier's English organ, the Quebec "Telegraph," says that the question of political union with the United States will be an important issue in many of the coming bye elections in the province of Quebec.

MR. KYTE'S SIDE OF THE STORY.

But He Steers Clear of the Vital Charges Against Him.

The following correspondence between Mr. Burr of the Bicycle club and Mr. Kyte, speaks for itself so far as it goes, but the latter's letter makes no reply to Mr. Sayre's charges that the roadway was impassable and he was compelled to take to the sidewalk, and that others were permitted to do so, before and after Mr. Sayre did, without being arrested.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Oct. 29, 1891.

Hon. George Kyte, Fanwood, N. J.

DEAR SIR:—As you are aware, the newspapers of this district are publishing a communication from two wheelmen, which is intended to damage you politically. It may be what it sounds like "a good enough Morgan until after the election"; or it is possible you may merit their anathemas. If the latter is the case, you have fallen a long way from the grace which was yours, when years ago, through your personal exertion and your strong right arm, the crossing on the famous Fanwood sidewalk near your house was made rideable. I do not know the complaining wheelmen personally but I do know you, and as I have known you to be a stanch friend of wheelmen ever since the wheels began to "go round" I feel sure there must be something to be said from your side of the case. It is possible that you may not think the matter worthy consideration, but this view, I think, would be a mistake. The bicycle is no longer looked upon as a toy, nor is its use considered to be mere idle sport. Many good and solid citizens, including representatives of all the professions (from editorial down) are riders of the wheel. In fact the cycling contingent is such a large one that we may be compelled to adopt as our political shibboleth the cry "Put none but wheelman on guard." An early reply will be appreciated.

Yours very truly,

THOS. S. BURR.

FANWOOD, N. J., Oct. 31, 1891.

Thos. S. Burr, Esq.

DEAR SIR:—In reply to yours of the 29th I can only say I have no excuse to offer for my part in the enforcement of our township ordinance against bicycle riding on the sidewalks. An ordinance was passed in July last prohibiting riding upon the sidewalks of the township and which I very strongly advocated. Mr. Sayre wilfully, persistently and knowingly violated that ordinance, thereby bringing ridicule upon the authorities and the law. Shortly after the passage of the ordinance Mr. Sayre offered a petition to our Township Committee asking that the fines realized from the enforcement of the ordinance be used in improving the road from Fanwood to Scotch Plains, and it seems strange that he should feel so hurt because he was the first to be punished for its violation. By Mr. Sayre's continual violation of the law and the non-enforcement of its provisions, complaints were constantly being made to myself, and I believe to my fellow-committeemen, of the danger and annoyance from bicycle riders on the sidewalk. It is to be hoped that no wheelmen in this district will be deterred from voting for me simply because Mr. Sayre was not allowed to violate a township ordinance and a State law at will. I may add that as long as I remain a township officer I propose to enforce the township ordinances against those who knowingly violate them. Thanking you for your kindly letter on the subject, I remain,

Yours very truly,

GEORGE KYTE.

Fast Time on the Michigan Central.

DETROIT, Mich., Nov. 2.—The fastest run on record from Chicago to Detroit was made yesterday on the Michigan Central road. The train, consisting of four Wagner vestibule cars, bearing the Boston Commercial Club, left Chicago at 10:10 a. m. and arrived at Detroit at 4:20 p. m., covering the distance, 246 miles in less than six hours, including 27 minutes consumed in stops. The average rate was 48 miles an hour.

MINISTER CARTER DEAD.

As Hawaii's Envoy He Promulgated the Treaty With This Country.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—Mr. H. A. P. Carter, Hawaiian minister to the United States, died yesterday in this city.

Mr. Carter was born in Honolulu in 1837, of American parents. He was educated in Boston and then returned to Honolulu where he engaged in business. He held almost every position of honor and trust on the islands. As Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Hawaiian Government he assisted Minister Allen, the head of the legation of Washington, in getting up the ten years' reciprocity treaty, which went into effect in 1876.

After this work he was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy Extraordinary to this government, and through his efforts the treaty of 1876 was extended another seven years from 1886. He had been sent to many of the countries of Europe for his government upon important missions.

NEW ENGLAND BREVITIES.

The Hon Daniel Wheelwright Cooch died in Melrose, Mass., yesterday.

The residence of George Scott, vice-president of the Portsmouth Brewing Company of Portsmouth, N. H., was entered yesterday and robbed of goods valued at $400.

Fire at Rockport, Mass., yesterday, destroyed the dwelling belonging to the Lowe estate, nearly ruined the Whipple homestead adjoining, and badly damaged the Seaver homestead.

Shiloh's Cough Cure

This is beyond question the most successful Cough Medicine we have ever sold; a few doses invariably cure the worst cases of Cough, Croup and Bronchitis, while its wonderful success in the cure of Consumption is without a parallel in the history of medicine. Since its first discovery it has been sold on a guarantee, a test which no other medicine can stand. If you have a cough we earnestly ask you to try it. Price 10c., 50c. and $1. If your lungs are sore, chest, or back lame, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by J. G. Miller, No. 10 East Front street, Plainfield N.J.

AND GET ONE BEFORE THEY ARE GONE! $1 39 buys a handsome Parlor Lamp, cheap at $2. You can't afford to pass us by when you are in want of a lamp, for our assortment is the most complete in town, and to say that our prices are the lowest, would be putting it mild. We have just received a fine line of Jardiniers, fancy Flower Vases, Toilet Sets, Dinner and Tea Sets, and fancy Crockery. We bought these at a closing out sale at bargain prices, so come while the assortment is good and select what you want and have them laid aside till needed; a small deposit secures them. We are in business to handle goods, and we will do it if we have to give them away; and no matter what others' prices are, ours will be under. Look at our $10 Dinner Set; it's worth $15 anywhere. Our $3 75 Tea Set sells all over for $5. Ordinary Table Crockery we lead the World on, and our prices astonish even the makers. Housefurnishings of every description, way down! Common Lamp Chimneys, all sizes, 5 cents; don't pay eight again for them. Those who do not throw money away will do well, and are invited to visit constantly, whether they wish to buy or not, that they may be posted as to the novelties and bargains coming in daily. Use 25c Royal Tooth Powder, 10c; nothing finer made. The 5 and 10-cent Store.

RID OF HIS PLAINFIELD WIFE.

Co-Respondent Russell's Testimony Sufficient to Give Octogenarian Smith a Dozen Divorces.

Referee Joseph I. McKeon of New York has rendered his decision for the plaintiff in the suit for absolute divorce of John Smith, 83, against Jennie Smith, 49. The decree is based on the violation of the marriage vow on the part of the defendant with Joseph G. Russel, a bartender.

According to the story in the New York papers, some years ago Smith married Jennie Hunt, on whose head 46 Jersey summer suns had shone. She lived in Plainfield, N. J., was good looking and an assiduous church member, as was also Mr. Smith. Mr. Smith's friends also thought that her forty-six years of maidenhood were a guarantee of her stability—in short, that old Mr. Smith was not so foolish as he would have been had he married a young girl, as old men are prone to do.

Old Mr. Smith took his bride to his home with his son, William H. Smith, who had grown up and married, the original Mrs. Smith having died years ago.

Very soon things began to be uncomfortable in the Smith household, as things are apt to when a new stepmother is introduced into a home. The latter part of last winter Mrs. Smith went to Philadelphia on a visit. There she met J. J. Russell, the handsome race follower, and they fell in love with each other. Things had become so unpleasant that when she came back to New York Mrs. Smith went to live with a friend on Jane street. Here Russell called on her and their acquaintance grew warmer. Some anonymous letters to old Mr. Smith served to widen the breach in the family.

One night old Mr. Smith's son followed his stepmamma and her friend from Tony Pastor's to a restaurant and from there to the Grand Union Hotel. There they had registered as man and wife and been assigned to one room.

The young man who was looking after his father's honor had a friend with him, and they bribed the hallboy to show them the room. Knocking on the door and saying that they wanted to fix a pipe in the bathroom Russell let them in. When Mrs. Smith saw her stepson enter the room and realized that she was trapped she was exceedingly provoked.

It all came out in the trial before Referee McKeon, and Russell himself testified to enough to get old Mr. Smith a dozen divorces. He said he followed the races and admitted his little adventures with the mature but still attractive Mrs. Smith.

Mrs. Smith and her lawyers, William E. Cook & Co., of No. 25 Chambers street, tried to keep the story out of the newspapers, but Referee McKeon's decision makes it public property.

Mr. Smith, who is worth about $100,000, is now in his eighty-third year.

THE RINK'S OWNER PROTESTS.

He Says He's Ready to Pay a License if All Other Public Hall Proprietors Do.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Will you kindly allow me space in your paper to answer the protest in Saturday's PRESS against the merry-go-round which is now situated in the Rink building on Broadway. I would say that I never yet seen anybody insulted in or around the said building since I have owned it. The manager, C. B. Martin, came from Bridgeton, N. J., where he has been a resident for several years and can furnish the best of references from the Mayor of that place, as well as from other places where he has been, for the good order which he has maintained and the early hours for which he has closed his place of amusement. He, in order to run his carousseel strict in this city, has two special policemen in attendance every night, namely—Steven R. Hope and William Mattox—who I refer the public to as to the good order kept in the place, and I have placed an electric light directly in front of the entrance so that passers-by might see that the entrance was kept clear. If, after people leave the building, they are insulted on the street, it then becomes the duty of our policemen to attend to it and who I know will, if requested to do so.

As to the mothers calling on Mr. Miner, superintendent of the Boys' Club, to try and keep their children off the walks, I would say that any parents who cannot make their children obey without appealing to a special policeman, better have a guardian appointed. And as to the license question, I would say that there has never been any license paid by either of the former owners of the Crescent Rink, or Music Hall, Reform Hall, T. A. B. Hall, Cutter's Hall, Hetfield's Hall, and the hall which the Salvation Army now occupies, and in fact no other hall or any place of indoor amusement.

I have been a citizen of Plainfield 38 years, and have always obeyed the laws, and have the uppermost respect for the law-makers, and if our worthy mayor and council would draft an ordinance compelling owners of all halls and places of indoor amusements to pay a license annually, I will be one of the first ones to conform to the law and then the citizens would be protected in front of all such places. I am paying into the city treasury between three and four hundred dollars per year in taxes and therefor would expect much courtesy and protection as the police-policeman, W. H. Miner, superintendent of the Plainfield Boys' club.

SPORT FOR THE HUNTERS.

The "Open" Season Begun, With Prospects of Excellent Sport.

The hunting season opened yesterday, Nov. 1. To be more exact, it begins today, for there is a law that prohibits gunning on Sunday, as well as fishing. Undoubtedly there were a great many rabbits and quail shot yesterday, but it is not likely that the old law that has rusted so long will be brought forth against any of those who went out to try their luck.

It usually happens, however, that there is not much gunning accomplished till election day. On that holiday, after the duties of citizenship have been attended to, the gunners are accustomed to rush out of town to the meadows and thickets in search of the game that is now to be had.

The weather is superb for gunning, and game abounds. The farmers report the quail have been very plentiful all summer and that large conveys were raised. Rabbits are also said to be abundant. A few woodcock have been flushed recently, while the smaller birds which some pot-hunters are fond of securing will be found in about the usual number.

Most interest centers, however, in the quail. While not a very large bird, the quail is very lively, and it takes good marksmanship to drop one. In New Jersey the birds do very well, because there is such a large section of underbrush and bushes for them to hide in. In the open country they are easily killed off. Every local hunter will in the fall locate his covey, and the day the law allows shooting he will be after them. With a dog he is sure to make havoc among the flock unless they have a large district of underbrush to scatter among. Few, therefore, escape to breed the next spring.

Gunners will find the quail this fall either out on the old meadows or in the bushes, according to the weather. In cold times and during the storms they hug the cover closely, and it is then difficult to find them. In the clear and warm weather they are out on the meadows or in the fields feeding, or perhaps in the more open woods. Of course, when a covey is put up in such places the chances are that several will be secured. They are always in coveys at this season. The gunner must be ready to make a quick shot on the wing, as the bird is a swift flier, and the merry hum of his wings is always startling and disconcerting to the amateur hunter. Not much can be expected without a dog. If the gunner is going to beat the birds out of the thickets alone, his only chance will be at the first sight. A dog will follow a dock or the scattered birds and guide the hunter to half of the flock probably.

In hunting rabbits the dog is invaluable, though he must be a far different kind of a dog from the one used in bird shooting. Hounds are the best, though some other species are trained to run rabbits. The hound, on starting a rabbit, will run him around to the starting point, so that all the hunter has to do is to take his stand at the point where bunny was first disturbed and wait for the dog to bring him around, when a fair shot will be had. Rabbits are found in the thickets, under brush heaps, and often lying out in the open meadows.

Other game will be found pretty scarce. Squirrels are not out much so late in the fall. They hug their nests closely. The nests in this part of the country are in the trees, and are made of leaves and corn husks or strips of bark. Often the squirrels will take possession of a deserted crow's nest and then put a roof on it.

The Story of "Blue Jeans."

The scene of Joseph Arthur's play which is to be produced at Music Hall, Thursday evening, is laid in the suburbs of Rising Sun, Indiana. The story is not complicated. Perry Bascom, a young man of means, has a saw mill. Cindy and Jacob Tutewiller (homespun neighbors of Bascom, finding their modest home lonely since their son Jim and daughter Nell have gone to New York city to make their way in the world), adopt a waif from the poorhouse known as June, who is a diamond in the rough, and who turns out to be their own dead daughter Lucy's child by Bascom's uncle, with whom she had eloped. Perry Bascom is running for office and Colonel Henry Clay Risener of Rising Sun is booming his campaign. The handsome young mill owner gets smitten with the charms of Sue Eudaly, formerly a snake charmer in a circus. He loses the election but wins Sue and honestly but secretly marries her. She is passionate, fiery and jealous. He finds out that she has been married before to one Richard White, and that there is no record of her husband's death. Knowing that she has committed bigamy he leaves her. He falls in love with June—his cousin, at first mistakenly believed to be his sister—and marries her. Sue, still madly in love with him, thirsts for revenge, and finds a very handy ally in Bascom's saw mill foreman, Ben Boone, who was her devoted lover before Bascom ever saw her.

As the action progress, the village band, a male and female chorus of country folks, and a calf (to be served up at a barbecue) are effectively introduced.

—An interesting little item about fur capes and trimmings, appears in Edsall's new advertisement to-day.

TREATS FOR STAR-GAZERS.

November Nights Will Furnish Interesting Studies, Including Delightful Constellations, Two Eclipses, Several Conjunctions, and Five Phases of the Moon.

November is an interesting month for star-gazing, particularly if one can reinforce the naked eye with an opera glass or a field glass. At 10 o'clock in the early evenings of the month, and at 8 o'clock at its close, some of the finest constellations are above the horizons, while over us and about us is a host of smaller objects, interesting to study even with unaided vision.

The speed of the sun perceptibly slackens in November, there being but seven degrees increase in southerly declination for the month, whereas last month there were eleven degrees. The rate of motion will continue to decrease until the time of the winter solstice is reached, when the speed will again be accelerated. The decrease in the length of the day for the month is a little over an hour, being more in the morning than in the afternoon. The day is now almost six hours shorter than it was at the summer solstice, a fact that becomes far too apparent as the chilliness of evening overtakes us at an earlier hour from week to week. The month is quite a noticeable one in astronomical circles, as it contains two eclipses—one of the moon on the 15th and one of the sun on the 30th. The latter is only a partial eclipse, invisible in this latitude but visible quite generally in antarctic regions, in which in its greatest magnitude it embraces somewhat over one-half the disk of Old Sol.

The November moon came in promptly with the first day of the month, and this early appearance admits of there being another new moon on the last day of the month, thus giving us the somewhat unusual number of five phases for the calendar month. There are six conjunctions for November, in which Luna plays a more or less prominent part. The first event is with Mercury to-day, but the crescent as well as the planet is far too pale for us to see, both being engulfed in the powerful rays of the sun. To-morrow Venus and the moon come quite close together, and we shall see a pretty picture in the western sky as the young moon, seemingly poised on the crest of some aerial wave, drifts down toward the horizon, all gilded by the sun that has but barely passed from view, and carries almost in her arms the fairest gem of the evening heavens.

The next conjunction is with Jupiter, on the 10th, but the four degrees separating the two hardly tend toward enhancing the beauties of the panorama. As the meeting with Neptune occurs on the day after the full of the moon, the light is too brilliant for proper effect, even were the planet within our natural vision. Saturn bears about the same relation to the waning that Jupiter does to the growing moon, and the conjunction is of but little interest. Mars closes the record for the month without adding the least to its beauties.

The total eclipse of the moon on the 15th of the month will be visible here and also in Asia, Africa, Europe, the Atlantic and the eastern portion of the Pacific Ocean. The moon remains five hours and a half in the shadow, the period of total eclipse lasting one hour and a half. The entire magnitude of the eclipse is one-third larger than the face of the moon. The performance begins at 9:30 in the evening, and the curtain does not drop until after 3 o'clock the following morning, when, to reverse the usual order of things, the chief performer makes his appearance instead of his exit.

At that delightful moment when night is not yet and day is no more, and when twilight has already begun to cast its soft tones and fantastic reflections over everything, if we cast our eyes toward the western sky we shall be rewarded by seeing the fairest of all the planets as she makes her first appearance after her many weeks' retirement from our celestial tableaus. She comes brilliant and smiling, but is not as large as when we bade her good-bye and Jupiter was left to reign in her stead; but she is fast growing, and as she comes nearer she will appear larger and larger, so that before she again disappears she will have regained her full size and radiance.

Jupiter, as the month opens, is still the star-performer of the company, and, rising earlier on each succeeding evening, will be a prominent object throughout the month, although his disk is daily decreasing in size. He is in the constellation of the Water Bearer, and now sets shortly after 10 o'clock in the morning.

Saturn is a morning star, is in the constellation of the Virgin, and is also gradually increasing in size as he gets nearer the earth. He has again donned his jewelry, as his rings can now once more be seen, and they will be more plainly visible as he continues to turn on his axis and present a different face to us from what we have lately been accustomed to seeing. Mercury remains a morning star until the 27th, when he passes the sun to reappear on his opposite side as an evening star. We are not now permitted to gaze on the face of this planet, as he is far too close to the sun, and, in fact, we shall not again see him until after the year draws to a close.

Mars is also a morning star, and, although almost three hours distant from the sun, is so small a point that his ruddy glare cannot be perceived at present. He is, however, coming this way rapidly, bringing with him the promise of wonderful things for the coming year, when he will be a glorious spectacle to attract both scientist and amateur. He is to be found in the constellation of the Lion, rising to-morrow morning shortly after 3 o'clock.

Neptune is another of the morning stars, and is in the constellation of Taurus in about twenty degrees north declination, and rises at about 6:15 o'clock in the evening. He is in opposition to the sun on the 20th, after which he will be an evening star.

Uranus comes under the banner, followed by the morning stars until the 28th, when he is in conjunction with the sun, and after which he will be an evening star. Terrestrial observers can take but little interest in these conjunctions, as the smaller actors are entirely hidden from view, being completely engulfed in the sun's beams. Conjunctions, or the meeting in right ascension, of heavenly bodies are calculated years ahead of the time they occur, and tables showing the elements of the event are to be found in the standard astronomical works of the day. The Nautical Almanac published in Washington, contains the data necessary to determine the position of the various heavenly bodies, and is published several years in advance of the current year.

DUNELLEN DOINGS.

Interesting Items from a Thriving Borough, by Our Own Correspondent.

The First Presbyterian Sunday-school held their annual missionary meeting last evening, when the offerings for a year were presented by the treasurer of each class, who, on presenting them, repeated an appropriate passage of scripture. The total receipts for the year were $80, the infant class having collected the most. The Rev. John Boyd of New York city, made an address on Sunday-school work.

U. G. Tingley is spending a few days up the country, and while away proposes to use his gun and dog.

Several of Dunellen's sporting men left last evening for the hunting districts, and their good neighbors who have no guns are endeavoring to pull a good stroke with them with the hopes that if the large harvest of game is reaped that is expected they may have a share. Anyone who lives neighbor to a howling hound for one year should at least be remembered during game season.

Mrs. Champney, who by accident took some medicine from the wrong bottle, is greatly improving, and will soon be around again.

A stranger, the other evening, stepped up to one of our electric lights, and inquired the way to the Democratic Rally. On discovering his mistake, he was heard to say "I thought it was a man standing there with a lighted cigar."

Miss Maud Williams is suffering from a painfully sore finger, caused by blood poisoning. It has swollen to about three times its natural size and has to be lanced each day. Dr. Gaston, her attending physician, says it is a very bad case.

The members of the M. E. church held a dime sociable at the residence of Isaac Giddis last Thursday evening. A large company was present.

David Lowrie, of Green Brook, while working in the lowlands along a stream of water, caught sight of a raccoon. He attempted to catch the animal, which turned upon him, and showed so much fight that he was obliged to defend himself; but finally, after a lively combat, he succeeded in killing it. The animal weighed 28 pounds, and measured 3 feet from its nose to its tail.

The total number of voters registered in this district is 445. Let every patriotic citizen come out to-morrow and vote.

Jake Snell, who some time ago was thrown from a Central railroad coal train and badly injured, has entirely recovered and is now visiting his friends in this place.

On Saturday evening Ed Covey left his position in VanHorn's grocery store and hopes to secure one of a similar character in a larger establishment.

Some mischevious boys plugged the keyhole of the drug store door, with damp paper, yesterday afternoon, and when the doctor came to open it just before evening he was inclined to think that some one had stolen the keyhole, and not before much trouble was he able to unlock the door. Boys, the doctor is the president of the borough and can arrest any of you, so look out.

All the druggists sell the Tudor Whiskey. Some of the other dealers do not. They say it pays too small a profit. PURE whiskey never does yield a large profit. It is the adulterated stuff which makes the money. Do you want to pay your dealer an exorbitant profit on an adulterated article, or do you prefer genuine old Whiskey which is sold at a moderate profit? Decide for yourselves. The TUDOR WHISKEY IS WARRANTED ABSOLUTELY PURE and TEN YEARS OLD.

GLORIOUS RABY CASTLE.

The Magnificent Seat of the Late Duke of Cleveland.

The Most Perfect of England's Northern Castles—Battle Abbey, Near Hastings, Now the Property of Lord Rosebery, the Duke's Stepson.

The funeral of the fourth and last duke of Cleveland took place recently from Raby castle. The coffin was deposited in the family mausoleum in the churchyard of Staindrop, near Darlington, where the three previous dukes were all buried.

Raby castle, the magnificent old seat of the nobleman who has just been buried, was described by Leland as the "largest castel of loggynges in all the north country." The Vanes, says the Pall Mall Budget, bought Raby from the lessees of the crown, in the person of Sir Harry Vane the elder, of whom it is related that he applied to James I. for his sanction to the purchase, representing the castle as a mere hillock of stones. Afterwards, when Charles I. visited Raby, he exclaimed: "Gude troth, my lord, ca' ye that a hullock of stanes? By my faith, I ha' na sic anither hullock in a' my realms!" The opposition of Sir Harry Vane the younger to Cromwell in council caused the well known apostrophe: "Sir Harry Vane, Sir Harry Vane—the Lord deliver me from Sir Harry Vane!" He was beheaded after the restoration, in 1662, and was succeeded by his son, Christopher, created Baron Barnard. The grandson of the latter became earl of Darlington in 1754, and his grandson, Marquis of Cleveland, in 1827, and duke of Cleveland in 1833.

A mansion existed before 1379, when John de Neville obtained a license "to make a castle of his manor of Raby, and to embattle and crenellate its towers." The buildings are of immense size, and inclose three courtyards, the whole being surrounded by a broad raised terrace. In the east front is a tower, supposed to be older than any part of the castle. The center of the south front was added by Inigo Jones. "With this exception," says a contemporary writer, "Raby is the most perfect of our northern castles, retaining in the mass all its ancient features." The hall is of great size, and above it is the Baron's hall, where "assembled, in the time of the Nevilles, 700 knights who held of the family." From the latter a staircase leads to the chapel, which was renovated by the second duke, and contains two fine pictures by Murillo. The dining and morning rooms are also rich in paintings by Vandyke, Lely, Titian, Teniers and Clade Lorraine. The rest of the interior is modernized.

We give here a sketch of Battle abbey, near Hastings, another seat of the late duke's, which it is supposed will now become the property of Lord Rosebery, his stepson. The abbey was built by William the Conqueror in 1067, and although over 800 years have passed away since its erection, it is still a magnificent structure.

Gods of the Bantus.

The great majority of the Bantu people of South Africa have no idea of the place of habitation or mode of existence of their deities; some of the more enlightened, however, especially those who have had some communication with the Boers, have an idea that the Great Spirit lives some place above them most of them believing that his place of abode is in the top of an immense tree. One curious fact regarding Bantu superstitions is this: Although the more northerly tribe have an idea that the Great Spirit resides some place above them, those to the south, which come in contact with the Boers almost every day in the year, cannot be persuaded that their deities do not dwell in lonely caves and subterranean cavities underneath the earth. Before their intercourse with the whites it never entered the Bantu's mind that the acts of this life could have any effect upon the spirit after death.

Remedy for Snake Bite.

The news comes from Berlin that Dr. Engels has discovered in Africa a remedy for blood poisoning caused by the bites of snakes and rabid dogs. This remedy is the "wild-growing noble black palm." It is stated that 500 negroes bitten by poisonous snakes were treated with the extract of the palm and 487 were cured in five days. Of sixty-five farmers and negroes bitten by rabid dogs all but two were saved. The extract is injected under the skin and causes a moderate fever. On the third day the fever and inflammation disappear, and on the fifth or seventh day the patient is cured.

MOVING BUTCHER SHOPS.

Meat Sold in Mexico City from the Backs of Patient Donkeys.

Only the better classes of Mexicans eat meat, and one of the great fields of American investment is in the packing interests of Mexico, says the New York World. Hams and beef bring high prices, and the meat business of the city is managed by monopolies. Good beeves are worth from $25 to $50 a head. There is more mutton eaten than beef. The meat wagons of Mexico City are mules. Take one of the greasiest, dirtiest mules you can find and fasten a framework of hooks to a saddle on his back. Let this framework extend about a foot above the mule and on the hooks hang the halves and quarters of beeves, so that the blood drips from them to the ground. When the mules are small the meat almost touches the ground. Then you have the Mexican butcher cart of the mountains. The butcher or meat peddler wears a great blanket about his shoulders, a broad-brimmed hat on his head and his feet are bare. If you buy a quarter of beef he will carry it into your house on his head, and if you want a slice he will hack off a piece for you and charge you about the same for the neck as the loin. The Mexicans sell every part of the animal, and in every market you will find little cook shops in which shreds of beef are fried and offered for sale. These are for the Indian customers, who stand about and eat the greasy morsel with their fingers and without the use of knife, fork or plate. In Mexico City the butchering is more carefully done and beef is comparatively cheap. You can get a roast for eighteen cents a pound, but pork is more expensive. The pork business in Mexico City is controlled by a Mexican, who has made millions out of it, and he is now putting up one of the biggest packing-houses in the world. He has his agents all over the city, and he imports his hogs from Kansas.

A WORK OF ART.

A Grand Monument and Receptacle for the Dust of Columbus.

Christopher Columbus died May 20, 1506, and was buried at Valladolid, in Spain, but his remains were soon afterward transferred to the monastery of the Carthusian brotherhood of Las Cuevas, Seville, where, in the course of time the bones of his beloved son, Diego, were laid in the consecrated ground by the side of his illustrious father. Here they reposed until 1535 when with solemn ceremonies they were exhumed, carried across the sea and interred with due pomp in the cathedral of Hispaniola (San Domingo.) As the life of Columbus was one of constant wandering, his bones seemed destined never to rest quietly in their sepulchre, and in 1796 when San Domingo was ceded to France the bodies of father and son were again exhumed and borne with great state to the cathedral of Havana. The sacred dust may, even now after three hundred and eighty-five years since it was the abiding place of a great soul, be again borne over the sea and upon the continent of North America, the new world upon which the gallant admiral of the ocean seas never set foot, they may repose at last. Of the many monuments projected to Columbus that recently modeled by the Spanish sculptor is the most singular, being at once a monument and a receptacle for his dust. It is designed for execution in marble and is severely simple in its details.

A Collector of Idols.

S. H. Zhan, of Lancaster, Pa., is a collector of idols. Among the many heathen gods to be seen in his collection are Aztec idols from Mexican mounds and tombs, many of them thousands of years old, a Hindoo idol with real gems for eyes, ten or fifteen Japanese and Chinese gods, including the "God of Darkness" of the last-named people. He also has Indian idols taken from sepulchral monuments in Arizona, Tennessee, Kentucky and Missouri, besides a great Indian god, made of sandstone, found somewhere on the banks of the Susquehanna river. It is thought that Mr. Zhan's agents were among the would-be buyers who flocked around the London auctioneer who sold the pure gold Persian idol on the Strand in July, but as that relic of superstition was knocked down for nearly $20,000 in our money, it does not grace his collection.

ELECTION RESULTS

New York Democrats Elect the State Ticket.

THE LEGISLATURE VERY CLOSE.

Indications That the Republicans Will Have a Majority on Joint Ballot.

WM. M'KINLEY ELECTED IN OHIO

The Republicans Also Capture the Legislature and Will Have a U. S. Senator.

Close Vote in Massachusetts—Gov. Russell Re-elected by a Small Majority; Republicans Get the Rest of the Offices; the Legislature in Doubt — Pennsylvania Goes Republican by Over 50,000 and Overwhelmingly Votes Down the Proposed Constitutional Convention—Gov. Boies Re-elected in Iowa Together, Probably, With the Rest of the Democratic Ticket—New Jersey Legislature Democratic—Brown Elected Governor of Maryland.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—The entire Democratic State ticket is elected by a plurality of about 20,000 majority. In this city Flower's majority is 58,290. Sheehan ran behind a little over 3,000 in this city, but elsewhere, except in Buffalo he polled a vote even with the rest of his ticket.

In Kings County Flower has a majority of about 15,000. Brooklyn elected the entire Democratic city ticket by about 20,000 majority.

GOVERNOR-ELECT FLOWER.

The majority given to Flower in this city, 58,000, is much less than a natural Democratic majority of the metropolis. The falling off is attributed to the action of the County Democracy in resenting the exclusion of their delegates from the Saratoga convention.

Kings County, and Richmond County, and Queens County, however, showed decided Democratic gains. These, taken in connection with the returns from districts throughout the State outside of New York County, made it seem certain that Flower's majority in the State would be 25,000.

Tammany Hall is on top. It has elected all its candidates for the Senate, not even excepting Gen. McMahon, who defeated Senator Lispenard Stewart in the 8th Senatorial District. In the Assembly, also, the Tammany Democracy carried every Assembly district, with the sole exception of the 7th.

Both Congressional districts have been carried by the Democrats, Little being elected to succeed Gov.-elect Flower in the 12th and Cockran being returned from the 10th.

The new Board of Aldermen will be a Tammany Board by an overwhelming majority, and the elected members of the Judiciary are all nominees of the same organization.

The latest returns indicate that the Assembly will stand 64 to 64, and the Senate 17 Republicans to 15 Democrats. A majority of 2 Republicans on joint ballot.

1,319 election districts in New York State outside New York and Kings are: Flower, 143,856; Fassett, 155,846. Same in 1888 gave Hill, 158,808; Miller, 199,276.

One of the incidents of the day in Brooklyn was the challenging of Millionaire William Ziegler's vote by William H. Kaufman, the Democratic captain in the Seventh district of the First ward.

Mr. Ziegler is the man who declined the Republican nomination for Mayor. It is said Mr. Ziegler is a resident of New York, and that he was illegally registered.

He appeared, however, bright and early at his polling place, and swore in his vote after being challenged by the Democratic captain.

The arrests made for alleged illegal voting were fewer than in several preceding years.

When the returns began to come in it was evident that the Democracy of Kings County had maintained an unbroken front.

Herrick, ex-Chairman of the Democratic State Committee when Cleveland was Governor, who is a candidate for Justice of the Supreme Court in this Judicial district, run nearly 1,500 behind his ticket in Albany County.

Senator Vedder Defeated.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y., Nov. 4.—Chatauqua County gives Fassett 4,400 plurality. J. T. Edwards (Dem. and Ind.), is elected Senator over Vedder in the 32d district. For Assembly N. C. Gifford and E. Woodbury, Reps., are re-elected in the 1st and 2d districts.

Albany County 4,000 Democratic.

ALBANY, Nov. 4.—Albany County gave Flower over 4,000 majority. The rest of the ticket received about the same except Rosendale for Attorney General who ran 500 ahead. The democratic county ticket is elected.

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—U. S. Gov't Report, Aug. 17, 1889.

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Mr. Fassett Takes His Defeat Calmly.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Nov. 4.—Mr. Fassett received the returns over a Western Union wire at his home. A few personal friends were with him. He took his defeat calmly and made no comments.

In Vrooman's Home.

HERKIMER, N. Y., Nov. 4.—Herkimer, Vrooman's home gave him a plurality of 24, and Flower a plurality of 79. The county gave Fassett a plurality of 303, and Vrooman 750.

M'KINLEY ELECTED GOVERNOR.

The Republicans Also Secure a Majority in the Ohio Legislature.

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 4.—The election passed off quietly but was lively contested. The Republicans have elected their entire State ticket and have secured a majority in the Legislature. This is conceded by the Democratic State Committee.

Hamilton County gave McKinley about 6,000 majority, and his majority throughout the State will be between 15,000 and 20,000.

OHIO'S NEXT GOVERNOR.

Chairman Neal was seen this morning by a reporter and, in answer to the question whether any reliance was placed on the tardy returns, said:

"Everything is lost; McKinley has carried the State by at least 15,000; anything above that you can use your own figures, for we are snowed under."

"How about the Legislature?" was asked.

"Well, they take that too, but I cannot tell by what majority."

Chairman Hahn of the Republican Committee was extremely jubilant when seen by a reporter. He said: "I have not the slightest reason to change my estimate of Ohio going Republican by a big majority.

"My claim to the Legislature and three close Democratic counties, Hardin, Hancock and Paulding, which have been Democratic, and which I held in doubt, was not an idle boast. They have been won by the Republican candidates for the Legislature. The entire Republican ticket is elected by a good majority."

Additional importance is lent to this election from the fact that the Legislature on joint ballot will select a United States Senator to succeed Henry B. Payne, whose term expires on March 3, 1893.

Gov. Campbell says his defeat is due to the heavy vote brought out by the vigor with which the campaign has been fought on both sides, and to the failure of the farmers in the heavily Republican districts to desert the party on the tariff issue to the extent that had been expected.

The returns indicate that Campbell made gains in the manufacturing towns and cities.

He also gained in the Democratic districts in the Northwest.

Niles, McKinley's birthplace, gives the Republican ticket a gain of 200.

IOWA DEMOCRATIC.

Gov. Boies Re-elected, and Probably the Whole Ticket With Him.

DES MOINES, Ia., Nov. 4.—The returns indicate the re-election of Gov. Boies by an increased plurality over that received by him two years ago.

This result has been obtained by an increased majority in the strong Democratic counties on the Mississippi and on the Missouri slope, where it was supposed the Democratic high-water mark was reached two years ago.

Gains are also reported from the interior, which is a realization of Democratic expectations.

The Republicans gain somewhat in Polk and Blackhawk Counties, the latter being the Governor's home, where a very bitter fight was made on him. It is probable the entire Democratic State ticket is elected.

No definite returns have been received concerning the complexion of the Legislature.

CHICAGO, Nov. 4. — A special from Des Moines to the "Herald" says that latest returns indicate the election of Boies and the entire Democratic ticket by a handsome majority. Dispatches received at the Democratic Headquarters announce an increased vote all over the State, and slightly increased majorities for Boies.

The Democratic Committee places Boies' plurality at 10,000 and that of the State ticket 2,000 less. Chairman Mack of the Republican Committee said that the reports received so far were unsatisfactory and he hoped later ones would favor the Republicans. At any rate he said the plurality would be small either way.

Gov. Campbell Voted for Himself.

HAMILTON, O., Nov. 4.—Gov. Campbell came here from Cincinnati early yesterday and voted, this being his legal residence. He voted a straight Democratic ticket, including himself. He always votes for himself when running for an office, experience having taught him the value of single votes. Aside from his election as Governor his total majorities in half a dozen contests did not aggregate 500. He once went to Congress by a majority of two.

Brown Elected Governor.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 4.—It is conceded that Frank Brown, Democratic candidate for Governor, has a majority of between 13,000 and 20,000.

The regular Democracy claim to have elected their entire city ticket by an average of 5,000 majority. This seems to be certain. The Legislature is overwhelmingly Democratic. Returns on the proposed constitutional amendment are not yet complete enough to form any idea of the result.

Republican Congressman from S. Dakota.

HURON, South Dak., Nov. 4.—Latest returns show that Jolley, Rep., for Congress leads both of his competitors, Woods, Dem., and Smith, Ind. He is probably elected.

Republicans Carry Nashua, N. H.

NASHUA, N. H., Nov. 4.—Wm. H. Beason, Republican, was re-elected Mayor of this city. The Republicans also elected a majority of the City Council.

PENNSYLVANIA REPUBLICAN.

Gregg, for Auditor-General, Has Over 50,000 Plurality.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 4.—Pennsylvania has reversed her 17,000 majority for a Democratic Governor of a year ago for Robert E. Pattison, and has gone Republican by what looks at this writing like figures rising 50,000.

The total vote of the city was cast as follows. Gregg, Rep., for Auditor-General, 102,166; Wright, Dem., 73,660; Hague, Pro., 1,163.

For State Treasurer, Morrison, Rep., 101,901; Tilden. 73,390. Drayton, Pro., 1,221.

For Constitutional Convention, 72,985, against the same 8,875.

The whole State is heard from, not a county missing. The vote is: Gregg, Rep., for Auditor-General, has a plurality of 50,833 over Robert E. Wright, Dem.; Morrison, Rep., for State Treasurer, has 47,467 plurality over Tilden, Dem.

GOV. RUSSELL RE-ELECTED.

The Balance of the Ticket Likely Republican.

BOSTON, Nov. 4.—The election in this State was hotly contested, and owing to the new law, requiring votes to be counted by two different sets of officials, returns came in slow. In the small towns, Allen, the Republican candidate made slight gains, but the majority given to Russell in the large cities offset this and elected him by a majority of probably 6,000.

GOVERNOR RUSSELL.

The latest returns indicate that the Republicans have elected their State ticket except Governor. The returns are so incomplete that it is impossible at this hour to determine the complexion of the Legislature.

The four western counties show gains for each party in about equal proportions.

Lawrence gives Russell about 1,200, as against 105 last year.

Lowell, where Mr. Allen lives, gave him a handsome vote, and cut down Russell's plurality by several hundred votes.

Complete returns from Boston and other cities which show Democratic gains will elect Russel by from 3,000 to 5,000.

The following Senators are elected in six of the nine Suffolk districts, the figures being their majorities.

Second Suffolk: John Reade (Dem.), 327; 4th Suffolk, Henry Parkman (Rep.), 1,106; 6th Suffolk, William S. McNary (Dem.), 3,307; 7th Suffolk, M. J. McEttrick (Dem.), 1,231; 8th Suffolk, Wm. H. Carberry (Ind. Dem.), 902.

It looks now as if the total vote would surpass any in the history of the Commonwealth. The clear, bracing weather contributed to this result, of course, but the interest felt in the result was intense and was shared by all alike. So it was the tug of war.

The adoption of the railroad system has taken all the spectacular element out of election day, and the picturesque features which used to be noted and which now characterize States where the old system is adhered to are totally lacking.

An attempt was made to introduce a little originality, and a wagon loaded with American tin plate and decked in flags was driven about the streets a part of the day.

Two persons were arrested for illegal registration. The candidates for Gubernatorial honors attended to business during the day. Gov. Russell voted at his precinct in Cambridge, then came to the Executive office, where he put in some hard work. After office hours he secluded himself in one of the hotels with Mayor Matthews, Josiah Quincy and George Fred Williams and calmly waited the result.

Colonel Allen, who reached his home in Lowell Monday night worn out with the campaigning, remained quietly at home all day and night, going out only to vote.

Republican Gains in Kansas.

KANSAS CITY, Kas., Nov. 4.—Returns are still slow coming in, owing to the poor wire service, but reports so far received insure Republican victory, with big gains.

Complete returns from 30 Kansas counties and partial from 40 show the election of 9 out of 12 district judges by the Republicans; three not heard from. Republicans elected every official in every county.

Celebrating at Watertown.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., Nov. 4.—The rooms of the Jeffersonian Club in this city, where Mr. Flower was first proposed as the Democratic candidate, were brilliantly illuminated last night, and crowds of Democrats paraded the streets headed by brass bands, burning red fire, shooting off fireworks and cheering for the successful candidate whose Summer home is in this city.

Flower Carries Elmira.

ELMIRA, Nov. 4.—The complete returns of Elmira City, Mr. Fassett's home, show a plurality for Flower of 504. In 1888 the city gave Hill a plurality of 659.

Mayor Chapin Goes to Congress.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 4. — Mayor Chapin was elected to Congress in the 6th District by a majority of 1,379 over Bristow.

Democratic Gain in Oswego County.

OSWEGO, N. Y., Nov. 4.—Oswego County, complete, gave Fassett 2,050, a Democratic gain of 1,600.

The Local Fight in Chicago.

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 4.—The election in Cook County was very fiercely contested, although only local issues were involved. The result is still in doubt, and both sides are still claiming victory. Returns from the inlying precincts show a Democratic plurality. It was the first election in this city under the new ballot law, and the greatest satisfaction is expressed with its working.

Mr. McKinley Passed a Quiet Day.

CANTON, O., Nov. 4.—Yesterday was a quiet day for Major McKinley for the first time in ten weeks. At 9 o'clock he deposited his ballot, and at noon he dined with friends. The afternoon he passed in his rooms in the Hurford, and at night he visited the Tabernacle to hear the result of the day's ballot, where he remained until the verdict of the people had been heard.

Republican Congressman from Michigan.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., Nov. 4.—Chas. E. Belknap was elected to Congress to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Congressman M. B. Ford of the Fifth district, by a plurality of 1,200 or 1,500 over John S. Lawrence, the Democratic candidate.

Democratic Virginia.

RICHMOND, Nov. 4.—Of 19 State Senators the Democrats have certainly elected 11. Of the 100 members of the House the Democrats have elected 70. The regular Democratic candidates are defeated in Matthews and Middlesex by the Alliance candidates.

Shot by an Alderman's Son.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 4.—James H. Lee, a gun maker employed in the gun factory of Alderman Samuel Avis, while drunk attempted to force his way into the residence of the Alderman yesterday. He was met by Woodburn R. Avis, the son of the Alderman, who told him that his father was not at home. He ordered Lee to leave, but the latter refused. Young Avis attempted to eject him from the premises by force and a desperate struggle ensued. Finally Avis drew a revolver and shot Lee twice. None of the shots are fatal.

Hoey Files a Cross Bill.

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 4.—Ex-President Hoey of the Adams Express Company yesterday filed a cross bill in the United States Court, asking for a restraining order to prevent the Adams Express Company from selling the Southern Express Company stock which Mr. Hoey gave as collateral security for a $100,000 loan. He also asks for an order restraining the company from foreclosing a mortgage given by him to the Guarantee Safe and Deposit Company of Philadelphia. Judge Green granted the order, which is returnable Nov. 16.

MORE WAR RUMORS

Chili May Decide to Strike the First Blow.

THE BALTIMORE IN DANGER.

Capt. Schley is Vigilant and Will Never Surrender.

Thought that Other Foreign Vessels in Valparaiso Would Not Permit a Treacherous Attack on the Ship—Washington Authorities Reticent—Rumors in London—The Case Against Trumbull and Burt Dismissed.

LONDON, Nov. 4.—A private dispatch received from Valparaiso says that the American cruiser Baltimore is in serious danger, and that there is reason to believe that the Chilians, believing war inevitable, will not allow the United States to select their own time to declare war, but suddenly give Egan his passports and at once attack the Baltimore, so as to have the first blow at an advantage.

It is not believed among the foreign residents of Valparaiso that the other foreign men-of-war in Valparaiso harbor would permit a treacherous act on Capt. Schley, but would demand that fair notice be given him to quit Valparaiso. Capt. Schley, however, is keeping a vigilant outlook.

The Tory press continues to pour the vials of its wrath upon the United States in connection with Chili, the articles being apparently intended rather for consumption in Chili than England or America, and being well calculated to puff that country with a great idea of Chili's capacity for defeating the Americans.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4.—There is no further disposition on the part of Secretary Blaine to discuss the situation. The departure of Minister Montt for New Orleans indicates a more peaceful condition of affairs, as it is argued he would not have left the capital at this time if the situation was considered serious. The object of his visit to New Orleans is said to make a personal investigation of the Italian massacre, with a view of drawing a comparison with the Valparaiso outrage.

THE ITATA CASE.

Agents for the Chilian Insurgents Declared Not Guilty.

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 4.—Jude Ross, of the U. S. Court, yesterday instructed the jury in the case of Trumbull and Burt, agents of the Chilian insurgents, who were indicted for their connection with the Itata affair, to find the defendants not guilty.

The case of the Itata was fully reviewed by Judge Ross, 30 minutes being occupied in the reading of his opinions. The judge held, in brief, that the Itata being not a United States vessel nor fitted out within its limits, and the right of citizens of the United States to sell provisions and guns having been settled in prior cases, the defendants could not be held responsible.

Murder Runs Rampant.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Nov. 4.—A regular "Jack the Ripper" is at work around Georgia, Ala., a small town in Butler County. Yesterday morning the horribly mutilated body of an unknown dead man was found in the public road near that place, making six murders within the last few days. The country is wild with excitement and everybody is up in arms. Blood hounds have been put on the trails in all directions but there is no clue however to the perpetrators of these deeds. In each case the victim was brained with an axe.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

Typhoid fever is epidemic at Portland, Me.

Monsignor Preston of New York died early this morning.

Abner King, of Leroy, N. Y., fell down a well last night and was drowned.

Burnham & Davis' lumber yard at Lowell, Mass., was damaged $100,000 by fire.

A number of the convicts recently liberated by the miners at Briceville, Tenn., have been recaptured.

Mrs. John Schneider, aged 92, who is dead at Hallertown, Pa., could repeat many whole chapters from the Bible.

Weslosky & Brown's warehouse and a dozen adjoining negro houses at Albany, Ga., burned Monday night. Loss $100,000.

D. C. Cline of Xenia, O., was shot and fatally wounded by J. C. Myers, an ex-convict, during a political dispute. Myers escaped.

Dr. John J. Jennings, father of the Masonic Home at Grand Rapids, Mich., died last night. He was a Thirty-second Degree Mason.

The old hotel at Chesterfield, Mass., was burned last evening, with the adjoining store of William Baker & Son. Loss, $10,000; insurance, $4,000.

At a Democratic meeting at Boone, Ia., a savage fight occurred between Republicans and Democrats. Knives were used and Charles White was fatally stabbed.

Tom Moran and an Italian received a terrible shock at Wilkesbarre, Pa., while working in a sewer trench. An electric wire fell into the ditch. Both are likely to die.

Charles M. Riley, for more than 20 years dispensing clerk at the State prison at Trenton, N. J., was stricken with apoplexy at the polls yesterday and died last night.

During an election altercation on James street, New York City, between Simon Crane and Frederick Witte, the latter was shot in the mouth and dangerously wounded.

The Melrose National Bank of Melrose, Mass., has filed, through John M. Howard, of New York and associates, an application for authority to organize a national bank.

TIM HEALY HORSEWHIPPED.

Castigated By a Nephew of Parnell for His Vile Utterances.

DUBLIN, Nov. 4. — Mr. McDermott, nephew of the late Charles Stewart Parnell, publicly horsewhipped Mr. Timothy Healey, M. P., the most bitter of the anti-Parnell leaders.

The horsewhipping received by Mr. Healy was the indirect outcome of the insulting language used by Mr. Healy at Longford on Sunday last, when the anti-Parnell leader referred to Miss Parnell and to the widow of the late Charles Stewart Parnell.

The particulars of the assault, as so far understood, are as follows: Mr. McDermott, who is a solicitor, espied Mr. Timothy Healy, dressed in his barrister's wig and gown, walking through the Four Courts.

Without a moment's delay Mr. McDermott drew a horsewhip from under his coat and, rushing upon the astounded commoner, belabored him with repeated and vigorously delivered blows.

Mr. Healy was taken completely by surprise and, stumbling, fell flat upon his face, his wig falling from his head at the same time. While Mr. Healy was prostrated, his enemy continued to remorselessly and unsparingly slash whatever part of his body presented itself.

This, however, did not last long, for, Mr. Healy springing to his feet, the two men clinched. There was a rapid delivery of fist blows by Mr. McDermott, and then a short wrestling match which was concluded by Mr. Healy again going to earth.

While this was going on a crowd of solicitors and barristers were flocking from all parts of the Four Courts. These gentlemen at last intervened and, forming a cordon about Mr. Healy, at once prevented him from attacking or being attacked.

Mr. McDermott explained to the onlookers that he "thrashed the hound because of that speech of his at Longford on Sunday last, in which he so brutally assailed the honor of my kinsman's widow, Mrs. Parnell."

DR. MACMILLAN FOUND.

His Memory a Blank—Had been Wandering Since His Fall.

HEIGHTSTOWN, N. J., Nov. 4.—Dr. MacMillan, the young physician of Perrinville who has been missing since Thursday night and who, as was admitted by Farmer Hulse, was thrown violently out of his buggy, has been found at last.

He was brought home by one of the searching parties during the night. His memory seems to have left him, for he knew nothing of his accident until told.

All he remembers is that on awakening from unconsciousness he found himself in a farm wagon at Red Lion, near New Brunswick, but he did not know how he got there. The owner of the wagon states that MacMillan came up to him and asked him for a ride, which he gave him.

He had been wandering around the whole night after the accident, and must have walked about 20 miles. Since then he has been unable to move. He is very much bruised and sore, and all indications are that he has been out of his mind, probably from the effects of the fall.

Noted Crook Arrested.

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 4.—Adolphus Chamberlain, one of the shrewdest and most successful confidence men in the country, was arrested yesterday at the Trenton House, where he had registered as "Capt. Thomas Tilley." He is wanted for forgery in Canada.

Old-Time Newspaper Man Dead.

OIL CITY, Pa., Nov. 4.—Col. Joseph C. Hayes, an old-time newspaper man, died yesterday at Meadville. He was 81 years old. He is the father of Assemblyman F. W. Hayes of this city, and John B. Hayes of the New York "Tribune."

New Liquor Stamps.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4.—The Treasury Department is about to issue new customs stamps for imported liquors. They will be of three kinds and colors, viz.: Those printed in black for imported distilled spirits, those printed in brown for imported wines and malt liquors, and those printed in green for reimported American distilled spirits. These stamps will go into use Jan. 1, 1892.

President Potter Arraigned.

BOSTON, Nov. 4.—Asa P. Potter was arraigned before United States Commissioner Hallett and pleaded not guilty. United States District-Attorney Allen asked that his bail be fixed at not less than $200,000. Potter was held in $100,000 for the District Court. His surety is Grenville T. W. Braman.

THE DAILY PRESS.

W. L. & A. L. FORCE, Publishers and Proprietors.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—The vote in Plainfield was all counted by 10 p. m.

—There will be no meeting in the W. C. T. U. rooms to-morrow.

—If you want a good seat for "Blue Jeans" you'd better buy it quick.

—The body of Frank Green was brought to Plainfield this afternoon.

—The Republican primaries to nominate city officers will be held to-night.

—Joe English is coming to Reform Hall for one week, beginning next Sunday.

—The Leal foot-ball team defeated the Bicycle club team in a good game, yesterday.

—St. Andrew's society of Grace church will meet in the chapel this evening at 8 o'clock.

—Three new Knights of Honor were taken into Easter lodge, Monday evening, and others are on the way.

—Dr. G. W. Endicott is about to enlarge his newly purchased house on Park avenue. He will make an addition to be used as a dining room.

—A child born to Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel M. Sutton at Dunellen, yesterday morning, died a few hours afterwards. Mrs. Sutton is very low.

—The ordinance covering Carey's case, and providing just penalty for the defacement of trees in the city was adopted on final passage by the common council Monday night.

—James Babbitt, who was accidently shot in the arm, Monday, by a friend, is improving at Muhlenberg Hospital, and will be out before long. He turned out yesterday to vote.

—A quartette composed of members of the Yale University Glee club will sing at the men's meeting to be held under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. in the M. E. church Sunday at 4:15 p. m.

—Dominick Duffy, the man who was so badly injured in a fight with his brother-in-law, Cormick Cawfield, is in so bad a condition that he has been removed to Muhlenberg Hospital, where it is feared that he may die.

—A vicious bat got into a Bay street cellar last night and gave the head of the family a lively fight. The unfortunate man has several bald spots on his head from which the bat yanked glossy black locks.

—The lantern evening of the Camera club, yesterday, was greatly enjoyed by a fine audience. The views, exhibited by Charles H. Davis, were superb, and R. M. Fuller's paper on "Art in Photography" was fully appreciated.

—There was no reason for the charges of inhuman treatment made against Warden Dodd of the county jail, and the attack upon him by some New York papers, and copied in the Courier and the News of this city, was an outrage.

—The charges that were made by prejudiced lawyers in court Monday, that jail warden Charles W. Dodd had been cruel in his treatment of a prisoner, were investigated by the medical authorities, and Mr. Dodd is entirely exonerated.

—The councilmen all were present at Monday night's meeting. The session was begun at 8:28, and ended at 10, when adjournment was taken for one week. The council chamber was very chilly. It is hoped that the furnace will do better work during the winter.

—The Woman's Temperance Aid Society desire to express their sincere thanks to the many kind friends, who, during the past year of their work, have in various ways encouraged and helped them in their efforts to lead others into a better, holier living. A. T. MAXSON, Secretary.

—Woodland avenue from South avenue to LaGrande avenue is to be macadamized. The necessary ordinance was passed on first and second readings and ordered engrossed and advertised preparatory to third reading and final passage, at the meeting of the common council Monday night. Mr. Hetfield introduced the ordinance.

—The trial of the 4-way hydrant at Madison avenue and Third street, yesterday, was a great success. No matter whether one or four lengths of hose were playing, they would throw streams over the adjacent buildings and 180 feet along the road, without the aid of an engine. The water in the standpipe was lowered 6 feet by the test.

—A precedent has been established for those who delight in blocking up the sidewalk with show cases, boxes of goods, and other things that ought to be kept inside property lines. Though the sidewalks ought to be reserved entirely for the use of foot-passengers, the common council on Monday night granted to a local firm permission to keep a big showcase standing between the curb and building lines.

—Coronado Beach, that peerless queen of summer and winter resorts, is already familiar, at least by reputation, to readers of this paper, and no fulsome praise is necessary to remind the public of the excellence of Hotel del Coronado, the advertisement of which appears in another column. A note mailed to manager Babcock will bring by return mail the handsomely illustrated literature of the place, which will familiarize one with its manifold attractions, and make him enthusiastically eager to pay a visit to that famous and unique corner of the earth.

THE ELECTION.

A Light Vote Polled in Plainfield, and Little Interest Manifested—The Complete Returns in Detail.

So far as Plainfield was concerned, yesterday's election was utterly devoid of notable features. The delightful weather took many of the people out of town, on pleasure bent; and all who could, observed it as a holiday, and went driving, or gunning, or sight-seeing, or to the theatre in the metropolis. It was a far better day for sport than for election. So far as chasing after voters was concerned, apathy prevailed in every ward.

The vote polled in Plainfield was one of extraordinary lightness. Out of the 2,772 voters registered, only 1,652 cast ballots.

Sidney Elmer Flower, the local candidate on the Democratic ticket for Assembly, made a highly creditable run. His canvass had been an honest and straightforward one, and in the contest against such heavy odds he made an honorable record. In his own ward he gained 27 votes over Kyte's majority of last year, and in the First district of the Fourth ward he cut Kyte's plurality down from 32 to 2. Though Kyte gained 72 on the total plurality in the city over last year, Flower ran 25 ahead of his ticket, in the face of most discouraging obstacles, and thus took 56 votes of the Republican plurality away from Kyte. There is good reason to suppose that had the full vote of the city been polled Flower would have reduced even more materially Kyte's plurality.

When John Ulrich last ran for assembly, his majority in this city was 408. This year the pluralities are as follows:

Republican plurality in Plainfield	319
Kyte's " " "	263
Pickett's " " "	321

A Comparison of Pluralities in Plainfield.

The vote for Assemblyman in November, 1890, was as follows:

1890.	Kyte, Rep.	Cook, Dem.
First ward	251	174
Second ward	249	168
Third ward	227	129
Fourth ward—
First district	175	143
Second district	93	190
Kyte's plurality in Plainfield, 191.

This year the vote is:

1891.	Kyte, Rep.	Flower, Dem.
First ward	207	157
Second ward	245	130
Third ward	218	83
Fourth ward—
First district	136	134
Second district	107	146
Kyte's plurality in Plainfield, 263.

In the First ward Kyte's plurality is 50; last year it was 77. In the Second ward it is 115; last year, 81. Third ward, 135; last year, 98. Fourth ward, First district, 2; last year, 32. In the Second district of the Fourth ward the Democratic plurality last year was 97; this year it is 39.

North Plainfield Republican.

The vote in North Plainfield was as follows:

	First district.	Second district.
Total number votes cast	357	309
Republican	206	150
Democratic	131	134
Prohibition	19	15
Rejected	1	1
For Assembly—
George A. Dilts, Rep.	205	141
James J. Bergen, Dem.	132	135
Charles McNabb, Pro.	21	23

Dunellen Develops Prohibitionists.

The polls at Dunellen opened promptly at the usual time with the following citizens in charge of the polling room: Nathan Blackford, chairman; Harry Gaskell and George Day, clerks; J. Y. Wilson, Eugene Runyon, and A. D. Pope, inspectors. Judge Coles and C. A. Coriell were challengers for the Republicans, and P. M. Ising and S. W. Carpenter for the Democrats.

At a little after 10 o'clock the one-hundredth ballot was ground in the box by chairman Blackford, and the Republicans claimed a good majority of that number. From that time until the later hours of the day a very light vote was cast. At 7 o'clock the poll was declared closed. 309 votes had been cast, divided as follows:

For Senator—
James H. Goodwin, Rep.	139
Robert Adrain, Dem.	126
Charles E. Kelley, Pro.	30
For Assembly—
David A. Brown, Rep.	136
John W. Beekman, Dem.	141
A. V. N. DeForest, Pro.	29
For Coroner—
Edward E. Haines, Rep.	135
Thomas F. Burke, Dem.	142
David Mount, Pro.	29

During the day every flag staff was decorated with the flowing stars and stripes, and the appearance of the town showed that every citizen was endowed with patriotic enthusiasm. The Democratic club of Piscataway township met at Mair's Hall, where they received gratifying messages covering the returns from Ohio, Massachusetts and New York, and much enthusiasm prevailed.

New Market Almost Even.

The following is the vote for Senator in the First district at New Market:

For Senator—
Goodwin, Rep.	129
Adrain, Dem.	125
For Assembly—
Brown, Rep.	124
Beekman, Dem.	112

Oddities at the Polls.

It seems difficult for some people to get used to the new order of voting.

One man in the Second ward signed his name to his ballot—a Democratic one, by the way. It was of course rejected.

A number of envelopes inclosed two ballots apiece. Usually they were a combination of Republican and Prohibition.

A veteran voter in the First ward refused to vote because he was compelled to go into a booth and prepare his ballot secretly.

Several had an idea that they were required to deposit their ballots in the booths, and started to walk serenely away after having done so.

Somebody in the Second ward voted an advertisement of Waterbury watches.

A YOUNG GIRL FATALLY BURNED.

She Ventured Too Near a Bonfire, and Was Enveloped in Flames.

The six-year-old daughter of Charles L. and Ellen Wahl, at Dunellen, was fatally burned yesterday. She was playing about the yard, and ventured too near a bonfire of leaves that her mother had made. Her dress caught fire, and in an instant she was enveloped in flames.

Mr. Benedict, who was passing, ran in and wrapped his overcoat about the child, but too late to prevent frightful injuries.

The child was almost entirely paralyzed from her burns, and the physician who was called saw that she could not recover.

She died in great suffering at 2 o'clock this morning. The sad affair has cast a gloom over the entire community.

Funeral services will be held at St. John's church, Dunellen, at 2:30 to-morrow afternoon.

A Dunellen Man Missing.

Geo. Vroom who lives on South avenue, Dunellen, left home last Saturday as usual and has not been seen since. His family are greatly alarmed over his absence.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Franklin S. Smith, teacher of science in the Plainfield public schools, will give an illustrated talk, at the Y. M. C. A. rooms, to-morrow evening, on "The Chemistry of Flame".

Frank C. Green, who formerly kept a big furniture establishment in this city, died at his late residence, 241 West 115th street, New York, after a lingering illness, yesterday. Funeral services will be held from the Seventh-Day Baptist church in this city Friday afternoon at half-past two.

The prettiest sight in the world is a pretty woman's feet in Jersey Lily boots, and since Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup cures all sorts of colds and costs but 25 cents, all women can wear them.

The earth moves. Evidence, you can buy first-class liniment, Salvation Oil, for 25 cents.

ENORMOUS INCREASE FOR KYTE.

He Makes Big Gains All Over, and Most Especially Where He Was "Weakest".

This year the Hon. George Kyte, Republican Assemblyman from this district, goes into the Legislature with bells on. True, he might as well be defeated for all he is allowed any voice or vote in the affairs of State, but then he is a genial and popular fellow, well-liked by all in the house, and the forty Democrats who really compose the Legislature hope he will come down and take his seat just for the pleasure of his association.

This year his vote and his majority were increased everywhere. There was much apathy among the Democrats, and many did not vote. Mr. Flower's fitness for the office was unquestioned, and both parties united in praising the Democratic candidate's clean and upright canvass, but all knew he had no show on earth of election, and he was in consequence neglected. The vote of last year and this is as follows:

	Kyte	Cook	Kyte	Flower
Plainfield	996	804	913	650
Rahway	702	761	552	554
Westfield	246	240	186	163
Fanwood	154	93	183	57
Linden			163	64
Clark	22	39	10	35
Majorities	183		484

Union county as a whole, however, went Democratic, giving as far as heard from, 900 majority for Morris R. Hetfield, (Dem.) for Coroner. John Carroll (Dem.) has carried the First District for Assembly by over 700. Thos. F. Lane (Dem.) has 400 majority in the Second District for Assembly. Elizabeth gives a Democratic majority of over 1,000.

JAMES J. BERGEN AGAIN.

The Finest Speaker the Assembly Ever Knew, Re-elected.

Here is not the least part of the good news that is making Democrats rejoice all over the country:

SOMERVILLE, NOV. 4.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—My majority in this district is 226. J. J. BERGEN.

New Jersey Legislature, 1892.

New Market's Small Republican Margin.

The result of the voting at New Market was 265 votes cast, with a Republican plurality of 13.

—Bills amount ing to $5,700 were presented to the common council Monday night. To pay them, $4,000 had to be borrowed, and a note of $3,500 about to fall due was renewed. Accounts are to be squared up before Jan. 1.

The market is flooded with decoctions under the name of Root Beer. Why should you experiment on such goods when the genuine Hires's Root Beer can be had? It is known to be a safe, delicious, and healthful temperance drink.

More Trouble for Spooner.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 4.—In the suit of the Adams Express Company against Clapp Spooner an amendment was filed yesterday to the original complaint in the Superior Court. The amendment charges him with appropriating money and articles to the amount of $100,000 unlawfully, and asks the court for an order for a pecuniary remuneration, or the return of the amount alleged to have been embezzled.

Secretary Proctor Leaves Washington.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4.—Secretary Proctor left Washington last evening for New York whence he will go to his home in Vermont. Before leaving he turned over the control of the War Department to Assistant Secretary Grant and will only return to receive officially his successor and transfer to him the office of Secretary of War.

Weather Indications.

A Common Sense Remedy.

In the matter of curatives what you want is something that will do its work while you continue to do yours—a remedy that will give you no incofivenience nor interfere with your business. Such a remedy is ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS. These plasters are not an experiment; they have been in use for over thirty years, and their value has been attested by the highest medical authorities, as well as by testimonials from those who have used them. They require no change of diet, and are not affected by wet or cold. Their action does not interfere with labor or business; you can toil and yet be cured while hard at work. They are so pure that the youngest, the oldest, the most delicate person of either sex can use them with great benefit.

Beware of imitations, and do not be deceived by misrepresentations. Ask for ALLCOCK'S, and let no solicitation or explanation induce you to accept a substitute.

CONTRACTOR LOW AND HIS SEWERS.

Mayor Gilbert Presents a Veto, and the Council Over-rule It.

The proposition of J. M. Low of Kingston to build sewers in Plainfield bobbed up again at Monday night's meeting of the common council. First reference to it was made by Mayor Gilbert in the following veto:

To the Honorable Common Council of the City of Plainfield:

GENTLEMEN:—I return herewith, without my approval, "An Ordinance to Provide for Sewerage in the City of Plainfield" adopted Oct. 19, 1891. This ordinance, with the exception of a corrected date, is similar to the one vetoed by me on the 24 ult., and all of the objections urged against the adoption of that ordinance except the one which had reference to the erroneous date apply with equal force to this.

Accompanying this ordinance I find a description of the system which Mr. Low proposes to introduce, by which we are informed that "a main trunk sewer should start from the corner of Richmond and Seventh streets six feet below the surface with a grade of ten feet to the mile, and pass through Seventh street, Franklin place, Ninth street, Central avenue, Eighth street, Plainfield avenue, to Front street, there to be met by another main trunk line, which should start from the intersection of Front and Richmond streets—both to connect with a 24-inch sewer on Front street, pass through Front street to West End avenue, (now Grant avenue), through West End avenue, in embankment, to the outlet sewage tanks at the sewage works, or to continue to points to be agreed upon. The sewage passes through pipes at the outlet, or through sewage tanks at the sewage works, where it is treated with chemicals, the solid ingredients are precipitated and drawn off, while the liquid part is clarified and allowed to filter through into the earth."

Just what this means it is difficult to tell. There is nothing in the description which clearly indicates what Mr. Low proposes to do; he does not say that he is to locate his sewage works at Grant avenue and Front street, although he suggests the possibility of it; he does not say how the sewage is to be disposed of; he leaves us to draw our own inference as to whether it is to be by irrigation, chemical precipitation, or some other way.

That Mr. Low should present his scheme so vaguely and indefinitely is not a matter of surprise, for I am informed that he has never constructed a sewerage system, and he is desirous of having a franchise that will enable him to serve us as best suits his own purposes. But that your honorable body should, on such an unsatisfactory description of his system, and without any detailed plans, be willing to grant him a franchise, is sufficient to justify a great deal of surprise. I think it would be difficult to find another instance of a municipal corporation granting a franchise for so important a work, with so little investigation, without expert advice, and without having before it detailed plans of the proposed work.

What kind of a system are we to have? Is the sewage to be disposed of by chemical precipitation or by irrigation? Are the sewage works to be located at Grant avenue or not? Has ground been selected for the purpose? Have any tests been made to determine the adaptability of the soil to filtration purposes? Who can definitely answer these questions? Surely the people of Plainfield ought to know before a franchise is granted.

The disposal of sewage by chemical precipitation or filtration requires knowledge and experience; it is a difficult problem to deal with, and should only be undertaken under the guidance of men competent to direct us. We shall never be able to reach a satisfactory solution of the sewerage question until we have definitely ascertained what system is best adapted to our needs and how best to obtain it. We cannot afford to put ourselves in the hands of unskillful men; neither can we afford to have Mr. Low or his proposed company experiment with the treatment of sewage by chemical precipitation, irrigation or otherwise so near our doors as Grant avenue.

Respectfully submitted,
A. GILBERT, Mayor.

Oct. 29, 1891.

After ordering the clerk to spread the veto in full on the minutes the council proceeded to take up the vetoed ordinance and to pass it in spite of the mayor's objections.

It was Mr. Hetfield who moved that the ordinance be adopted on final passage. Mr. Ackerman as usual protested. He said that he was sorry to witness such a desire to push the ordinance through. In his opinion there were a great many good suggestions in the mayor's message, and he thought that the councilmen ought to give ear to his good judgment. He concluded by attacking the Low proposition itself, claiming that it was too indefinite, and holding that only experts ought to be employed in such important public works as sewer-building.

Mr. Rushmore heartily coincided with Mr. Ackerman, and told how leading engineers, in an engineering journal in New York city, had thoroughly dissected the Low scheme and had ridiculed it in the eyes of the entire engineering world, holding it up to other cities as an example of how not to build sewers.

Mr. Hetfield responded that the editor of the journal in question lived over the brook, and was jealous because he had not been given a share of local patronage in the sewer matter. Mr. Hetfield continued with the explanation that the Low project offered the only means of getting sewers without bonding the city. Mr. Low was willing to run the sewers to tide-water, or to erect disposal-works, just as the council decreed. The proposed disposal-works would be considerably farther away than Grant avenue. The system proposed was the same as that at Atlantic City, which was most excellent and satisfactory. Atlantic City's sewers were built by William A. Flaig, a former Plainfielder, who had never before built sewers, but who had made his system a most perfect one—the very best that could be procured for Plainfield. It would be unwise—added Mr. Hetfield—to make public all the details. For instance, if it were announced just where the disposal works were to be erected the price of that land would immediately be raised. The Low project—he concluded—was the only one that would give Plainfield the improvement without bonded indebtedness. Under the Low plan only those who used the sewers had to pay for them. But everybody would use them, because they would be cheaper than cess-pools.

The vote adopting the ordinance on final passage, in spite of the Mayor's objections, was as follows:

Ayes—Councilmen Gallup, Hetfield, Moffett, Roberts, Smith, Spangenberg—6.
Noes—Councilmen Ackerman, Ginna, Johnston, Rushmore, See—5.

PLAINFIELD CASES IN COURT.

Decision in the Original Water-Works Contest Is Expected To-Morrow.

The following report was received and filed by the common council Monday night:

To the Honorable Common Council of the City of Plainfield:

GENTLEMEN:—Herewith I submit the titles of causes now pending and undetermined in which the city is interested as a party:

In the Supreme Court there are four causes, as follows:

The State, Israel Lewis, prosecutor, vs. John R. Moore et als (calling themselves the Plainfield Water-Works company, defendants; on certiorari.

This cause has been argued, and a decision is expected on Thursday of this week. Your honorable body is already familiar from my former reports with the questions raised in this case.

The State, Plainfield Gas and Electric Light company, prosecutors, vs. the inhabitants of the city of Plainfield, defendants; on certiorari.

The nature of this action also was described in my last semi-annual report, and the cause will come up for argument at the present November term.

The State, Elias R. Pope, prosecutor, vs. the inhabitants of the city of Plainfield, defendants; on certiorari.

This action presents the question of the validity of the contract with the Plainfield Street Railway company, and the ordinance granting permission to said company to lay the tracks. The taking of testimony has been begun and has been temporarily suspended in view of the proposition of settlement now under consideration of a committee of the common council.

The State, Mason W. Tyler and others, vs. the inhabitants of the city of Plainfield; on certiorari.

This action brings up the ordinance and contract relating to the supplying of the city with water by the Plainfield Aqueduct company in accordance with the proposition of J. M. Low. The prosecutor has not yet filed his reasons, and unless he does so within the first two days of the term beginning Nov. 6, it will be impossible to bring on the argument of the case until the February term of the court. It is not in the power of the city to compel the prosecutor to proceed earlier.

In the Union county court of common pleas the following appeal cases are pending:

William Callahan vs. the treasurer of the city of Plainfield; on appeal.

John Philmore vs. the treasurer of the city of Plainfield; on appeal.

The two last named causes have been set down for Dec. 9.

Respectfully submitted,
CRAIG A. MARSH.

Nov. 2, 1891.

"Esmeralda" By Amateurs, Nov. 19.

The first complete rehearsal of the four-act comedy, "Esmeralda", to be given at the Casino Nov. 19, was held last Saturday evening, and the result proved that the hard work done during the past month by the energetic young ladies and gentlemen engaged in the coming production will be rewarded by a decided success when the play is publicly performed. Amateur actors usually are unwilling to give the necessary time and labor to the proper preparation of the pieces which they undertake, but such has not been the case in regard to the cast secured for "Esmeralda". A competent director was engaged more than a month ago to take entire charge of the rehearsals, and has come from New York at frequent intervals to "coach" the performers in their lines and business. In order to insure thoroughness in the acquiring of these, each rehearsal, until the one given last Saturday, has been devoted to only one act of the play, so that scenes and situations have been practiced and repeated with much more care than is usually the case.

The complete cast, which includes, as will be seen, some of Plainfield's cleverest amateurs, is as follows:

Esmeralda, a mountain flower,
.....Mrs. Wm. L. Saunders
Old Man Rogers, her father...Mr. Wm. R. Cock
Mrs. Rogers, an ambitious woman
.....Miss Maude Bowers
Dave Hardy, a young Mountaineeer
.....Mr. Wm. Pelletier
Jack Desmond, an artist
.....Mr. Edward C. Perkins
Nora Desmond, } his sisters,
Kate Desmond, }
Mrs. Joseph Mason and Miss VanBoskerck
George Drew, a scheming speculator
.....Mr. Wm. L. Saunders
Paul Estabrook, philosopher, artist, etc.
.....Mr. Kaufman
Marquis de Montesaint, an adventurer
.....Mr. H. S. Blake
Nanette, a Parisian maid.....Miss Corliss

Those who have seen the play of "Esmeralda" as presented by professional companies in previous seasons will appreciate the difficulties attending its performance by amateurs. It is perhaps the most ambitious play yet undertaken here by local amateur players, and it is hoped that the hard work that is being so conscientiously done by those interested will meet with due recognition when the performance is submitted to the well-known critical taste of a Plainfield audience on the 19th.

The piece contains a judicious mingling of humor and pathos. The more serious parts are the title role, Esmeralda, (the interpretation of which, by Mrs. Saunders, will be somewhat of a revelation), and the character of Dave Hardy, the lover of Esmeralda, in which Mr. Pelletier has excellent opportunities for strong acting, including some important emotional scenes. The comedy element will be supplied by Mrs. Mason, as Nora Desmond, a flirtatious young artist, by Mr. Cock as an old-fashioned North Carolina farmer, and by Mr. Kaufman as an easy-going, philosophical man of the world.

Particular attention is being paid to the stage-settings, which are being designed and prepared by Joseph Mason. In one scene, representing a conservatory, the stage will be filled with a profusion of potted flowers and palms. Wigs, costumes, and other accessories, will be obtained from New York: in short, every effort will be made to make this performance of "Esmeralda" as complete as possible in every detail.

COUNSELOR REED TO THE RESCUE.

The Borough Appeals to the City to Protect the Peace Street Project.

Charles A. Reed, borough counsel of North Plainfield, was given the floor at Monday night's meeting of the city common council, to protest against the passage of the proposed ordinance to widen Peace street and open it to the brook.

He said that the effect of such action on the part of the city would be to block the consummation of the extension project on the other side. Under the existing law the only way in which North Broadway could be opened was by the appointment of a joint commission. The borough of itself could not open any new thoroughfare except through the procurement of further legislation. If the city opened up the street to the brook, then the proposed thoroughfare would be all in one county, and action under a joint commission of city and borough could not be taken. If the council bided its time the borough residents advocating the scheme would in two weeks present the petition necessary for the appointment of a joint commission, and the enterprise could then be pushed forward by harmonious action.

It seemed to be tacitly agreed that the passage of the proposed ordinance of the city should be deferred pending the presentation of the petition under which both city and borough could act, for the ordinance was not brought up for consideration.

The necessary petition of the borough property-holders along the line of the proposed street has been ready since last Friday, but it has to be advertised ten days before municipal action on it can be taken.

Shiloh's Cough Cure

This is beyon question the most successful Cough Medicine we have ever sold; a few doses invariably cure the worst cases of Cough, Croup and Bronchitis, while its wonderful success in the cure of Consumption is without a parallel in the history of medicine. Since its first discovery it has been sold on a guarantee, a test which no other medicine can stand. If you have a cough we earnestly ask you to try it. Price 10c., 50c. and $1. If your lungs are sore, chest, or back lame, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by J. G. Miller, No. 10 East Front street, Plainfield N.J.

SHOT BY HIS FATHER.

A Youth Murdered Because He Defended His Mother.

MATTEWAN, N. J., Nov. 4.—Because Erin Warne defended his aged mother from the brutal attacks of his father, old Ben Ware, the latter, lay in wait in the bushes yesterday and emptied a shot gun loaded with No. 4 shot into the body of his son as he was passing along the road to his work at the piano factory in this village.

The youth, who is 20 years old, will probably die, for his right arm was shattered, his breast punctured by many shot, and a frightful wound was torn in his side.

The murderous old man made no effort to escape, but waited coolly to be arrested by Officer Disbrow, who locked him in the jail. The people of Matawan are greatly excited over the affair, and much regret is expressed that they did not lynch old Ben before he was safely housed.

The old man is a dangerous character, much feared in the neighborhood.

A Boy Paralyzed By Football.

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Nov. 4.—Football has claimed another victim in this town. Johnnie, the 17-year-old son of Mrs. Patrick Rodgers, is almost completely paralyzed and in a constant delirium. His spinal cord was injured so severely by falling with his back on the knee of the boy who "tackled" him that he cannot now move a muscle in his whole body except his tongue. The doctors say that his recovery is doubtful.

Gen. Grubb Married.

LONDON, Nov. 4.—Gen. E. Burd Grubb, Minister of the United States to Spain, and Miss Violet Sopwith, daughter of the Hon. Thomas Sopwith of Lismore, Scotland, one of the Board of Governors of the Bank of England, were married yesterday. The ceremony took place at St. Stephen's, South Kensington. The Rev. Mr. Sopwith, uncle of the bride, conducted the services.

Must Go Back to Germany.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—John and Marguerite Muller, the young brother and sister who went through the marriage ceremony at the Barge Office on Sunday so that Marguerite could be admitted into the country, must go back to Germany. They will be put aboard the Fuerst Bismarck. The girl is bitterly disappointed at the decision of Gen. O'Beirne.

I WAS so much troubled with catarrh it seriously affected my voice. One bottle of Ely's Cream Balm did the work. My voice is fully restored.—S. F. Liepsner, A. M., pastor of the Olivet Baptist Church, Philadelphia, Pa.

"A GOD SEND is Ely's Cream Balm. I had catarrh for three years. Two or three times a week my nose would bleed. I thought the sores would never heal. Your Balm has cured me."—Mrs. M. A. Jackson, Portsmouth, N. H.

An Apprentice Injured at Pond's.

Norman Darby, better known as "Dick", an apprentice at Pond's, whose home is in Elizabeth, was running a milling machine for the tool makers' gang, yesterday, when he had the first joint of his little finger on the right hand cut off. Dr. Fred. Wharton, of the works, did it up in shape, and the young man left for home. It will probably be some time before he resumes work.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria,
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

The most beautiful woman in New York said that she "ascribed her good health and rosy cheeks to the occasional use of a tablespoonful of pure whiskey before meals. It increased the circulation, sent a warm glow through the system, and gave her a hearty appetite." That is the experience of all who drink pure whiskey moderately. A. R. TUDOR'S Rye Whiskey is warranted absolutely pure and ten years old.

AN ORDINANCE

To provide for sewerage in the city of Plainfield.

The Inhabitants of the City of Plainfield by their Common Council do enact as follows:

Section 1. That upon the approval or final adoption of this ordinance, the consent of the corporate authorities of the city of Plainfield be and the same is hereby given to Joseph M. Low and six others, his associates, four of whom shall be residents of the State of New Jersey, to associate themselves as a body politic and corporate under the name of the Plainfield Sewerage Company, for the purpose of constructing, maintaining and operating a system of sewerage in said city of Plainfield and of supplying the said city and the inhabitants thereof with an adequate means of disposing of sewage, upon and according to the terms and conditions stated in an agreement between this city and said Low, which was approved by this body September twenty-eight, eighteen hundred and ninety-one, and that the Mayor and City Clerk be authorized and instructed to sign the assent of the corporate authorities of the city of Plainfield to the certificate of the incorporation of said company.

Sec. 2. That neither this Ordinance nor said assent shall be construed as authorizing said company to lay their pipes beneath the public roads, streets, avenues and alleys, until after said company shall have fully complied with the terms, conditions and requirements of the act entitled "An Act for the construction, maintenance and operation of systems of sewerage in cities, towns and boroughs", approved June 13, 1890.

Adopted by the Common Council October 19, 1891.

Re-adopted November 2, 1891, notwithstanding the objections of the Mayor.

Attest—J. B. Coward, City Clerk

THEY ACT AS PILOTS.

Little Fish That Guide the Big Fellows to Food.

The Jellyfish and His Lively Pathfinders—How the Shark Finds Most of His Prey—The Hermit Crab and Its Satellites.

It is a popular belief among many seafarers that the shark depends to a greater or less extent upon the pilot fish for information, and is guided by this little attendant to the various tidbits that come in its way. How much truth there is in this would be difficult to determine, but, says the New York Herald, it is barely possible that the curiosity of the shark may be attracted to food by the action of the pilot fish.

Once when sitting in my boat fishing I noticed the scythe-like fin of a large shark moving about in the vicinity. It had evidently scented a bunch of fish which I had hung over the stern; and came up the tide or current in rapidly decreasing circles.

It passed so near that I could have touched the big dorsal fin, and I had an excellent opportunity to note the action of the attendants. There were half a dozen in all, two or three being pilot fish, and the rest the curious sucking fish, or remoras. As the shark swept around the pilots—little striped fellows, three or four inches long—kept at its head, making short excursions from it at every object that appeared like food.

Once when drifting along in the warm waters of the Gulf of Mexico I came upon a number of large jellyfish. Now and then they came lazily to the surface, exposing their rounded, glass-like domes. Tipping one over to obtain a glance at the interior and its maze of tentacles, I noticed a number of little fishes darting about, as if terribly alarmed that their umbrella had been upset.

They darted here and there, one or two taking refuge beneath the boat, but when the jellyfish righted itself back they swam, and I could see them among the tentacles, evidently perfectly at home in a maze of what are deadly weapons to a large number of fish.

One of the most attractive pilots or consorts is found up under the physalia, or Portuguese man-of-war. The latter is a floating community of zoöids, left upon the water by a bubble, richly tinted with pink and purple, from the upper surface of which rises a sail that can be furled or drawn in or thrown to the breeze, as the case may be.

From the lower portion extend long streamers or tentacles of an intense purple and a virulent poison—so powerful that the slightest touch is fatal to fish of large size. Up among these poison darts live a number of fish of the exact hue of the tentacles—a remarkable case of protective resemblance.

If appearances are to be considered, then certainly the sea anemones must be included among the pilots, as there is one kind, if not several, that in some incomprehensible way takes up its position on the tiptop of a crab's back and there lives, moving about with its host, and we can imagine keeping its myriad eyes open for the main chance; but that it tells what it sees to the crab that is thus forced to bear it we may readily doubt. Why the anemone take this position, and why the crab permits it, open up a wide field for speculation.

Something Off.

A Maine man, notorious for his "nearness," according to the Kennebec Journal, lately went into a meat shop, and inquired the price of a certain soup bone.

The proprietor of the shop is a generous fellow, and in answer to the old man's question he said:

"Oh, I'll give you that."

The customer put his hand to his ear. He is hard of hearing, and had missed the reply.

"Can't you take something off of that?" he asked.

The dealer took pity on him.

"Yes," he said, "call it ten cents." And the old man went home with a comfortable sense of having driven a good trade.

EPILEPTIC FITS CURED.

A Specific Discovered At Last.

For years a cure for Epilepsy, St. Vitus' Dance, Hysteria, and other fits has been sought. It is now conceded that the long-needed remedy has been found in Dr. Greene's Nervura, which has, by curing thousands of cases, proved that it is an absolute specific for these terrible nervous complaints. Purely vegetable and harmless; sold by druggists, $1.

"My son had been troubled with fits for the past ten years. He has had as many as ten in one day. Before I had used one bottle of Dr. Greene's Nervura I could see a marked improvement in his nervous system. The fits did not occur so often, and were not so severe, and his general health seemed better. I continued the Nervura, and it effected a permanent cure.

MRS. W. O. HITCHCOCK,
85 Maple St., Jersey City, N. J."

"My son has been troubled with epilepsy, loss of appetite and had no ambition to do anything. He took Dr. Greene's Nervura. It made him a new boy. The fits have left him, his whole system is built up anew, and he is enjoying perfect health. It is the best medicine I ever used, and has no equal!

MR. W. SCHUM,
1072 First Ave., N Y City."

"My boy was very nervous, and had 4 or 5 fits every day. After using Dr. Greene's medicines three weeks, he began to get well, and has had no fits since! Ten doctors gave him up as incurable. The doctors and my neighbors can hardly believe their eyes when they see my boy all strong and well! MRS. EMMA SWEENEY, 13 Ballard St., Fall River, Mass."

N. B. Dr. Greene, the successful specialist in curing all forms of nervous and chronic diseases, 35 W. 14th St., New York, can be consulted, free, personally, or by letter. Call or write him about your case, or send for symptom blank to fill out, and a letter fully explaining your disease, giving advice, etc., will be returned free. 9 15 1d ttas

HAVE you seen the Bannockburn Flannels? Nice they are; just the thing for Children's wear, and for Ladies' House Wrappers. Price 12½c.——Special attention is called to our stock of Comfortables. We handle nothing but White Cotton filled Quilts, and have them made in town, and are made of the best quality.——'Tis the general verdict of all who have seen our display of Fall and Winter Jackets, that our styles are the newest, that our garments are better made, and that our prices are the lowest.——We have many improvements in our House-Furnishing Goods Department, and you will find many articles that will interest you. We have the largest assortment, and sell at a closer figure than all others.——There are a few more of those Decorated English Porcelain Toilet Sets left at $2 40 each, and if you want Hall, Parlor and Hanging Lamps, we are rock bottom on them.——Gentlemen, we have received another case of those 48c night shirts. Look at them.——Another good thing that we won't have long is, 100 genuine Hand-made Turkish Rugs, that cost to import, $9 each—our price $3.75.——How about Underwear? We have every thing for Ladies, Gentlemen and Children, in White, Red and Natural Wool, in all qualities and sizes, and our prices are way below the lowest.——We commence this week another sale of Granite Ironwear, at about half the regular price.

REVISED RETURNS

The First Figures Not Materially Changed.

N. Y. LEGISLATURE IN DOUBT.

Democrats and Republicans Claim a Majority on Joint Ballot.

Flower's Plurality 44,574, Russell's 6,913, Brown's 30,000, McKinley's Over 19,000, Boies' About 16,000—The Republican Plurality in Pennsylvania Over 56,000—Big Pluralities for Rosendale, Rice and Danforth on the New York Democratic Ticket.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—As nearly as can be ascertained before the official count is announced the results in the different States holding elections of importance, are as follows:

PENNSYLVANIA.—Gregg, Republican candidate for Auditor-General, has 57,484 plurality, from the returns received, and Morrison for State Treasurer, 54,488. The proposed constitutional convention was snowed under by 154,590.

NEW JERSEY—Both branches of the Legislature will be Democratic, the Assembly having 43 Democrats and 17 Republicans; the Senate, 15 Democrats and 6 Republicans.

NEW YORK—Late returns give Flower's plurality at 44,574, and Sheehan's 30,226. Both sides claim the Legislature, and it will take the official count to determine the result. The Democrats say the Senate is theirs by 2 majority, and the Republicans claim it for their side by the same number. The Assembly is claimed by the Democrats by 2, and by the Republicans by from 4 to 10.

IOWA—Gov. Boies' plurality is placed at 10,000. Senate will consist of 25 Republicans, 24 Democrats, and one People's Party man. The House will have 55 Republicans, 44 Democrats, and one People's Party man. The Democrats claim the rest of the State ticket, but the result is still doubtful.

MASSACHUSETTS—The Democrats have elected Russell Governor by 6,913, and the rest of the ticket is Republican by about the same plurality. The Legislature is largely Republican.

OHIO—McKinley defeated Gov. Campbell by about 19,000, and the Republicans have control of both branches of the Legislature with a majority of 30 on joint ballot. The Republicans consequently will elect a United States Senator.

MARYLAND—Brown, Dem., will have over 30,000 plurality for Governor. The Legislature on joint ballot will stand 103 Democrats; 14 opposition. There are but 4 Republicans in the Senate.

IN NEW YORK.

Flower's Plurality 44,574—Legislature Claimed by Both Sides.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—The returns this morning make Flower's plurality 44,574 and Sheehan's 30,246. Both sides claim the Legislature, and it is likely that its complexion will not be settled until the official vote is announced.

According to the Republicans the Senate will be composed of 15 Democrats and 17 Republicans, and the Assembly 66 Republicans and 62 Democrats. On the other hand the Democrats claim the Senate 17 to 15, and the Assembly 65 to 63, with a majority of 4 on joint ballot.

On the State ticket the pluralities of Frank Rice, Danforth, and Simon W. Rosendale, ran ahead of Flower's. Rosendale's is the highest, about 62,000. Rice and Danforth have about 60,000. Sheehan's was about 54,000, and the others had about 58,000.

The Socialistic-Labor vote was 5,111, against 2,549 three years ago.

PENNSYLVANIA'S VOTE.

Over 56,000 for Gregg for Auditor-General—Constitutional Convention.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 5. — Complete figures from nearly all the counties in the State, including Philadelphia and Allegheny, and estimates for the others show a plurality of 57,000 for Gregg, for Auditor-General, and 54,488 for Morrison (Rep.), for State Treasurer.

Only ten counties in the State gave majorities for the holding of a constitutional convention. In 42 counties there is a majority of 154,590 against holding the convention.

The counties favorable to the convention are: Bedford, Carbon, Columbia, Elk, Fayette, Lackawaun, Luzerne, Pike, Warren and Wayne.

RUSSELL'S PLURALITY 6,913.

The Rest of the Ticket Republican by 6,000—Legislature Republican.

BOSTON, Nov. 5.—The plurality received by Gov. Russell is not yet accurately known, but all but three small towns have been heard from. Without these towns the figures are as follows: Russell, 154,882; Allen, 147,769; Russell's plurality, 6,913. The missing towns will not lower these figures more than a score, if at all.

The Republicans have elected the rest of their State ticket by about the same plurality, showing that Gov. Russell ran fully 14,000 votes ahead of his ticket. The Republicans have carried both branches of the Legislature.

How Col. Allen Feels.

BOSTON, Nov. 5.—Col. Allen, when asked what he had to say in regard to the result of the election, said: "The contest is over, its anxieties are over, and the people have declared their will. I shall return to my business with no personal regrets, entirely content to accept the result. I wish to thank my friends for kindnesses shown me, and I am especially grateful to those who have worked so earnestly for my election. I have no doubt of its success in the National election in 1892."

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—U. S. Gov't Report, Aug. 17, 1889.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Donaldson's Close Shave.

AMSTERDAM, N. Y., Nov. 5.—Harvey J. Donaldson, Republican, is elected Senator in the 8th District by 60 majority. The usual Republican majority in the district is from 1,500 to 2,000. Gove, Democratic, has been elected to the Assembly by 16 majority.

A Democrat After 33 Years.

NORWICH, N. Y., Nov. 5.—Lally, Dem., who is elected sheriff, is the first Democratic sheriff elected in this county in 33 years.

IN IOWA.

Democrats Claim 10,000 Plurality For Boies, Legislature Probably Republican.

DES MOINES, Ia., Nov. 5.—The latest returns indicate Boies plurality at 10,000. Eighty-eight counties give him 12,806, the other eleven, two years ago went 3,084 Republican, reducing the first figure to 9,722. But proportionate gains in these eleven should increase the plurality to 10,000.

The Democrats claim the election of their whole State ticket, as it runs well up with Boies. Dey, for Railroad Commissioner runs ahead in many *counties. The Senate stands: Twenty-*five Democrats, 24 Republicans and one Independent. The House stand 55 Republican, 44 Democrats and one Peoples' Party man.

Gov. Boies arrived in this city last night from Waterloo and his carriage was drawn through the streets by a great crowd of enthusiastic Democrats. A great jollification meeting will be held here Saturday night.

M'KINLEY'S PLURALITY.

It May Reach 19,000—Leg'slature Republican by 30.

CANTON, O., Nov. 5.—Major McKinley is quietly resting at the Hotel Harford in this city. This morning he received advices from Chairman Hahn to the effect that his plurality would not fall short of 19,000 and that the Legislature would be Republican by upwards of 30 on joint ballot.

Mr. McKinley has been flooded with congratulatory telegrams from all over the country. Among those who sent messages were President Harrison, Governor Campbell, J. Sloat Fassett, Senator Sherman, Ben Butterworth, ex-Governor Foraker, Secretary Foster and General Alger. The Governor-elect will remain in Canton until inauguration day. To-night he will address a jollification meeting of Republicans.

NEW JERSEY.

The Legislature Democratic in Both Branches.

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 5.—The New Jersey election results in the choice of a Legislature Democratic in both branches. Complete and corrected returns show that the next Senate will stand 15 Democrats to 6 Republicans, and the Assembly 48 Democrats to 17 Republicans.

The Senate contests were in Burlington, Cape May, Hudson, Hunterdon, Middlesex, Passaic and Sussex counties.

The Assembly fight was in every district.

In Hudson couney the entire Democratic county ticket is elected.

Brown's Plurality in Maryland.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 5.—Frank Brown for Governor carried the State by something over 30,000 plurality. The Legislature will stand on joint ballot 103 Democrats, 14 opposition. The Senate will have four Republicans, who are hold-over Senators. In the House of Delegates there are seven Republicans and three Fusionists. Chief Justice Briscoe, Democrat, carries his judicial circuit in Southern Maryland by over 1,800, while in the Western Maryland circuit, Mr Stake, the Republican candidate for Associate Judge, is elected by over 600 majority. Mr. Roberts was elected in Carroll, Howard and Anne Arundel without opposition.

Flower's Reception in Watertown.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., Nov. 5.—Hon. R. P. Flower, returning last evening from New York City, was received by thousands of citizens, who tendered him a grand ovation. He was met at the train by a delegation of the Jeffersonian Club, which is proud of the distinction of having first named Mr. Flower for Governor. A carriage, drawn by six white horses was in waiting, which the Governor-elect entered. A parade was then formed and Mr. Flower was escorted through the city to his home where Mayor Porter made a few remarks of welcome. Mr. Flower responded in a very feeling manner.

NEW ENGLAND BREVITIES.

Tony Hart, the well known comedian, died yesterday at the Worcester (Mass.) Lunatic Asylum.

Destructive fires are raging in the woods extending from Wilton to New Canaan, near Norwalk, Conn.

Congressman Boutelle and Edward P. Boutelle have purchased the interest of the late Benjamin A. Burr in the "Whig and Courier," at Bangor, Me.

The suit of the C. F. Jewett Publishing Company against A. M. Thayer, over the publication of Gen. Butler's book, is on trial in the Supreme Court at Boston.

SPECULATION DID IT

What Caused the Collapse of the Maverick Bank.

FUNDS USED TO BACK DEALS.

The Comptroller of the Currency Said to Have Known the Facts.

The Run on the Five-cent Savings Bank Continuing—President Beal Not Yet Appointed Receiver of the Maverick, Through the Opposition of Hyde and Potter—The Banks Favor Mr. Beal.

BOSTON, Nov. 5.—The facts regarding the loans of the Maverick Bank have been in possession of the Comptroller of the Currency since last January, and it is now intimated that another Comptroller is likely to be appointed before long.

The general loan account outside of the $2,400,000 due from directors and the Evans losses is good, and shows good judgment and careful banking. The directors' loans have still considerable collateral behind them.

Speculation is the one word that explains all—speculation in stocks and grain, with the Maverick Bank funds backing the deals.

The first great speculation of the Maverick Bank was by Messrs. French and Potter in New York & New England. It was successful from a pecuniary point of view, but in that success lay concealed the ultimate ruin of the bank.

In the New York & New England mystery deal the bank's funds were used to a startling degree, and the system of operations then begun culminated in the ruin of the bank and its directors.

Although the Maverick has been known as a speculative bank, no one outside of Mr. Evans and the bank directors could have imagined the extent of the speculations.

It is now not to be wondered at that when the death of Irving A. Evans was announced that President Potter, in the directors' room, should have physically collapsed, but it is a wonder, in the light of present revelations, that he should for so many days have patched up affairs and stemmed the current.

The run on the Five-Cent Savings Bank continues. The banking-room is crowded, mostly with women. Policemen are guarding the entrance and endeavoring to keep the growing crowd moving.

The assigners of the firm of Irving A. Evans & Co., as yet have not secured a majority of the creditors upon the assignment papers. The difficulty seems to be the unwillingness of the creditors to have their names made public.

It is believed, however, that a majority will ultimately sign.

T. P. Beal, President of the Second National Bank, had not received his appointment as receiver of the Maverick Bank up to last night. It is thought the papers are withheld at the instance of Messrs Hyde and Potter, who object to the appointment.

The appointment of Mr. Beal would likely lead to the distribution of $2,000,000 in the Maverick's vaults among the National banks.

It is understood the banks favor Mr. Beal's appointment, and would not care to act under agreement to relieve depositors of the Maverick unless a thorough banking man, who had their fullest confidence was put in charge.

Jonas H. French, the Maverick Bank director, has been unable to obtain satisfactory bonds, and he will have to remain in the custody of a United States Deputy Marshal. Both of the bondsmen offered were rejected by Commissioner Hallett.

THE PENNSYLVANIA SENATE.

Counsel Now Summing Up—Adjournment Next Week.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 5.—No business was done at the session of the Senate last night, owing to the absence of a quorum. To-day the defense will sum up the evidence in the case of State Treasurer Boyer and will endeavor to convince the Senate that the charges of the Governor have not been sustained.

Attorney-General Hensel will follow in an argument to prove the testimony justifies an address to the Governor asking for the removal of the State Treasurer.

He may also give his view as to the jurisdiction of the Senate to pass on the case before it, so largely dwelt on by counsel for the defendant. Next week the extra session will probably come to an end.

Another Ejection in Cork.

CORK, Nov. 5.—The Parnellites stoned the anti-Parnellites from the roof of the Cork market yesterday. Wm. O'Brien received a blow on the head, and Dr. Tanner was struck to the ground. The man who was driving the car in which the two set had his skull fractured. Several Parnellites made an attack on the M. P.'s and their friends with sticks and were stoutly resisted. The hospital is kept busy attending to the injured.

FIVE HUNDRED CAPTURED.

Convicts Released by the Miners Rearrested in Kentucky.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 5.—While there have been rumors in circulation in East Tennessee during the last two days that a mob intended to attack the branch prisons at Tracy City and Inman, it is thought there is little foundation for them.

There are 620 convicts at these prisons, and extra guards have been placed on duty at each of them.

Speaking of the release of the convicts the Governor said:

"There should have been a heavy guard at each of these prisons. The trouble has been that the lessees and the representatives of the State have each refused to pay extra guards and there have been none. The stockades should have been defended with powder and ball.

"The two remaining prisons must be defended vigorously, for doing so is not only sustaining the law, but it is defending the good citizens of the State against danger from criminals at large. The prisons must be guarded and the matter must be settled afterward to the counties."

Several heavy boxes, supposed to contain arms, have been sent by express from the State armory to the officials at the prisons.

Gov. Buchanan has ordered the State Superintendent of prisons to take vigorous action.

It is certain that a mob would not now move on the Tracy City and Inman prisons unless they were determined to do or die.

Gov. Buchanan, in an interview, could not say whether the leaders of the mob, if arrested, could be convicted in Anderson County.

Dispatches received from several points in Kentucky state that over 500 convicts have been captured and are held to await instructions from the State or the lessees.

Governor Buchanan has offered a reward of $5,000 for the arrest and conviction of the leader of the mob at Lover Springs, and one of $250 for every man convicted of participation in the riot.

SEVENTEEN ARE DEAD.

The Terrible Fatality in the Anaconda Mine, at Butte, Mon.

BUTTE CITY, Mon., Nov. 5.—Of the 19 men who fell in the cage at the Anaconda Mine early yesterday morning, 17 are dead, while there are no hopes of recovery for the other two.

When the time to shift the gangs had come, and a cageful of miners returning from work stepped out into the open air, their places were at once taken by 19 men, who were to take up the work that had just been abandoned, and the cage was started towards the depths below.

The rope had been unwound but a couple of times from the slowly revolving windlass when there was a sudden snap and a cry of horror from the shaft in which the cage had but a moment before disappeared. The rope had broken and the cage with its 19 inmates was precipitated to the bottom of the mine. It was some time before any assistance could be sent them and then little could be done.

The Anaconda mine is the biggest in this territory. It employs 400 men, and was reopened, after a long closing, Oct. 23.

Minister Carter's Funeral.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5.—The arrangements for Mr. H. A. P. Carter, Minister to the United States from Hawaii, have been completed. The funeral will take place in New York to-morrow, and the remains will be taken to Hawaii for interment.

The War Department has ordered a company and band to attend the funeral, and the Navy Department will be represented by an appropriate escort. The State Department will be represented by Sevelon Brown, its chief clerk.

Smallpox and Typhoid in Maine.

PORTLAND, Me., Nov. 5.—Dr. Luce, who was sent by the State Board of Health to investigate reports of smallpox in places which are in constant communication with Maine cities, states that the disease is very prevalant along the line of the Canadian Pacific; that there have been 62 cases in towns. There is an epidemic of typhoid fever in this city and vicinity. Many cases are reported, and it is thought that the trouble is due to impurities in the water.

Defaulter Hyer's Arrest.

JERSEY CITY, Nov. 5. — Application will be made to Gov. Abbett of New Jersey to procure the extradition of John Hyer, the defaulter, who absconded from Jersey City on Oct. 24, and who has just been arrested at San Francisco. He was the cashier in William Harney & Son's branch real estate office. The firm has found that Hyer's peculations are approximately $6,000.

He Worried Over Business Affairs.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Nov. 5.—Horace E. Allen committed suicide yesterday by drowning himself. Allen was a prominent citizen and was known throughout the Masonic order of the State, being District Deputy Grand Master. The act is attributed to overwork causing loss of sleep and worry over business affairs. He had been acting very strangely for the past two weeks.

Two Killed by the Cars.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 5.—Peter M. Muller and Francis McGuinness were killed at the grade crossing of the Pennsylvania Railroad last night. A freight train, west bound passed in front of them, and they were proceeding across the track when a wild engine bound for New York dashed into their carriage. Both men were old and well known residents of this city

Car Stables Burned.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 5.—The car stables of the Rapid Transit line on Bergen street were burned yesterday, entailing a loss of about $50,000. The origin of the fire is not known.

IS IT A REVOLUTION?

Martial Law and Dictatorship Reported in Brazil.

MUCH ANXIETY MANIFESTED.

Another Demand Likely to be Made Upon the Resources of Our Navy.

Rumored that the Brazilian Congress Has Been Dissolved—The Disturbances at Rio Janeiro in October—The President in Ill Health and Opposed to a Strong Party—No Trouble for Foreigners Anticipated.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5.—A dispatch which has been received from Rio Janeiro, brings news of what seems to be another revolution. Congress, the dispatch says, has been dissolved and martial law proclaimed at Rio Janeiro, and throughout the provinces. The cablegram also announces that a dictatorship has been established in Brazil.

Fuller dispatches regarding the revolution announced to have occurred in Brazil are anxiously awaited here by financiers and merchants who have large interests at stake in that country. It is recalled that early in October and again about the middle of October similar reports were circulated regarding the condition of Brazil.

An investigation resulted in an official statement to the effect that perfect order prevailed everywhere, and that the financial condition of the country was never better. It was also asserted at the time that it was expected that a surplus amounting to $15,000,000 would be shown by the budget of 1892. Marshal Deodoro da Fonseca, at that period, was announced to have entirely recovered from the illness he had been suffering from for some time.

The reported revolutionary movement is likely to cause another demand upon the already strained resources of the navy, for it is regarded as necessary for the protection of American interests that a United States naval force be at hand there in case of a formidable outbreak. The only vessels regularly attached to the South Atlantic station now in the vicinity of Rio de Janeiro are the Essex and the Tallapoosa. The first is an old wooden cruiser, and the second is worn out, unserviceable, and offered for sale.

The Boston is somewhere of the Brazilian coast en route to the Pacific, but it is not probable that she will be detained. The Yorktown, however, was at Bahia, Brazil, Saturday, and she will probably be ordered by cable to remain there or return to Santos, notwithstanding the fact that she is also on her way to the Pacific station. Meanwhile the work of repair on the Newark at Boston is being pressed, and in case of emergency Admiral Gherardi's flagship, the Philadelphia, now on her way to the West Indies from New York, could be ordered by cable to proceed to Rio de Janeiro.

That there were disturbances of a serious nature at Rio Janeiro early in October was not entirely denied, but it was said that they were of a purely local character. They started during the night of Oct. 8, at the Italian theatre, and the trouble soon spread to adjacent streets.

The police arrested many of the rioters, but, being outnumbered, were compelled to call upon the troops for protection. A force of cavalry, consequently, was sent to the scene, and the troopers were compelled to make several charges upon the mob before order was restored.

A number of people were killed and many more were injured during the disturbance, which is said to have its origin in a political intrigue or conspiracy regarding the succession to the Presidency, the question having assumed prominence owing to the reported weak state of the President's health.

THE POPE MAKES HIS WILL.

He is Said to Be Losing Strength and Shows Symptoms of Paralysis.

ROME, Nov. 5.—At an audience given by Pope Leo to the Bishop of Limerick the Pontiff asked many questions as to the situation in Ireland, and appeared affected by the death of Parnell.

The Pope is said to be losing strength. He shows symptoms of partial paralysis, and in October he caused his temporal and spiritual wills to be prepared.

He disclaims any personal feeling as to the choice of a successor, and by his temporal will his property is entrusted to four Cardinals for certain specified purposes.

His property consists chiefly in a deposit in the Bank of England and in freehold and leasehold investments made in Great Britain as a precaution in the event of having to leave Rome.

Judge McAdam Will Sue.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—Judge McAdam, of the Superior Court of this city, has decided to sue about ten newspapers, all but one of which are published in other counties, because of articles and editorials published by them concerning the charges made by John I. Davenport against him prior to election. They alleged that Judge McAdam had been lazy in the naturalization of citizens and that improper cases of naturalization had been passed by him.

NEW YORK NEWS IN BRIEF.

The condition of Miss Belsinger, who was murderously assaulted yesterday in White Plains by a tramp, is critical.

John Kremer, janitor of five flat houses in New York, shot his wife, Mary, yesterday morning, and within an hour was found hanging dead in an airshaft.

The case of Dr. Charles A. Briggs, charged with heresy, has been dismissed by the New York Presbytery by a vote of 94 against 30. The committee on prosecution will, however, appeal to the Synod.

RIOT IN CHINA.

Reward Offered for Escaped Siberian Prisoners, Dead or Alive.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 5.—Chinese advices by the steamship City of Rio Janeiro bring the particulars of a riot in the Province of Fukien. The seat of the trouble was Tekhua. It was attacked by 3,000 insurgents. One of the inhabitants of the place fell into the hands of the insurgents. He was nailed to a board and literally cut to pieces. He was offered as a sacrifice to the flag.

After three days of unsuccessful siege the insurgents succeeded in gaining an entrance to the city by scaling the walls under the cover of their own fire.

A desperate struggle followed. The first act of the leader of the insurgents was to liberate the prisoners. He then went in search of the Magistrate and his family. The Deputy Magistrate was last seen fighting hand to hand with a superior force.

A number of escaped Prisoners from Siberia have been captured. The Russian government is paying 50 roubles for live criminals and 75 for dead ones.

THE REPORT DENIED.

World's Fair Commissioner to Chili Has Not Been Withdrawn.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5.—At the Latin-American Department of the World's Columbian Exposition in this city emphatic contradiction is given to the dispatch from Chicago to the effect that the Commissioner to Chili had been withdrawn by order of Director-General Davis. The World's Fair Commissioner to Chili is assigned to Bolivia also and during the recent troubles has been in the latter republic.

He did not return to Chili until after the death of Balmaceda and the establishment of the new government, when he was assured by the leaders of the Junta that as soon as Presidential election was over and the reorganization of the government complete the plans for the representation of Chili at the exposition would be acted upon, and that a complete representation of the marvellous resources of the country would be sent to Chicago in 1893.

Kenny and Clancy Denounce O'Brien.

DUBLIN, Nov. 5.—Dr. Kenny and John Joseph Clancy, M. P., both join in denouncing William O'Brien for revealing confidential documents relating to the Boulogne conference. They declare that O'Brien purposely suppressed the fact that he had agreed that Parnell should have the power to veto Irish support of any Home Rule bill proposed in Parliament, and the same power over all important legislation proposed by the Liberals in Ireland. They say that nobody supposed that Parnell's retirement would be permanent or even lengthy. Harrington and William Redmond confirm the statement of Kenny and Clancy regarding the proposed power of veto to be bestowed on Parnell.

A Priest for Fifty Years.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 5.—The golden jubilee of the Right Rev. Monsignor Nicolas Cantwell, vicar-general of the Roman Catholic archdiocess of Philadelphia, was celebrated yesterday morning in St. Philip de Neris Church, of which the venerable priest has been rector for the past 50 years.

Corbett Wants the Stakes $10,000.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 5.—Jim Corbett, who appears in "After Dark," at the Bijou Theatre this week, received the following telegram from the California Athletic Club last night: "Will give $7,500 for a fight between you and Maher, the Irish champion." Corbett answered as follows: "It must be $10,000 or no go."

NEWS OF THE DAY.

Ex-Gov. Albert S. Marks, of Tennessee, died suddenly at Nashville, yesterday.

The liabilities of Hirshfeld & Wolf, bankers of Berlin amount to $300,000 marks.

The Moore desk works at Indianapolis burned yesterday. Loss, $70,000; insurance, $35,000.

Sigfried Gosh, a German in South San Francisco hacked his wife and infant son to death yesterday with a hatchet and then hung himself.

Thomas, brother of Timothy Healy, has been selected to contest Wexford, made vacant by the resignation of John E. Redmond, now contesting Cork.

—Clifford Barnes, general secretary of the Yale University Y. M. C. A., will be one of the speakers at the men's meeting to be held in the M. E. church next Sunday afternoon at 4:15.

—Drill engine 30 broke a rail of one of the switches and got off the track near the freight house this afternoon, and the work of putting it back on the rails afforded an interesting sight for a small crowd.

—The Plainfield Choral society never before had so large and well balanced a chorus as that of this season. There are 120 voices including plenty of that unusual element of a Plainfield chorus—tenors.

—The Democratic voters of this city will meet at Cutter's hall, Friday evening, at 7:30 o'clock, to nominate ward councilmen and delegates to the city convention to be held at the same place Tuesday evening of next week.

—An entertainment will be given at Hope chapel, to-night, under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society. The admission will be but 10 cents. The proceeds will go to the building fund. Ice-cream and cake will be served. Everybody is invited.

—The municipal election in Plainfield will take place Dec. 1. The city charter specifies the first Monday in December. Therein it differs from the law governing State elections, which always take place the first Tuesday after the first Monday of the month.

—The Plainfield Crescents and the Elizabeth Athletic club will bowl at Elizabeth to-night. The Crescent team is as follows: Reed, Thiers, Vail, VanWinkle, Teel, Williams, Arnold, Rogers, Hetfield and H. C. VanEmburgh. Substitutes—Doane and Emerson.

—Mr. Flower's defeat need surprise no one. His success was never expected for a moment. He acted a disinterested part in running at all, and showed himself to be a worthy scion of the same tree that bore his namesake and cousin, now the Governor of New York State.—Elizabeth Herald

PARTICULAR MENTION.

W. F. Bartlett, the Republican nominee for councilman in the Fourth ward, is an employe of the Pond Machine Tool works.

Police captain George W. Grant is improving rapidly. He is looking forward with much pleasure to a carriage drive, in a day or two. It will be his first venture out of doors after a long siege of illness.

"Such Stuff as Dreams are Made Of" is the title of a story which John Mead Howells has contributed to Wide-Awake. This young man is the clever son of a distinguished father, William Dean Howells, and the nephew of the late Frederick G. Mead of East Front street.

John F. Plummer who was formerly prominent in Plainfield society and in business and political circles in New York city where he was head of the extensive dry goods commission house of John F. Plummer & Co., which failed a year or two ago, has arranged to found a town in the State of Washington, to be known as Everett, the name of his youngest son. It is said that with him in the enterprise are a number of his old associates in the dry goods trade and some of the Standard Oil capitalists.

Eleanor B. Jones, widow of William Llewellyn Jones, late of this city, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. H. B. Bannard of Long Branch, yesterday. The funeral will take place from there to-morrow at three o'clock. Mrs. Jones was a Miss Davenport of Somerville, and quite wealthy in her own right. Her husband also left some means. Mrs. Bannard, her only child, is the wife of the Pennsylvania railroad's Chief Engineer of Maintenance of Way. Before her marriage to him she was the widow of one of the New Brunswick Janeways, and is the mother of Hugh Janeway, Princeton college's prince of foot-ball players.

One or Two Friends.

I have been using Dr. Deane's Dyspepsia Pills in my own case with marked success, and upon my recommendation have induced one or two friends to try them, with pleasing results. L. E. BENEDICT, Editor Ellenville Press.

THE CITY WINS THE FIGHT.

The Supreme Court Holds the Plainfield Ordinance Constitutional, and the Water-Works Contract Valid.

[SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE PRESS.]

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 5.—The city wins the Lewis case. The act is held constitutional, and the contract valid.

[The case in question is that of The State, Israel Lewis, prosecutor, vs. John R. Moore et als (calling themselves the the Plainfield Water-works company), defendants; on certiorari. The contract at stake was that granted by the Plainfield Common Council to the company managed by Charles K. Moore of Fanwood. Israel Lewis was merely a figurehead chosen by the present Water Supply company's stock-holders to defeat the water-works project. The contest was a most bitter one, and corporation counsel Craig A. Marsh deserves the utmost credit for bringing the matter to a successful issue for the city and securing a recognition by the courts of the validity of the city's ordinances.

JUSTICE NASH AROUSED.

He Vituperates the Crescent Avenue Republicans and Threatens to "Swot" Their Candidate.

A little flurry of excitement was caused at the Republican primary in the Second Ward last evening, and indications were apparent of internal dissension in the ranks. Most of the voters turned out prepared to nominate a list of city convention delegates that had been prepared, and that were finally elected as elsewhere announced; but no sooner had the ticket been nominated than Vincent W. Nash jumped to his feet, waved a ballot in the air, and with considerable emphasis sneered at what he termed the "church" ticket, and the "little parlor circle centring around the Crescent Avenue church" that was "trying to run politics in the ward". He evidently did not want anyone to make the very natural mistake of supposing that he was a member of that "kid-gloved aristocracy", for he heaped vials of scorn and wrath upon it, and said that he spoke for his representatives the workingmen, the people who lived as well as slept here. He concluded his tirade with the announcement, in a very positive manner, that "You can't have it; you shan't have it!" —meaning that the "church ticket" candidate would not be permitted by him and his constituents to have the upper hand of the party in the ward. He said that the "parlor circle" had nominated Lovell, and Lovell had been "swotted" at the polls; and he intimated that he would see to it that the "kid-gloved" contingent should again undergo the elegant process of "swotting".

Nobody paid much attention to Mr. Nash's ebullition, and the voting calmly proceeded, with only slight opposition to the prepared ticket. As Nash subsequently got the nomination for justice of the peace, he may calm down before election and reconsider his threat to defeat the "parlor clique" that he claims is seeking to rule his own party.

Funeral of Walter V. Adams.

Funeral services over the remains of little Walter V. Adams were held at the residence of the lad's parents on Madison avenue yesterday afternoon. The body was encased in a little white casket, covered with bunches, bouquets, and baskets of flowers. At the head of the casket was a beautiful pillow bearing the words "Our Darling". At the side of the casket was a large anchor from the primary department of the Trinity Reformed church Sunday-school. The class of which Walter was a member were present, accompanied by their teacher, Miss Runyon, and each one (seven in number) went up to the casket and placed a rose beside their little friend and classmate. The scene was very affecting. The Rev. Mr. Schenck officiated at the service, and before finishing he spoke tenderly and lovingly to the class, who were near the casket. Hymns were sung by Mrs. E. H. Bird, Mrs. J. C. VanDyke, Miss M. Williams, Elmer E. Runyon, and E. J. Shaw. The remains were taken to Mt. Pleasant Cemetery, Newark, for interment, on the 2:07 train, accompanied by the family, a few friends, and the Rev. Mr. Schenck.

Charley Hand Says "If You Tax Me, Tax 'em All."

As soon as the attention of Mayor Gilbert was directed by THE PRESS to the fact that a merry-go-round was being exhibited in the rink without a license, Charles Hand, the owner of the building, was required to pay $5 a month and warned that the business must be conducted in a manner that will meet with the Mayor's approval.

Hand has given notice that he will make a complaint against every other public hall in the city that has an entertainment of any nature to which an admission price is charged. He says he'll make them pay a license, too. The ordinance, however, excepts entertainments "Given by any society or association located in and paying taxes to the City of Plainfield"; and also vests in the Mayor the authority to decide "Whether a license is required."

Columbus discovered America and Edison invented the phonograph, but it remained for Dr. Bull to invent the remedy of the age, Cough Syrup, the kingly cure. At all dealers for 25 cents.

REPUBLICANS NAME THEIR MEN.

Johnston Is Re-Nominated, and Bartlett and Marsh Are the Other Candidates, for Councilmanic Honors.

The attendance at the Republican primaries in Plainfield last night was large. Harmony prevailed at all the meetings, and there was no difficulty in filling all the nominations for the coming city election. The city Republican convention to which delegates were elected will be held at the Republican Association hall, next Wednesday at 8 p. m., for the purpose of nominating three councilmen at large, an assessor, collector, treasurer, two chosen freeholders, two commissioners of appeal, and one school trustee. The result of the primaries held last night is given below. The First ward primary is called for this evening. Elias Bird will probably be nominated for councilman, though Sam Wilbur is also striving for it.

Second Ward.

The place of meeting in the Second ward was the Bryant school building, and the following officers presided:

Chairman—George H. Goddard.
Secretary—C. Arthur Baynon.
Judge of Election—W. R. Codington.
Inspector of Election—Andrew Vanderbeck.

These were the nominations:

For Councilman—John Johnston.
For Justice of the Peace—Vincent W. Nash.
For Constable—W. R. Mattox.

The delegates elected were as follows:

To the City Convention—J. B. Dumont, J. W. Jackson, F. O. Herring, H. C. Squires, W. T. Broadway, S. A. Ginna, W. R. Codington, L. N. Lovell, John Johnston, A. W. Duxbury, C. A. Baynon, Chas. B. Corwin.

To the City Executive Committee—John Uffich, C. A. Baynon, W. R. Codington.

Third Ward.

The primary of the Third ward was held at the Casino. Mayor Gilbert presided, and O. B. Leonard was secretary. Councilman Ackerman was judge of election, and J. Titsworth was inspector. There were two candidates for the councilmanic nomination. Francis E. Marsh received 53 votes, and H. M. Stockton 40. Mr. Marsh was declared the nominee.

The other nominations were:

For Justice of the Peace—J. Oakley Nodyne.
For Constable—Amos Moffett.

The following delegates were elected:

To City Convention—J. W. Murray, O. T. Waring, W. B. Wadsworth, E. L. Finch, Jacob Kirkner, Roger Murray, D. E. Titsworth, C. P. Leggett, F. A. Dunham, W. T. Kirk, E. R. Ackerman.

To City Executive Committee—C. J. Fisk, E. R. Ackerman, J. W. Murray.

Fourth Ward.

The place of meeting in the Fourth Ward was at Carey's auction rooms. The officials were:

Chairman—Fred. C. Lounsbury.
Secretary—Robert Laughton.
Judge of Election—T. J. Carey.
Inspectors of Election—Abram Angleman, Alexander Titsworth.

The nominations were as follows:

For Councilman—W. F. Bartlett.
For Justice of the Peace—John King.
For Constable—Aaron Mattox.

The following delegates were elected:

To the City Convention—Abraham Angleman, Amos Andrews, E. B. Clark, T. J. Carey, Martin Crounce, Henry W. Force, Fred. C. Lounsbury, Robert H. Laughton, Wm. Kline, John C. Manchester, Fred. C. Morris, Harold Serrell, H. A. Weber.

To the City Executive Committee—F. C. Lounsbury, John C. Manchester, T. J. Carey.

John Cheshire and the Mendelssohn Quartette.

Tickets are now on sale for the harp recital in the Casino Thursday evening, the 12th inst., at 8:15 o'clock. The programme is a most tempting one. If players like Mr. Cheshire were more numerous the harp might soon regain its ancient renown for solo performances. His playing has a sweet beauty and dignity that are seldom heard on the concert stage.

The Mendelssohn Quartette never fail to please the most fastidious, and it is hoped that a crowded house will welcome them upon this, their first appearance here this season. Tickets may be had at Reynolds's pharmacy, Park and North avenues.

North Plainfield Real Estate Changes.

Recently recorded real estate transfers in Somerset county include the following of North Plainfield property:

Township of North Plainfield to Adam Fritz, $59 30.

Township of North Plainfield to Adam Fritz, $77 68.

L. M. Codington, Sheriff, to Eleanor S. Kline, $200 00.

Ross J. Prall to Frederick W. Bird, $450 00.

Wm. O. Baldwin to George Moore, $225 00.

Richard H. McCullough to Fred. W. Bird, $1,400 00.

Little Women Workers.

At a business meeting of the Wide Awake Circle, held yesterday, the following officers were elected:

Recording secretary—Miss Nellie Kreitling.
Chairman lookout committee—Miss Ida Weigman.
Chairman flower committee—Miss Etta Yeager.
Chairman news committee—Miss Bertha Davis.
Chairman social committee—Miss Try Mattox.

Desires to Bear Testimony.

Henry Thorne, Traveling Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., writes from Exeter Hall, Strand, London, February 2, 1886:

"I desire to bear my testimony to the value of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS. I have used them for pains in the back and side arising from rheumatic and other causes never without deriving benefit from their application. They are easily applied and very comforting. Those engaged as I am in public work which involves exposure to sudden changes of temperature, will do well to keep a supply of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS in their portmanteaus."

Election Echoes.

The local election returns published in these columns yesterday were the most complete of any in city or county.

The revised returns of the vote for coroner in Union county are as follows:

Districts.	First.	Second.	Third.	Total
Hetfield, Dem.	1,735	1,788	1,518	5,091
Pickett, Rep.	1,571	1,324	2,212	4,807
Myles, Pro.	76	117	183	376

Plurality for Hetfield, 284.

The following is the Union county vote by Assembly districts:

	First.	Second.	Third.	Total
Democratic	1,923	1,832	1,523	5,178
Republican	1,280	1,302	2,017	4,599
Socialist-Labor	195	131	...	326
Prohibition	64	112	180	356

Democratic plurality, 579.

In Somerset county the Democratic townships did nobly. Several of the Republican townships gave reduced pluralities, while one—little Branchburg—reversed her rule and gave Bergen a plurality.

The Prohibitionists report a gain of 27 over last year.

The figures given below indicate the pluralities on the vote for Assemblyman:

	Bergen, Dem.	Ditts, Rep.
Bedminster	122	....
Bernards, I	101	....
II	62	....
Branchburg	9	....
Bridgewater, I	64	....
III	....	2
IV	74	....
Franklin, I	....	36
II	28	....
III	....	21
Hillsborough, I	....	43
II	....	65
Montgomery	....	20
N'th Plainfield, I	....	71
II	....	6
Warren	44	....
Bergen's plurality, 226.

Meeting adjourned.

Mr. Keys Will Teach New Yorkers Chess.

The champion chess-players of New Jersey, including R. B. Keys of Plainfield, will invade the rooms of the Manhattan Chess club to-night to show the New Yorkers how the game is played on this side of the river. From twenty to twenty-five players will participate on each side, and a hard and interesting struggle is expected.

The People's Party's Defeat.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Nov. 5.—In the county and judicial elections the third party lost heavily in nearly every county. They elected only one Circuit Judge in the ten districts in which they had candidates, and were confronted with heavy Republican gains in the strongholds of their leaders. The Republicans are rejoicing over what they term the final downfall of the People's party in Kansas.

Nebraska's Supreme Judgeship in Doubt.

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 4.—The Supreme Judge election is in doubt. It will be very close and both Independents and Republicans claim it. Bemis (Rep.) is elected Mayor of Omaha, and Republicans have also elected all county and city officers except three members of the City Council.

The Vote in Mississippi.

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 5.—The general Legislature will be overwhelmingly Democratic, with most of the members pledged for the return of Messrs. George and Walthall to the United States Senate.

Train Robbers Disposed Of.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 5.—William Howard, Jack Rice and Abe Jones, the three stage robbers, who were arrested about a fortnight ago, and who escaped from the officers while being brought to Redding were located yesterday by officers and Howard was shot and killed on his refusal to surrender. Jones escaped, but the officers are in pursuit and will take him dead or alive.

Baltimore Sugar Refinery Sold.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 5.—A syndicate of New York & Boston capitalists yesterday purchased a controlling interest in the Baltimore Sugar Refinery. The capital stock is $1,000,000, of which the syndicate have secured shares representing $550,000. The stock cost nearly $700,000.

Coy Held for the Grand Jury.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Nov. 5.—Coy, the self-confessed murderer of Whalen, and George Kelly, charged with being an accomplice, were arraigned in the District Court yesterday for their preliminary hearing. The court room was jammed with spectators. The testimony, in general, was similar to that already printed. At the conclusion of the evidence Judge Tucker discharged Kelly, and held Coy to await the action of the grand jury.

The Duke Formally Notified.

VIENNA, Nov. 5.—The Duke of Orleans was yesterday served with a writ in the action for divorce brought by Captain Charles Armstroug against his wife, the celebrated soprano, known as Madame Melba, in which the Duke is charged as co-respondent.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

Connor and Richardson Sign.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 5.—Roger Connor and Dan Richardson, who have played first and second base respectively for the New York League team for many years, last night signed personally guaranteed contracts with the Athletics for three years. Hoy, the mute outfielder, has also been signed by the local Association team.

Regarding Lottery Matter.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4.—The Treasury Department has directed that lottery matter seized in violation of the Postal Union Convention, shall be held as illegal importations and, for the present, treated as unclaimed merchandise, but excluded from sale until further orders.

Lord Hawks Will Come Again.

LONDON, Nov. 5.—Lord Hawks and his team of cricketers arrived at Queenstown yesterday. He expresses himself as highly gratified with his American tour, and says that he will revisit the United States in 1893 with another picked team of players.

Democratic Primaries.

The Democrats of the City of Plainfield are requested to convene at Cutter's Hall, upon the evening of Friday, Nov. 6, at 7:30 o'clock, to place in nomination four members of the Common Council and other Ward officers, also to elect delegates to the City Convention to be held at the same place on Tuesday evening, Nov. 10.

AND GET ONE BEFORE THEY ARE GONE! $1.39 buys a handsome Parlor Lamp, cheap at $2. You can't afford to pass us by when you are in want of a lamp, for our assortment is the most complete in town, and to say that our prices are the lowest, would be putting it mild. We have just received a fine line of Jardinieres, fancy Flower Vases, Toilet Sets, Dinner and Tea Sets, and fancy Crockery. We bought these at a closing out sale at bargain prices, so come while the assortment is good and select what you want and have them laid aside till needed; a small deposit secures them. We are in business to handle goods, and we will do it if we have to give them away; and no matter what others' prices are, ours will be under. Look at our $10 Dinner Set; it's worth $15 anywhere. Our $3.75 Tea Set sells all over for $5. Ordinary Table Crockery we lead the World on, and our prices astonish even the makers. Housefurnishings of every description, way down! Common Lamp Chimneys, all sizes, 5 cents; don't pay eight again for them. Those who do not throw money away will do well, and are invited to visit constantly, whether they wish to buy or not, that they may be posted as to the novelties and bargains coming in daily. Use Royal Tooth Powder, 10c; nothing finer made. The 5 and 10-cent Store.

HE BORE HIS TEST.

A Plainfield High School Graduate When Called Upon for Action, Was Not Found Wanting.

When Edward TenBroeck Perine was graduated from the High school of this city in the class of '88, he read from the stage at Music Hall an essay entitled "Action, the Test of Character." He pictured Lincoln and Garfield as worthy models in such respect and closed his essay with these words: "To all of us come trials and tests every day. Character is the creator for eternity and action in the expression of a man's character."

Last Sunday came the day of Mr. Perine's trial and test, and he expressed his character by proper and decided action. He and his sweetheart were married without the knowledge, approval or consent of her parents. It was not an elopement, however, as stated by the Plainfield papers who copied the story from an irresponsible source without investigation or credit. The ceremony was arranged and known of beforehand by all the parties interested with the exception of the bride's father and mother.

Mr. Perine, who has been occupying a position in the Third National bank at Jersey City since his graduation, fell in love with Nannette Mapes and she with him. She is nineteen. He boarded in the home of her parents in Jersey City, and they were thrown much together. They often went to theaters, balls and receptions, and their friends concluded they were engaged.

Mr. Mapes, who is a broker and Mrs. Mapes soon objected to Perine's attentions to their daughter. They had nothing against him, it is said, but they thought it would be well enough for their daughter not to marry at present.

At last Mr. Perine was gently requested by Mr. Mapes to vacate his room. Perine went to Brooklyn.

Miss Mapes told her mother Sunday that she was going out to visit an old friend and would be gone several hours. She went to Brooklyn. She was met in that city by Mr. Perine, and within an hour they were quietly married by a clergymen near the South Ferry.

Mr. Mapes is not angry now that the affair is consummated. Upon the return of Mr. and Mrs. Perine from their wedding trip, they will live in Brooklyn.

A Newsy Budget from the Tool Works.

Messrs. Manning & Moore, of the Pond Tool Works company, made a pleasant visit to the shops Tuesday, in company with other guests, and were charmed with the fine appearance of the large planer which is in course of erection.

The new society at the works on Saturday elected as temporary chairman John W. James, and appointed as committee on organization Messrs. J. T. Vegiard, Richard York, A. H. Leivers, Robert P. Hangliter and one other. They met last evening at the Odd Fellows' Lodge rooms to elect permanent officers.

The workmen judge, from meeting James Neal (the newly-married foreman) with a chair under one arm and two clothes-poles under the other, that he is getting ready for housekeeping.

Charley Lester has a new straw hat.

Tommy Misper, who about two weeks ago took out his first papers as a would-be citizen, spent the whole of Tuesday at the polls, or as near as the law allows, peddling Republican tickets. That's right, Tommy: show that you mean business; but we intend to convert you before you take out the second papers.

Contractor Walsh opened the new club-house on Lee place, near Third street, with a dance, Saturday evening, and now the Workingmen's Athletic club is again in full swing.

LATHE HAND.

Young Lawyer Coddington of Plainfield Wins Against Astute Counselor Berry.

George B. Harrison of Rahway, was walking along the streets of that city on the 17th of last June when Charles B. Pratt's big mastiff sprang at him. Harrison shot the dog and its owner subsequently sued him for $200 damages.

Pratt engaged the best lawyer within reach and built up a strong case, Lawyer William A. Coddington of this city had charge of the defence of Harrison. Ten witnesses swore that the dog was worth $400, and nobody denied that Harrison shot it. But Mr. Coddington showed that the Mayor of Rahway had authorized by proclamation the shooting of any dog on the public street that was not muzzled or led by a string. He also presented evidence that his client acted in self defense.

The trial of the case was before the court of common pleas and a jury at Elizabeth, Monday. Counselor Berry's client was awarded one dollar damages but he must pay the costs of the case amounting to about $100 and including even the expenses of the defendant's witnesses.

His Bride Gone Again.

The Dunellen letter-carrier who gained much notoriety lately in the newspapers, by his newly-made bride leaving him within a few hours after the ceremony, is again forlorn. He lived 1½ miles out of town, and concluded to remove to a place nearer his business, and consequently took as his residence one of the new houses recently built on Grove street. Whether this did not please Mrs. Jacobs or not does not transpire, but at any rate she again left the letter-carrier to his peaceful solitude, and has once more taken up her home in Brooklyn.

The wonder of the age—Salvation Oil, for 25 cents a bottle. It kills all pain.

A Famous Frenchman and His Family.

Paul Blouet, who is to lecture at the Casino this evening, on "America as Seen through French Spectacles", has been thinking about it, and concludes to do better for us than he has done heretofore. "If"—he says in a recent article in The Strand Magazine—"I had to be born again, and I might choose my sex and my birthplace, I would shout at the top of my voice, 'Oh! make me an American woman.'"

M. Blouet is accompanied on his lecture tour this season by Mme. Blouet and their daughter, Leonie. On M. Blouet's first visit to this country he was accompanied by his wife, but his more recent trip was so much in the nature of a hurried flight across the continent that he traveled alone.

Mlle. Blouet has just completed her education at Parisian schools and is come to look upon a world all new and strange and full of wonders to her. She is a tall, dark, graceful, alert, clever-looking girl about 18 years of age. Mme. Blouet is a handsome, sedate matron, who looks not more than 30 years of age. "Max O'Rell" is in the best of health and spirits.

Madam Blouet has had a large share in her husband's literary successes. In all his work she feels as keen an interest as does he, and the first press notices of a book are as eagerly looked forward to by her as by the author himself. Madame Blouet is in every respect the wife of a literary man, interested in his success and eager that he should show himself before the world at his best. She wields a clever pen herself as her story of an incident in the life of her husband—in The Strand Magazine of last July—evidences. And yet, despite her keen interest in her husband's work, Madame Blouet's principal thoughts are in her home and for its best interests. She is—writes Frederick Dolman in the November Ladies' Home Journal—in every respect, domestic. The Regent Park home of the Blouets is of her making, and in it she shines as wife, mother and hostess. For her husband she makes her home so bright that he is never absent from it but he is anxious to return to it. She is an excellent cook herself, and at times, when servants have been rebellious, she has for days at a time prepared her own dinners, much to the gratification of her husband, who rather regretted the advent of a new cook. As a mother, she is the constant companion of her only child, a daughter. Leonie Marie is the counterpart of her mother in many things, and, seen together, they are more like sisters than mother and daughter. Miss Blouet accompanies her father and mother in America upon their present visit. In appearance, Madame Blouet has all the charms of a true woman which bind friends to her with clasps of steel. She is a brunette, with dark-brown eyes which speak almost as intelligently as her tongue. There is about her a combination of vivacity and quiet retirement seldom found, and the one quality vies with the other in conquests. In matters of dress, she is a thorough believer in the simple. She prefers black, although the dark shades of red and yellow become her extremely well in evening dress. She is extremely fond of needlework, and often finds recreation in drawing, although her artistic efforts are seen only by husband and daughter. Madame Blouet is, in short, eminently fitted to be the wife of a gifted man. She can receive and entertain his friends; she is well-read both in French and English literature; she possesses all the instincts of motherhood, and, best of all, provides for her famous husband such a home as he likes best.

Brooklyn Racing On Plainfield Roads.

The Brooklyn Bicycle club held their annual ten-mile handicap road race on a two and a half mile stretch of road midway between this city and Westfield, Tuesday. There were ten starters in the event. John Schaefer, although on scratch and penalized 1½ minutes for riding a pneumatic wheel, won easily. The men finished in the following order: J. M. Schaefer, scratch, first, time 32 minutes 26 1-5 seconds: C. F. Quimby, thirty seconds, second, time 34 minutes 49 2-5 seconds; George Perrin, six minutes, third, time 41 minutes 23 3-5 seconds, E. Williams dropped out at two miles.

A Pathetic Incident of the Clinton Fire.

The Newark Evening News of last Monday contained the following:

A very sad incident in connection with the fire was the removal of Mrs. James P. Hoffman from her home. Two weeks ago James P. Hoffman, jr., a rising young lawyer who had an office in Plainfield, died at his home here, and a few days after this sad event his wife gave birth to a daughter. Mrs. Hoffman lay sick at the home of her late husband, and as this house was on fire several times while the conflagration raged, it was thought best to have the patient removed. Dr. S. VanSickel, the family physician, selected a few volunteers, and under his direction his patient was tenderly carried to the home of a neighbor, where she is doing as well as can be expected.

The Boys Drove Away the Terror of the Town.

A tramp, rather the worse for drink, who has been figuring about Dunellen as a scissors-grinder, went from house to house, Tuesday, and frightened the women who answered his knock by forcing his way past them into the house. Fortunately a number of boys were attracted by his unusual actions, and they made it so hot for him that he disappeared.

I was so much troubled with catarrh it seriously affected my voice. One bottle of Ely's Cream Balm did the work. My voice is fully restored.—S. F. Liespener, A. M., pastor of the Olivet Baptist Church, Philadelphia, Pa.

"A GOD SEND is Ely's Cream Balm. I had catarrh for three years. Two or three times a week my nose would bleed. I thought the sores would never heal. Your Balm has cured me."—Mrs. M. A. Jackson, Portsmouth, N. H.

Will Strengthen the Stage to Hold Her.

W. B. Arnold, an actor in the "Blue Jeans" company which is to appear at Music Hall to-night, severed his connection with that company at Zanesville, Ohio, recently, on rather extraordinary grounds. Mr. Arnold is 60 years of age. In his part as Col. Henry Clay he was obliged to seize and carry bodily off the stage Miss Jennie Endsly, who tips the beam at 177 pounds. This task was too much for the veteran, who was willing, however, as a compromise, to drag the fair one off. A younger and stronger actor was secured at once, and Miss Endsly will be carried across the stage to-night gallantly and well.

Fred. H. Carruth, of the New York Tribune, who always sees and appreciates the humor of any situation, writes as follows concerning the "heavy heroine" incident:

"Complaint is made that we have no National drama. Few of the faultfinders know under what serious disadvantages the American playwright labors. Managers are exacting and haughty and audiences cold and critical; besides, trouble for him is constantly breaking out in unexpected places. At the present time there is a popular native play talking about in what we trust we may be pardoned for calling the provinces, but the author is not happy. The leading actor has just left the company because he objects to his part, and trouble is experienced in getting a suitable man to take his place. This is the paltry reason for the leading man's action: The lines require that at a certain critical moment he carry the heroine off the stage. The ridiculous leading gentleman said that she was too heavy, and, as it was impossible to lighten her, he left.

"This discouraging incident took place a few days ago at Zanesville, Ohio, and the unreasonable actor's name is Arnold. He was willing, he told the author, to push or pull the lady off the stage, but he would not carry her off any longer. We suppose that Mr. Arnold would have also agreed to put down his head and bunt the lady out into the wings, or to draw a revolver and scare her off, or perhaps to put a rope around her and drag her off; but to each of these propositions the author replied that the method was not Art, and he was quite right. When the heroine faints at the unspeakable villany of the villain it is the first duty of the hero to show his heroism by taking her up gracefully and bearing her away; when he stands about outside of the right upper entrance and tells the distracted author that he ought to get a steam-derrick to remove his heroine, he is not encouraging a National drama. Arnold tries to justify himself by citing the fact that he only weighs 150 pounds, while the actress entrusted with the part of heroine weighs 160 pounds. This is a weak excuse, especially after he had carried her off for more than 200 nights. Go to the ant, thou actor. This humble but hard-working insect carries a weight eighteen times as heavy as itself. Of course, man is not endowed with the remarkable carrying capacity of the ant, but the thought of this insect laboriously toiling in the wrong direction for half a day with a weight eighteen times as heavy as itself, only to be stepped on by a small boy in the end, should have encouraged the captious Mr. Arnold. But it appears to have done nothing of the kind. After finding fault for a month or so and talking about rolling the lady off, he quit entirely and went away. The author is a pale, scholarly young man, weighing only 120 pounds. It was a physical impossibility for him to carry off the heroine. But he had to get her off in some way. So that night he came on with a wheelbarrow, loaded in the lady with the assistance of the comic man and wheeled her off to great applause.

"We suppose that eventually another and more athletic man will be procured to take the place of the departed Arnold, but notwithstanding this we would ask how we can hope ever to have a National theater until the actor is willing to co-operate with the dramatist and bear his just share of the burden."

A Building Which Will Be a Credit to the Nation.

The New Congressional Library and What It Will Look Like When Completed —The Structure as It Is—Interior Arrangements.

Three hundred workmen, under the supervision of Gen. Thomas Lincoln Casey, chief of engineers, are making rapid progress with the Congressional library building, sketches of which as it looks at present and will look when completed are given herewith.

THE LIBRARY AS IT WILL BE.

For more than seventeen years, says the Chicago Tribune, this project was before congress, and about five years ago its construction was intrusted to a commission consisting of the secretary of the treasury, secretary of the interior and the architect of the United States capitol. Matters did not progress very favorably under commission auspices, and hence congress turned the matter over to the chief of engineers, who has just given proof of his ability in carrying out to a successful issue the building of the now famous Washington monument.

Four acres of ground adjacent to the capital on the east have been secured and on the property there is now in course of construction a magnificent white granite building, 470 feet in length, 340 feet wide and towering heavenward to a height of 170 feet. Italian Renaissance is the style of architecture, the granite used on the exterior being Muscovite Blotite from the Concord (N. H.) quarries, while in a portion of the interior and court work stone from the quarries near Woodstock, Md., is utilized. When the building is completed—as it is expected to be five years hence—there will be accommodations on the shelves for 2,000,000 volumes, and the estimated cost of the finished structure is within $6,000,000.

A feature of the interior will be an octogonal-shaped reading-room 100 feet in diameter, and where anyone of 150 readers desires a book it will be brought to him by means of a mechanical device similar to that used in carrying parcels and cash in all the leading retail houses in this country.

In the accompanying sketch, showing the condition of the library building September 16, 1891, it will be observed that the foundation and first story are completed to the arches and coverings of the second floor, and for that portion upward it is expected that at least five years more will be consumed to put the building in condition for occupancy.

Having no great colonnades and projections as adorn the capitol and other public buildings at Washington, considerable ornamentation in the shape of carving will be necessary to prevent the broad surfaces from looking bare. Therefore it has been determined that the front and upper part of the building shall be very ornate, the granite carving being elaborate and in good taste. There are thirty-three arches on the four sides of the building, and in ornamenting the keys to these arches, which correspond exactly with the recognized number of races of man, it was suggested to have sculptured in bold relief on the key of each arch, a typical head of one race. With the assistance of Prof. Otis Mason, of the Smithsonian institution, and an authority on ethnography, casts of the several types have been secured, each being strongly characteristic, so as to make plain the purpose. A number of these have been finished and put in place and are very effective. Over the arches at the main entrance, which will be from the west, will be the types of the higher order and the very lowest types will be at the back of the building.

The outer walls of the building are of granite, and in the interior masonry already over 14,000,000 bricks have been laid. All the brick facing inside the four courts is of yellowish white enameled surface, giving a very handsome effect and insuring an abundance of light.

Petroleum as Fuel.

Reports are received by the bureau of American republics to the effect that the experiment of using petroleum for fuel on the Oroya railroad in Peru has proved successful. The trials were made at an altitude of 5,800 feet above the sea with the locomotives from the Rogers works of Paterson, N. J. The oil used is not crude petroleum, but a residuum oil. In the trials the average consumption was 38.88 pounds per mile, while with coal it was 79.30 pounds. It is reported that the Oroya Railway Company has decided to use oil fuel on all of their locomotives.

THE ORIGINAL HORSE.

A Rare Animal Discovered in the Central Part of Asia.

A small party of French men of science, which included Prince Henry, of Orleans, and M. Bonvalot, has lately returned from a journey of exploration through the vast and almost uninhabited regions of central Asia. The expedition, says the Youth's Companion, brought back several stuffed specimens of rare animals found in that part of the world, and among them a specimen of the hemione, or Kiang horse. This animal probably approaches as near to the primitive horse as any now found in a wild state.

The home of the Kiang horse is the high plateau of Chinese Turkestan, between Lake Lob Nor and the mountainous region of Thibet. This plateau is covered with a growth of short grass, which the wild horses graze. The climate is very cold, the mercury in winter sinking to forty degrees below zero, Fahrenheit.

The Kiang horse is a shaggy, unkempt looking animal, having bodily somewhat the aspect of a donkey, except as to the tail and ears. It is, however, a genuine horse, having rather delicate legs and feet, and ears by no means resembling those of a donkey or mule.

The color of the head and of the upper part and sides of the body is a reddish-tan, shading to a bay, and though this color grows lighter from above downward, it contrasts strikingly with the pure white of the animal's belly and the inner side of the fore-legs.

Along the spine runs a well-defined stripe of thick, blackish-brown hair, extending to the root of the tail. The hair is long and shaggy, and adapts the horse to living in a cold country.

The Kiangs, like all the other wild horses, live in bands or herds of one hundred to two hundred individuals, each presided over by an old male. This leader gives the signal when any danger approaches.

The Kiangs are preyed upon frequently by wolves; but their most terrible and dreaded enemy is the ounce, or Turkestan panther, several specimens of which were shot by Prince Henry.

IT DRIVES HORSES.

The Latest Use to Which Electricity Has Been Applied.

The electric inventor has applied the subtle current to another practical purpose, which he claims is both effective and healthful. The application in this case is to the reins on an ordinary set of harness so that a whip to urge the horse along is not needed. The reins for a portion of their length, where they are over the horse's back, are wrapped with copper wire. The wires are carried up to a little battery, which can be put under the seat. When it becomes necessary to urge the horse a little, by pressing a button a current is sent through the reins to the horse's back, and he feels a sharp though not painful pricking sensation and wakes up to business in an instant. The inventor claims that small quantities of electricity so administered are healthful and that the invention is humane and harmless.

The Curious in Numbers.

A lover of the curious in numbers has figured out some interesting facts concerning the city of Berlin. The city has 210 miles of street, so that a person might walk ten days in the German capital without going up or down the same street twice. If the 1,400,000 inhabitants were to turn out in a grand review, and march in double file, they would form a line 750 miles in length, a column long enough to reach nearly entirely across France. If the citizens should all determine to start on a journey on the same day and the same time, all the cars in Germany would accommodate but two-thirds of their number. If formed in a single file, each with his hand on the other's shoulder, the column would be nearly 2,000 miles long. If separated until only within speaking distance of each other the column would be a human telegraph line long enough to reach from Berlin to Calcutta, India.

A Reformed Bridal Dress.

A daughter of Prof. Jaeger was married the other day. The lady is a zealot for the doctrines of her father on normal clothing, and appeared at the altar clothed from head to foot in a bridal dress invented by the professor. Even her bridal veil was made of wool of extraordinary lightness and delicacy.

Kansas and Belgium.

Belgium has a population of 6,030,043; Kansas has a population of 1,427,096, yet she is so large that seven countries the size of Belgium could be laid down within her border and yet she would have 400,000 square miles of unoccupied territory left.

STARVATION CAMP

Captain Nelson Tells of His Experiences.

THE ILL-FATED EXPEDITION.

But Three Men Out of Fifty-five Survived the Hardships.

Fungi Their Only Food for Twenty-three Days—Nelson Did Not Have a Proper Meal in Three Months—Treachery of the Arab Chiefs—Terrible Suffering of the Men Who Tried to Relieve Emin Pasha.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 6.—Captain R. H. Nelson, of the Stanley expedition into Africa, who was left in the famous Starvation Camp, is in this city, and when approached by a reporter yesterday talked freely on the subject of the expedition, but prefaced his remarks by saying that he expected all he could tell was already known. Captain Nelson is a representative Englishman, tall, broad-shouldered and of powerful build, just such a man as one would consider fitted for engaging in a hazardous expedition such as that into Africa.

"Yes," he said, "we had a hard time of it there, there is no mistake about that. When Stanley left us we were in a deplorable condition. I had been left behind because of bad feet, caused by ulcers. Otherwise I was well. Besides myself there were 52 others—all Zanzibari. Two of these were my own servants; the others were bearers—men who had originally come from the island of Zanzibar as slaves. Every man who was left with me was on the sick list. I was the only white man in the camp. We were too weak to hunt, and were absolutely helpless. The only means of sustenance that we had was the fungus which grew upon the dead trees surrounding the camp. These growths we gathered and ate.

"For twenty-three days, until the arrival of the relief expedition, we were without other food than the fungi, of which I have spoken. Almost as soon as the main body of the expedition left, my men came to me and piled up their rifles by my hut, saying they were too weak to carry them longer. The Zanzibari, however, are possessed of wonderful courage, and while a few of them deserted time, the majority stuck by the camp and died there. Of the fifty-five men I had when Stanley left me but three, besides myself, were alive when we were relieved, and three finer men than these, so far as the qualities of pluck and perseverance go, I have never seen. Of these three men two were my servants."

To show, however, how much a man can do when he once makes his mind to and has to Captain Nelson made the journey to Ipoto, which is coming had taken him 12 days, in five days on the return, and this, too, after he was reduced by starvation and sickness.

"From the time I entered Starvation Camp until three months later I can say I never had a proper meal. Even the relief party brought but a scanty amount of provisions."

"When did your troubles begin?"

"Our troubles began? They began from the moment we met those Arab slave dealers—ivory dealers they call themselves. These Arabs are a disreputable set of fellows that will stop at nothing. Before Stanley left Dr. Park and me he made an arrangement with the Arab chiefs, for a stipulated price, to furnish my party with food during his absence. They never kept their word. As soon as Stanley was gone they refused to give us the food, and the supply thus cut off, we were in deplorable straits. They stole things whenever they could, and it was to them the bearers, who deserted the expedition with their burdens of ammunition and rifles, went to sell these supplies. By and by, as things got worse, and ulcerations appeared on my feet, it was determined to leave me with the sick men of the party and to push on more rapidly. They could not, of course, take me with them. They had no means for doing so. In times like that no one man must be considered. The purpose of the expedition was to get the supplies of ammunition to Emin Pasha as quickly as possible, and the men who dropped by the wayside could not be stopped for. Every man's interests were given up to the attainment of that great end.

"This was the way it was with the officers of the expedition, and the bearers, of course, could expect no more. They had been engaged at the start to carry the loads, and were paid by the month—about $5—and that was all they had to say in the matter. They had to be told everything, anyhow, for, though strong workers and excellent in executing orders, they needed a head to direct them always." When asked when they did the biggest part of their traveling, Capt. Nelson replied: "During the day. I am not a believer" he said, "in the theory of traveling by night to avoid the heat. You are too apt to lose your way, and thus take a longer time on the trip than otherwise.

"When returned to England I had a bad attack of African fever and thought a sea voyage would do me good. I have been in America before, some 18 years ago, but at that time stayed in Chicago This time I came to New York, and will remain in this city until to-morrow, when I will again sail direct for England."

THE BRAKE WOULDN'T WORK.

Accident to a Gravity Car at Reading Causes Two Deaths.

READING, Pa., Nov. 6.—Two cars on the Mount Penn Gravity road got beyond the control of the conductor and brakeman yesterday afternoon and jumped the track near the station on the homestretch.

Irving Houck, the conductor, was instantly killed by the collision of the car with a huge rock. Anthony C. Keeley, brakeman, was fatally crushed. Keeley assisted in building the road and came here from Kentucky three years ago, Miss Mary Beck, of Philadelphia, was badly cut about the head and body, but her injuries are not regarded as fatal. Frank Klemmer, her companion, also from Philadelphia, sustained a fractured skull and will hardly recover. Thomas W. Ganter, of this city, was cut about the head and body.

The failure of the employes to hold the car, it is said, was caused by a bad rail and wet leaves, which became wedged between the brake liners and wheels.

The injured were taken to the Reading Hospital. George Johnson of this city, a passenger, jumped from one of the cars just previous to the crash and escaped injury. No others were injured.

ANOTHER MINERS' STRIKE.

Caused By the Refusal of the Coal Operators to Recognize the Union.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 6.—Another break between the railroad coal operators and miners has occurred, and about 1,000 of the miners have refused to return to work because of the operators refusing to recognize the miners union.

The operators at several of the mines say, that while they are willing to treat with the miners individually they will not recognize their organization. The miners say that their organization will be recognized or another general strike will be ordered.

At a meeting of the river operators yesterday the subject of reduction of wages of their employes to the three per cent. bushel rate for mining was not discussed. Prominent river operators deny that such a move is contemplated.

The amount of coal loaded and in the river harbors is not nearly sufficient to supply the demand during the winter. Many millions of bushels must be dug before existing contracts are satisfied.

Minister Sutherland Fined.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 6.—In the United States Circuit Court yesterday Rev. A. T. Sutherland, of Hazleton, Luzerne County, convicted last July at Erie, of sending obscene publications through the mails, was called up for sentence. The court stated that inasmuch as the defendant had been prosecuted in the State courts for libel, which suits had cost him over $7,000 besides an immense amount of trouble, the court thought a fine would be a sufficient punishment. It therefore sentenced the prisoner to pay a fine of $600.

The Barges Foundered.

BOSTON, Nov. 6.—The ocean tug B. W. Morse, which arrived here yesterday from Norfolk and New York, reports that on the previous trip from Norfolk the barges Nipon and David Brown, which the Morse had in tow, foundered off the Delaware Capes on the night of October 24, during the prevalence of a heavy gale. Five men were lost, four of whom belonged to the Brown. The captain and one of the crew of the Nipon were the only survivors of the crews of both vessels.

Six Men Hold Up an Express.

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 6.—The Kansas City express train on the Missouri Pacific road was held up by six masked men early yesterday morning one mile west of West Side, eight miles from this city. While two of the men worked on the strong box, the others compelled the passengers to keep their seats. The thieves secured about $3,500 from the safe, and then backing off ordered the train to pull out. They then disappeared in the darkness.

Chili's Exiled President.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—Senor Vicuna, the exiled President-elect of Chili is at the Arlington, accompanied by his family and by Balmaceda's Minister to Peru. He has been in the city for two days, but his identity was not known. He has received no recognition as the visiting executive of a foreign country and has seen neither the President nor Secretary Blaine. Neither has the Chilian Legation extended any recognition.

An International Jewish Congress.

LONDON, Nov. 6.—It is reported that Baron Hirsch is arranging for an international Jewish Congress to be held in 1892 in London. The object of the proposed congress is to consider and, if possible, solve the problem of Jewish colonization.

Secretary Nettleton's Decision.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—Assistant Secretary Nettleton has decided that the law prohibits the sale of any print or impression of any monetary obligation of the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury has no authority to furnish for reproduction a photograph of the new $2 silver certificate.

IS IT PERMANENT?

Dr. Keeley's Gold Cure for Drunkenness Fails.

THE CASE OF "FELIX OLDBOY."

His Complete Reformation Reported, but He Died of Alcoholism.

Discharged Several Months Ago from Keeley's Hospital, He Believed Himself Entirely Cured—Sad End of a Brilliant Journalistic Career—The Gold Cure and How Patients Are Treated.

NEW YORK, Nov. 6.—One of Dr. Keeley's gold cure patients, a man whose complete reformation was heralded in all the newspapers a few months ago, died at the workhouse yesterday of alcoholism.

John F. Mines was arrested Tuesday evening and was committed Wednesday to the workhouse for five days. He was suffering from alcoholism at the time, and his condition became so bad that shortly after his arrival he was taken to the hospital. Then he had six alcohol fits in quick succession and succumbed.

Mr. Mines was a man of brilliant mental gifts, but his whole life was marred by his one unfortunate failing. He was born about 55 years ago in Troy; it is believed, and is a graduate of Trinity College, Hartford, and the General Theological Seminary in this city. Later he was ordained minister in the Episcopal Church, but abandoned this to go into journalism. He was connected with newspapers at Troy, Albany and in this city, being widely known by sketches under the name of Felix Oldboy. A collection of them is now in press, for publication in book form, by Harpers.

The sad death of Mr. Mines is interesting in the respect that it raises the question as to the permanence of the gold cure in the cases of chronic alcoholism. About two years ago a physician named Dr. Keeley settled down at Dwight, Ill., a little town 40 miles out of Chicago, and announced his ability to cure all drunkards who might present themselves. From the start his business prospered, and some of the hardest drinkers in the West braced up through Dr. Keeley's work.

The treatment consists in carrying a bottle of whisky, drinking whenever the patient pleases and having the gold mixture injected into the patient's arm several times a day. After a week or so of this treatment, it is claimed, the patient will carry his bottle all day, never touch it and positively hate the idea of a drink.

Mr. Mines was one of the brightest of the men that were cured by Dr. Keeley. From the day that he came out of the "Institute" Mines was one of the doctor's strongest friends. He sang his praises on all occasions, and even did more than that. A long article signed by him appeared in the North American Review, telling about Dr. Keeley and the good that had been accomplished in his own individual case.

THOUGHT SHE WAS ASLEEP.

A Daughter Who Waited Three Months for Her Dead Mother to Awake.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Nov. 6.—A horrible case of a human being lying unburied for almost three months right in the heart of the city was brought to light yesterday when the body of Mrs. Barbara Luber, aged 84 years, was found in a house on Washington street, where she had lived with her daughter Mrs. Magdalena Mochel.

The body was lying on the floor covered by some bed clothing, and was in a fearful state of decomposition. Mrs. Mochel has at different times been insane, and was only discharged from the asylum a few months ago.

She stated to the coroner that on Aug. 27 last she found her mother dead on the bedroom floor. She was so heavy she could not lift her to the bed, so she covered her up and has been waiting ever since for the old lady to wake up. Mrs. Mochel is undoubtedly insane.

Will Pay Back 60 Per Cent.

LOWELL, Mass., Nov. 6.—The officers of the Golden Seal Endowment Order agreed yesterday to pay back 60 per cent. of the money taken from the certificate holders and to wind up the affairs of the Order. Messrs. Staples and Marr, ex-supreme officers of the Order of the Annual Friend, were summoned to appear in court as trustees of the Order. Their wives, to whom their property had been transferred, were also ordered to appear. This action is taken by the certificate holders.

Brewers' Lockout Probable.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 6. — There will probably be a lockout of brewers affecting 4,000 men in a short time. The brewers claim they cannot pay the present rate of wages demanded by the Brewery Workmen's Union, and the plan is to discharge all union men now in breweries and replace them with non-union workers simultaneously in every brewery in the State.

THE TREASURY INVESTIGATION.

Attorney Gilbert Sums Up for Boyer in the Pennsylvania Senate.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Nov. 6.—Mr. Gilbert, promptly after the Senate opened, arose to address himself to the evidence that had been submitted. Speaking on behalf of Mr. Boyer, Mr. Gilbert confined himself to three points, viz: First, Did Boyer participate in the misuse of the public money? Second, Did he knowingly allow it to be done? Third, Was the loss of public money due to his conduct?

Mr. Gilbert attacked the Governor's message convening the Senate. He admitted that it was a great State paper, but it contained grave errors and did great injustice to Mr. Boyer. The Governor knew, said he, that Mr. Boyer had denied the charges he had presented in the message, and these denials should have gone side by side with the charges. Other charges were admissions made by Boyer.

Mr. Gilbert called attention to that part of the message dealing with the payment of $420,000 school money that was paid to Bardsley. The Governor knew, he said, that Boyer had given a full and sufficient reason for that act, had sought advice and found there was warrant of law for it.

Mr. Gilbert was inclined to throw some of the responsibility for the Bardsley losses upon the Governor, who had been twice Controller of Philadelphia, and was thoroughly acquainted with the financial method of the city.

Said Mr. Gilbert: "He has taken advantage of the Constitution, which allows him to ask for information in writing of the affairs of the State Department, and nothing has been disclosed in either the Boyer or McCamant departments. The Secretary of the Commonwealth is one of the commissioners of the sinking fund, and sits with Treasurer Boyer. Investigation after investigation by him has failed to find anything here except that which has been admitted by Boyer himself. The Attorney-General, who has made a thorough study of this case, and has addressed numerous inquiries to Mr. Boyer, has failed to turn anything up."

To-day the Attorney-General is reviewing the evidence, and replying to the question of jurisdiction.

IS IT HISCOCK?

Rumored that He Has Been Offered the War Portfolio.

NEW YORK, Nov. 6.—A dispatch from Washington says it is rumored that Senator Hiscock has been offered the portfolio of Secretary of War by President Harrison to succeed Redfield Proctor, who has resigned.

The information also states that it is the intention of the Republican managers to fix upon J. Sloat Fassett as Mr. Hiscock's successor in the Senate.

NEW YORK'S LEGISLATURE.

Each Party Claims to Have a Majority in Both Branches.

NEW YORK, Nov. 6.—It will probably require the official canvass to decide the political complexion of the Legislature. Both parties claim to have a majority in both branches, and it is therefore impossible to settle the matter until the corrected returns are canvassed by the county boards.

Democrats say they will have a majority of four in the Senate and six in the Assembly, or ten on joint ballot. Republicans say that they will have four majority in the Senate and four in the Assembly, or eight majority on joint ballot. Both sides claim J. T. Edwards, the Independent who defeated C. P. Vedder, in Thirty-second Senatorial District. Flower's plurality is given at 47,608.

Massachusetts' Legislature.

BOSTON, Nov. 6 — Complete returns have been received which show that the next Legislature will stand as follows: Senate—Republicans, 23; Democrats, 17. House, Republicans, 150; Democrats, 89; Prohibitionists, 1.

The Figures in Pennsylvania.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Nov. 6.—Complete returns from every county in the State show a plurality of 58,899 for Gregg, Rep., for Auditor-General, and 53,764 plurality for Morrison, Rep., for State Treasurer.

Elected by One Majority.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Nov. 6.—Dr. Beakes, Dem., is elected to the Assembly from Sullivan County by a majority of one. This is according to the official vote.

Killed Herself for Her Husband's Sake.

BOSTON, Nov. 6.—Margaret Coughlan died at the Massachusetts Hospital yesterday, as the result of taking a dose of poison for the purpose of sparing her husband the necessity of watching by her bed. For a year past she had been a helpless invalid. Her husband had to sit up with her nights after returning from his work. This affected his health and his wife, after long vainly praying for death, in order to relieve her sufferings, sent out for a bottle of ammonia liniment and drank the contents.

Projected Baseball Deal.

NEW YORK, Nov. 6.—A new baseball scheme, which is just now being seriously discussed, involves the doing away with the American Association and the formation of an entirely new organization of twelve clubs, which will include the present eight League clubs, three others holding Association franchises and one more. The circuit would take in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, St. Louis, Pittsburg, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and Indianapolis.

Another Tichbourne Claimant.

LONDON, Nov. 6.—A Mrs. Jenkins, claims to have discovered the real Tichbourne heir and has written a letter to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland to that effect. He is a lunatic, according to this letter. Mrs. Jenkins writes from Sydney, Australia, and says that she will bring Cresswell to England at her own expense for the purpose of having his claim investigated.

FONSECA DICTATOR

Proclaimed by the Chiefs of the Brazilian Army.

WHY CONGRESS WAS DISSOLVED

Martial Law Enforced and a Number of Rioters Killed.

Rio Janeiro Has Been in a State of Siege—Revolts in the Provinces—Claimed that Fonseca is Striving to Become Emperor—He Claims the Dictatorship Will Only be Temporary—Spirit of Revolt in the Army.

RIO JANEIRO, Brazil, Nov. 6.—President Deodoro da Fonseca has been proclaimed Dictator. The troops are now guarding all the streets and public buildings. A strict censorship of all telegraphic messages has been established and details of the state of affairs are not allowed to pass.

In Rio Grande do Sul the news has caused a most unfavorable impression. Great anxiety is felt as to the result of Fonseca's proclamation and the dissolution of Congress.

It is officially announced that the President has convened the nation to elect new representatives at a date to be determined upon later.

The Governors of the leading provinces have congratulated President Fonseca upon his success in maintaining order.

In a State of Siege.

The federal capital, Rio Janeiro, and the town of Nictheroy, or Praia Grande, five miles east of the capital, have been declared to be in a state of siege for two months.

The President has been provoked to take these steps by the proceedings of Congress and by the efforts of the promoters of a restoration to overturn Republican institutions.

Fonseca, in a manifesto issued to the nation, declares himself to have been fully justified in taking the steps referred to.

Ready to Maintain Order.

The army and navy support the government, and public tranquility, according to the official announcement, is perfect throughout the States.

In conclusion, it is said that the government is ready to maintain order by every means, that the constitution will be respected and that the government will also be answerable for all national engagements.

Fonseca, in his manifesto, says that he will govern in accordance with the constitution. The National Guard has been mobilized in the province of Rio Grande.

The troops are in their quarters. An outbreak is feared, owing to the influence of the opposition. Commercial interests in Rio are not affected.

Further details of the causes that have led to the trouble between Congress and President Fonseca, show that it seems to have had its origin in a row that broke out in the Legislative Chamber.

The Senate passed a bill to establish the responsibility of the President for his different acts. This act met with Fonseca's violent disapprobation and he refused to accept what he termed any such dictation as to his rights and duties from Congress.

Troops Under Arms.

He ordered the troops under arms throughout Rio on Nov. 4, and this led to intense excitement among the populace. Bands of opponents of the government, including old Republicans and Monarchists, assembled and shouted out their disapproval.

Between them and the soldiery many fights took place. Riots broke out in the streets all over the city. The troops were then given orders to fire upon the rioters, which they did. Many of the rebels were killed.

A spirit of revolt manifested itself in the army. When Fonseca was informed of this fact he went at once to the troops and made them a stirring address, promising to guard their interests and to protect them in their rights.

The chiefs of the army then requested Fonseca to resume the functions of a dictator, saying that the emergency demanded it. He appeared to demur for a time, but at length gave his consent.

A Province in Revolt.

Telegrams received from Porto Alegro, in the State of Rio Grande do Sul, declare that the authority of the Dictator is not recognized there. Alegro has a population of some 30,000 inhabitants. Rio Grande do Sul is one of the most prosperous and independent of all the States. It has a population of nearly 700,000.

The Republicans in it say that they will not tolerate a dictatorship, and are demanding an armed opposition to Fonseca.

They say that he wishes to restore imperial rule, with himself as Emperor, and that he has grown tired of republican government.

The navy has pronounced in favor of Fonseca. Rio is now quiet. It is believed that the revolt will be put down and that peace will be restored at an early date.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—The Department of State has received a cablegram from Minister Conger confirming the report of the dissolution of Congress and declaration of martial law in Brazil, with Fonseca's proclamation as dictator. The disturbed state of affairs in Brazil is viewed with deep concern here in view of the importance of American interests in that country and our close trade relations with it.

There is reason to believe that the revolutionary movement is being fomented by a considerable party, which seeks to re-establish a monarchial form of government in Brazil.

Such reports as were received here during the past few months indicated a steady strengthening of the Republican feeling among the Brazilian people, and while the news of the revolutionary movement causes much surprise and will probably lead to the ordering of some of our naval vessels to points where trouble threatens.

Brazil's Diplomatic Service.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—The Bureau of American Republics is informed that the Brazilian government has reorganized its diplomatic and consular service, reducing expenses very considerably by abolishing the legations at St Petersburgh, Vienna and at the Vatican. The importance attached to the United States Legation is shown by the fact that it is elevated to the first class, and the staff of the ministry increased by the addition of second and third secretaries with a force of clerks.

BURNED UP THE HUSBAND.

Brutal Murder of an Old Man by His Wife's Paramour.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Nov. 6.—On Saturday morning last the barn of Richard Foote in the town of Windsor was destroyed by fire. The following morning the charred remains of Foote were found in the ruins. The neighbors became suspicious and an investigation was instituted.

Yesterday Mrs. Foote confessed that her husband left the house about 9 o'clock Friday morning and went toward the barn. A few minutes later John Furman, a former lover of Mrs. Foote's, came into the house with blood on his hands and clothes and told her he had killed Foote with a club. She went to the barn with Furman and saw Foote lying dead in a manger in the barn. Early Saturday morning Furman procured some kerosene and after saturating the victim's clothing with it, set the barn on fire. Mrs. Foote and Furman have been locked up.

CANNOT GET BAIL.

Col. French Jailed, as no Bondsmen Can be Secured.

BOSTON, Nov. 6.—Since his arrest on Monday night, Col. Jonas H. French has been in the custody of the United States Marshal, in default of $75,000 bail. Since that time he has been making the most strenuous efforts to obtain bail, but has found his closest associates out of his reach since trouble overtook him.

But the two men have presented themselves to sign the bond for $75,000 required to secure him his liberty, but neither was properly qualified. During the day John Stetson was applied to by a friend of French but he would not furnish bail unless $75,000 in good securities were placed in his hands in case French forfeited his bonds.

Col. French's friends, who were willing to give an indemnity bond, have been trying to comply with Mr. Stetson's requirements, but were unable to make arrangements. Last evening Col. French was committed to jail.

Father Hall's Parishioners Revolt.

BOSTON, Nov. 6.—The parishioners of the Church of St. John the Evangelist, with which the Rev. Father A. C. A. Hall was connected, regard the latter's recall to England by the Cowley Fathers as an insult to Bishop Brooks, and in a communication to Rev. Father Longridge, the successor to Father Hall, inform him that on that account they cannot consent to remain under his ministration.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

Snow fell throughout Pennsylvania yesterday.

The bank at Caledonia, Minn., was robbed Wednesday night of $3,000.

Influenza is spreading at an alarming rate in the vicinity of Hamburg, Germany.

The Democrats of Albany last night serenaded Governor Hill, who responded with a speech.

Fire in the Progress Silk Mills in Paterson, N. J., Wednesday night, did $25,000 damage.

The sixth annual convention of Christian Workers in the United States and Canada is in session at Washington.

Edward Y. Townsend, president of the Cambria Iron Company, died yesterday at his residence in Bryn Mawr, Pa.

The report that Mrs. Charles S. Parnell is dying is denied. Though she is still prostrated there is every hope that she will recover.

The President has recognized Robert Gordon Handcock as British Vice-Consul at Richmond, Va., and Paul Thal, Consul of Russia, at Chicago.

Mrs. Mary McVay of Braddock, Pa., who is suffering from cancer in the throat, has not taken solid food for 105 days. She is 78 years old.

Six persons were drowned by the running ashore of the British ship Strathblane, 25 miles north of Astoria, Ore. The remaining 25 were saved. The vessel is a total loss.

Elisha Dyer, third, of New York, and Mrs. Sidney Turner Swan, the celebrated beauty from Baltimore, whose separation from her husband occasioned no end of comment some time ago, were married at Newport, R. I., yesterday.

The World to Hear from John L.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 6.—John L. Sullivan, while the guest of the California Athletic Club, in a speech said: "I don't say whether I will fight or not, but it will probably be along in September or October when I shall have nothing to do, and then the world will hear from me."

The Canadian Cabinet.

OTTAWA, Nov. 6.—It is officially announced that Hon. J. A. Ouimet, M. P., for Laval, ex-Speaker of the House of Commons, has been offered and has accepted a position in the Cabinet. It has not yet been decided what portfolio Mr. Ouimet will assume.

Secretary Proctor's Resignation.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6.—Before leaving here for Burlington, Hon. Redfield Proctor wrote his resignation as Secretary of War, and placed it in the hands of President Harrison. No time is stated in the letter for the resignation to take effect, but the expectation is the President will accept it shortly.

THE DAILY PRESS.

W. L. & A. L. FORCE, Publishers and Proprietors.

J. A. DEMAREST, - - Managing Editor.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—The United Tea and Coffee Growers' Association advertise to-day sugar, etc., at prices way down.

—William M. Sandford sold to Frank Doll, recently, a lot on the north side of Stebbins place, 50 by 125 feet, for $425.

—Comegys Paul, M. D., must feel very proud of the highly honorable record he is building up for himself, as told in the local and New York papers of to-day.

—The Ladies' Christian Work society of the Trinity Reformed church will give a fair and supper at 74 West Front street the afternoon and evening of Dec. 10, 11 and 12.

—At Demarest's you will find new canned goods, fresh vegetables, quinces and crab apples. His creamery butter, and Java and Mocha coffees cannot be beat in quality or price.

—Everything to be found in a first-class grocery store is offered at J. K. Arnold's, 92 Somerset street. New canned goods, fine teas and coffees, and a full line of all table delicacies.

—The case of Timothy J. McCarthy vs the New Jersey Central Railroad company to recover $200 damages caused by the burning of the plaintiff's barn some months ago, was to be tried before justice Nash yesterday, but was adjourned to Nov. 10.

—Justice Nash objects to being quoted as having used the term "swotted" in speaking at the Second Ward primary of the treatment of candidate Lovell at the polls. "Swotted" is what he was understood to say, but he says that "slaughtered" is the word he used.

—Next Sunday, the "Day of Prayer for young men", union services will be held at 7:30 p. m., in the Crescent Avenue and M. E. churches, in the interest of the International committee of the Y. M. C. A. Full programmes of the services will be published in to-morrow's PRESS.

—An interesting talk was given in the Y. M. C. A. rooms last evening by Franklin S. Smith, one of Plainfield's public school teachers, on "The Chemistry of Flame". The relation of combustion and respiration was shown, singing and colored were flames produced, and phosphorous was made to burn under water.

—The case of Hand against Miller, which was to have been tried before justice Nodyne and a jury this afternoon, is postponed. Hand sold some of the Crescent rink chairs to Miller for his concert saloon. The latter refuses to pay the full bill, claiming as a set-off the cost of some repairs he made on the Elkwood building while Hand was its owner.

—Every seat in Music Hall was sold before eight o'clock last evening. After that standing room only was obtainable, and some turned away at the door when they found the house so packed. The play was "Blue Jeans", and Plainfield wants it again. The company was a good one throughout, while Laura Burt as June was not in sight of criticism. She is even superior to Yeamans the original.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

M. M. Dunham is confined to his home with a severe cold.

Joseph G. Miller, the druggist, has sold his residence property, corner of Broadway and Sixth street, to John B. Dumont for $4,900.

Hugh Luke, special agent of the Prudential Life Insurance Co., is in this city looking after the interests of the company he represents, which is one of the finest.

W. T. Kaufman of this city was elected chairman of the "deviation" committee at the meeting for permanent organization of fire insurance underwriters in New York Wednesday.

Ex-Councilman S. P. T. Wilbur desires to say through THE PRESS that he was not a seeker after the nomination as councilman in the First ward. He did not attend the primary.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Moore, of Emily street, are the happy parents of a young daughter. Mother and daughter are doing well, and Mr. Moore is being congratulated by his many friends.

Miss Rachel V. D. Benton has returned to her home in Netherwood Heights after an absence of three months on Lake Champlain. Improved in health though not as well as her many friends wish.

Ida Trewin, the fifteen-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas R. Trewin, died at the home of her parents, 10 Orchard place, Wednesday. Funeral services will be held at the house, to-morrow afternoon at 12:30 o'clock.

A Leader Among Men.

Councilman Hetfield, who has been the leader of the Big 6 on the floor during the past two years, is a candidate for renomination to-night and should receive the honor by all means. He has steered the great majority through many a stormy sea, and presented their case and their position before the public in many an able and fluent speech. His party cannot spare him, yet if he is not nominated it will be because those who are at present recognized as the rulers and rowdies of the Plainfield Democracy, are against him.

DR. COMEGYS PAUL IN COURT.

In Company With a Number of Tramps He Is Called to Judge Codington's Bar.

Six prisoners were arraigned before city judge Codington this morning. They were Comegys Paul, physician, of 101 Park avenue; James Garrity, Pete McCann, William Ryan, William Hennesey, and Mike Collins.

The prisoners were all charged under the city ordinances with disorderly conduct. James Garrity had been, while intoxicated, very offensive to ladies on the street. His disgraceful conduct was fitly punished by a fine of $15. Peter McCann, Ryan, Hennesey and Collins, all tramps, had been concerned in a row with railroad workmen. McCann got 60 days in jail; the others 10 apiece.

Comegys Paul was accused with having used vile and indecent language and with threatening the life of Walter I. Clarke.

The story of Paul's trouble goes back to election day, when he went to Shaw's drug store and asked for a drink. Edward J. Richards, head clerk, refused to supply the liquor, and Paul then wrote a prescription for it and demanded that the prescription be filled. Mr. Richards still refused, and Paul grossly insulted him. Mr. Richards stood his abusive language as long as possible and then resented his repeated insults with a blow. Paul is a much bigger man in flesh than Mr. Richards, and he had no trouble in handling him, but assistant clerk Bert Schriener interfered, and Dr. Shaw happened to come in, and Paul left.

On Wednesday Paul went about town threatening the newspaper men with instant death if they published the facts of the assault. The story was promptly furnished to the New York Times, and appeared in its columns yesterday. Without possessing any knowledge as to the authorship of the article, Paul went on the warpath against all newspaper men in general, and against Mr. Clarke the complainant in particular. In the presence of witnesses, both in Mr. Clarke's private office and on the street, he heaped all manner of vile insults upon him, repeatedly threatened his life, and attempted personal violence. His conduct both against Mr. Clarke and against other reputable citizens proved him to be utterly unworthy of any consideration, utterly unfit to be at large, and officer Giese locked him up in the police station on Mr. Clarke's complaint. Subsequently he was released on a bail bond with Vincent W. Nash, justice of the peace, as surety. This morning in court he pleaded not guilty. Mr. Clarke's counsel, Craig A. Marsh, was at Trenton, and in his absence Mr. Clarke asked for an adjournment, which was granted. Justice Nash again became surety for Paul's appearance for trial, which is set down for next Friday at 10 a. m.

At noon to-day a warrant was issued by justice Nodyne on complaint of Mr. Clarke praying that Paul be put under bonds to keep the peace against the complainant. On that warrant Paul will be arrested as soon as found by the constable. Other complaints against him will probably follow.

Paul spent most of yesterday afternoon in a local hotel entertaining the loungers with harsh and unmanly villifications of various Plainfield citizens, and uttering threats of violence against them. The public is fast becoming acquainted with his true character, which is not exactly that of a Christian gentleman, and will be glad to know that a check is to be put upon his tongue and that he is not going to be permitted any longer to make an exhibition of himself in public without suffering proper punishment for it.

ELIAS BIRD FOR COUNCILMAN.

The First Ward Republicans Find No Opposition to His Nomination.

The Republicans of the First ward did not find the opposition they expected, to the nomination of Elias H. Bird for councilman. Mr. Bird received the nomination unanimously. The other nominees were:

For Justice of the Peace—Lewis Peterson.
For Constable—S. R. Hope.

The following delegates were elected:

To the City Convention—Richard Coriell, William Addis, O. L. Jenkins, Fred Dunn, J. McMurray, John Rowland, J. B. Coward, G. W. Moore, E. E. Anthony, R. F. Huntsman.

To the City Executive Committee—O. L. Jenkins, J. Fred MacDonald, J. B. Coward.

The officers of the meeting were:

Chairman—J. B. Coward.
Secretary—Richard Coriell.
Judge of Election—George Moore.
Inspectors of Election—Wm. Addis, Fred. Bird.

Drake Must Pay the Rent.

The case of Martin vs. Drake, which had been appealed from justice Hetfield's court in this city, to the court of common pleas of Union county, was tried Wednesday, at Elizabeth. Justice Hetfield's decision was affirmed with costs, and judgment was rendered for the full amount claimed by the plaintiff. Ex-judge Ulrich represent the defendant, and city judge Codington the plaintiff.

The nature of the case is as follows: Henry C. Drake rented of Fred. H. Martin a flat in the apartment building at 20 North avenue. He vacated it, however, after a short stay, and was sued for the balance of the year's rent with the result above stated.

One of Two Friends.

I have been using Dr. Deane's Dyspepsia Pills in my own case with marked success, and upon my recommendation have induced one or two friends to try them, with pleasing results. L. E. BENEDICT, Editor Ellenville Press.

DOMINIE DILL'S ASSAILANTS.

They May All Go to State Prison for Two Years.

The Morris county court house at Morristown was crowded yesterday with people from all over the county, drawn by the announcement that what is known as the Stirling White Cap case, and first exclusively published in THE PRESS, would be called. Law Judge Childs and Associate Judges Harden and Wilson presided. Prosecutor W. N. Cutler opened the case at 9:30 a. m. Senator George T. Werts appeared for the accused. More than fifty witnesses had been summoned, but only six were called. This was due to the fact that John Ferris, one of the accused, had turned State's evidence.

Ferris testified that on the night of July 4 last he and Frank Moffett, Fred Moffett, Fred Tifft, Gray Torry, Abram Cooper, James Travis, Richard Thomas, and Anthony Shoemaker met in the barn of Hubert Gray Torry, and agreed that Dominie Dill should be taught that he could not trifle with the affections of their sweethearts. As they had already notified the dominie that he must leave the village, and had painted his horse red, white, and blue, turned out the lights in the church when he was preaching, stolen the bell from the belfry, cut the harness on his horse while it stood outside the church without causing the dominie to flinch, they decided to do something more severe. So they marched to the house of the dominie. One of their number was sent to ring the bell. He was met at the door by the housekeeper, Catherine Bayles, who informed him that Mr. Dill was out in the village visiting some of his congregation. The party then withdrew, and, hiding in the shade of a group of cherry trees, awaited the arrival of Mr. Dill. About 10:30 o'clock he appeared and was set upon by the crowd and roughly handled until he drew his revolver. This scared his assailants off. The dominie rushed into his house, the housekeeper having the door wide open to receive him. His assailants then gathered in front of the house and swore at the dominie, using some very strong words, all of which the dominie repeated in court to-day.

When young Ferris had given his testimony Dominie Dill took the stand and corroborated the story.

Senator Werts did not put one of the prisoners on the stand. His plea to the jury was that it was only a bit of skylarking on the part of the young men, and no injury was intended the dominie. Prosecutor Cutler asked the jury to convict all the prisoners.

Judge Childs's address to the jury was very short, but decidedly against the prisoners. The jury were out an hour, when they returned a verdict of guilty. Under this conviction the prisoners may each be sent to State prison for two years.

The indictment against S. D. Moffett and Hubert Gray Torry for riot was, upon Judge Childs's order, quashed, as it was shown that both were at home when the assault was made—young Ferris to have a separate trial. The general impression is that his case will never be called.

A Great Play by a Plainfielder, With a Plainfielder in it.

"Tuxedo", a play written by Ed Marble for the express purpose of introducing refined minstrelsy in an entirely new and absolutely novel manner, and presented by the combined forces of George Thatcher's minstrels and Rich & Harris's Comedy company, will come to Music Hall, Thursday evening of next week. In New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago and elsewhere that "Tuxedo" has been played, it has met with universal approval and has been hailed by the press as the most complete and entertaining novelty seen on the stage in the last twenty years.

"Tuxedo" is in the shape of a three-act musical farce. Its scenes are laid at that well-known fashionable resort situated among the Jersey Hills. A party of amateurs at Tuxedo Park are trying to arrange a performance for charity's sake. But several of their number, who were entrusted with important parts, fail to appear and they are on the verge of failure, when George Thatcher arrives as a guest, and learning of their difficulties offers to bring his minstrels from Plainfield where they are rehearsing and assist them in their performance. Act second shows the minstrels on the lawn in front of Tuxedo club-house giving their first part. In the minstrels the old favorites, George Thatcher and Huchey Dougherty occupy the ends. R. J. Jose, Raymon Moore, H. W. Frillman and Thos. Lewis, the four finest singers in the profession, furnish the solo and quartette selections. John A. Colman does his eccentric dancing while Geo. W. Lewis and the three Powers Bros., add their efforts. Rich & Harris comedy company furnish Misses Ida Fitzhugh, Mamie Gilroy, Blanche Hayden, Grace Hamilton, Louise Rice, Corinne Cook; Burt Shepard, Harry Foster and G. W. Dukelan. Thatcher appears in white face in act first, when he plays George Thatcher. His fellow townsmen will have a chance to see how naturally he plays himself.

When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

NOTHING TO BE PROUD OF.

Elizabeth's Bowlers of the Y. M. C. L. A. Were Just Pie for the Crescent Leaguers.

Although the team of bowlers that represented the Plainfield Crescent League, in Elizabeth, last evening, bowled nothing to brag of, yet they defeated the Catholic Young Men's Literary Association's team with ease. The Plainfielders led from the start, and—as they told a PRESS reporter—held themselves in readiness to at any moment run the score up. But there was no necessity. The totals were:

The Only Man Who Can Carry the Second Ward.

Although Councilman Spangenberg has positively refused to be a candidate for the Common Council again, he should be nominated to-night and his acceptance insisted upon for the sake of the people of his own ward in particular and the city in general. He is far and away beyond any other man in the Council, bar none, as a worker, and a disinterested one, too. Mr. Johnston, who has been nominated by the Republicans in the Second ward, has proven himself absolutely worthless as a councilman, and Netherwood and its district would receive a set-back from which it might not recover in years, if Mr. Spangenberg should retire as its representative and Mr. Johnston be elected instead.

It is rumored that saloon-keeper Miller, the renegade Republican, and his associates the Stovers, and others, are dead set against Mr. Spangenberg's nomination because if elected he will positively vote against granting Miller a license.

That's all the greater reason why he should be nominated, and it's one of the issues that will elect him. Any man in favor of licensing such saloon keepers as Miller, and any man who is the choice of the steady customers of such saloons, cannot be elected.

Little Fire, But Much Excitement.

A gas stove in the bath room at the house of Mrs. D. O. Wotherspoon, 146 East Front street, set fire to the woodwork, at 8:30 this morning, and $100 damage was caused.

James Huntington sent in an alarm from box 16; but before the department arrived, Woolston & Buckle's fire brigade, who had been working near by, put out the blaze. These valiant workmen were: L. B. Woolston, Everett Marsh, Henry Waldron, Mr. Voorhees, Warren Squires and Levi Sutton. Manager Charles Runyon of the telephone exchange was on hand as usual and rendered valued assistance. When one of the men spilled a bucket of scalding hot water over him he did n't utter a word of complaint, but merely said: "Don't waste it."

The fire caused considerable excitement. A large crowd turned out.

Somerville and Westfield Reserve Their Old Teams.

One of the rules of the recently formed Central New Jersey league of semi-professional base-ball teams, was that each club should name its reserve list of players for next season, before January, 1892. Elizabeth and Plainfield have not yet done so, but the other clubs of the league have sent their lists to Secretary Mack, as follows:

Somerville—Harkins, pitcher; Kennedy, catcher; Roberts, first base; Farrell, second base; Heiser, third base; Moorehead, short stop; Leidy, left field; Carbonell, center field; Sutter, right field.

Westfield—O'Rourke, catcher; O'Neil, pitcher; Divin, first base; McCabe, second base; Connell, third base; Howe, short stop; McLaughlin, left field; Lever, center field; McManus, right field.

The Mud Alone Was To Blame.

While turning from West Second street into Park avenue, on the way to the fire, this morning, the Zephyr hook and ladder truck was partially upset by the sliding of the wheels over the mud. Several of the men on board jumped, but none was injured. The truck was somewhat damaged, as was the farm wagon of George Stewart, of Washington Valley, with which the truck collided. Chief Doane exonerates the truckmen from all blame in the matter. The horses were being driven only at proper speed around the corner. Mr. Stewart accepted $6 in full settlement of the damage to him.

Must Satisfy the Mortgage.

Because Christopher Gray of South Plainfield had borrowed money by duplicate chattel mortgages on the same goods, he was a defendant before justice Nash and a jury all day yesterday. The men who hold the mortgages were Andrew S. Hoffman and Charles Vail. Hoffman has the goods, but Gray still owes Vail the amount borrowed. So Vail brought suit. Jackson & Codington appeared for Vail, and secured a verdict of $200. W. A. Codington appeared for Gray. The jury were out three minutes.

—James Tracy, of East Front street, was the recipient of a fine possum from Stroudsburg, Pa., yesterday.

Brower Takes the Vanderbilt Prize.

There were three competitors in Madison Square Garden, yesterday, for the prize of $100 offered by Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt for the best dinner decoration of chrysanthemums in which autumn or other foliage was admissible, to be laid for twelve covers. Each of the three florists who competed strove to his utmost to produce a fine and artistic effect, appreciating not only the intrinsic value of the prize, but also the professional prestige involved in winning it.

The pink table, the work of William H. Brower of this city and his sons, won the prize. There were on it two cut-glass candelabra, and the cut glass shown was valued at $1,500. The silver service was worth $500. In this table the flowers were subservient to the glass and silver, but in the two other tables the flowers formed the strongly-prevailing effect.

A Westfield Commuter Injured.

James Parks of Westfield was carried past his station on the 5:30 train from New York last night, and while half asleep jumped from the moving train, just this side of Netherwood. He was badly cut on the knee and head, but managed to walk back to the Netherwood station. He was taken to his home by train.

The market is flooded with decoctions under the name of Root Beer. Why should you experiment on such goods when the genuine Hires's Root Beer can be had? It is known to be a safe, delicious, and healthful temperance drink.

A CHARMING LECTURE.

"Max O'Rell" Entertains His Plainfield Friends at the Casino.

Everyone of the large audience who gathered at the Casino last night to hear Max O'Rell tell about "America as Seen Through French Spectacles" had a most delightful feast of language, philosophy and humor. M. Blouet was very funny, and very original, and his audience testified its appreciation by constant laughter and applause. Many of the excellent stories that the famous Frenchman told have never yet been published; others were from his recently published book "A Frenchman in America", and all who heard the lecture will greatly enjoy possessing and reading that delightful work, in which the talented author is to be congratulated on having made an entirely new study of America and the Americans. It is no easy matter for a man to write twice on the same subject and not repeat himself. But "Max O'Rell" has accomplished the task most successfully. His first book, "Jonathan and his Continent", was somewhat general in its views and opinions; the present volume goes more into particulars. The author kept a note-book during his lecture tour, and in it he recorded his impressions of the people and places met with in the course of his travels. These he has elaborated for his book so that they have all the freshness of first impressions. The book is replete with anecdotes and good stories, and no matter what the subject written about, it sparkles with "the Frenchman's" wit. The publishers of the book, the Cassell Publishing company, did a very clever thing when they engaged E. W. Kemble to illustrate "Max O'Rell's" book. E. W. Kemble is probably the best delineator of the eccentric in American character of any of our artists, and he has had a rare opportunity in following "Max O'Rell's" lead. With such a combination of author and artist the success of the work is a foregone conclusion.

Among the anecdotes related by the lecturer last evening was the following, which, greatly heightened in the telling by the lecturer's inimitable shrugs and gestures, was greatly relished and vigorously applauded:

THE WAY THE NATIONS GO TO DINNER.

In France, you will see the couples arrive together, walk abreast towards the table assigned to them, very often arm in arm, and smiling at each other—though married.

In England, you will see John Bull leading the way. He does not like to be seen eating in public, and thinks it very hard that he should not have the dining-room all to himself. So he enters, with his hands in his pockets, looking askance at everybody right and left. Then, meek and demure, with her eyes cast down, follows Mrs. John Bull.

In America, behold the dignified, nay, the majestic entry of Mrs. Jonathan, a perfect queen going toward her throne, bestowing a glance upon her subjects right and left—and Jonathan behind!

They say in France that Paris is the paradise of women. If so, there is a more blissful place than paradise; there is another word to invent to give an idea of the social position enjoyed by American ladies.

If I had to be born again, and might choose my sex and my birthplace, I would shout at the top of my voice:

"Oh, make me an American woman!"

Another good story was this:

AN INQUIRING FRIEND.

The humorous and good-tempered American will come and ask you the most impossible questions with an ease and impudence perfectly inimitable. These catechisings are all the more droll because they are done with a sauvete which completely disarms you. The phrase is short, without verb, reduced to its most concise expression. The intonation alone marks the interrogation. Here is a specimen:

We had on board the Celtic an American who was not a very shrewd person, for it actually took him five days to discover that English is not my native tongue. The morning he found it out, he seated himself near me in the smoke-room, and had the following bit of conversation with me:

"Foreigner?"—said he.
"Foreigner"—said I, replying in American.
"German, I guess."
"Guess again."
"French?"
"Pure blood."
"Married?"
"Married."
"Going to America?"
"Yes—evidently."
"Pleasure trip?"
"No."
"On business?"
"On business, yes."
"What's your line?"
"H'm—French goods?"
"Ah? what class of goods?"
"L'article de Paris."
"The what?"
"The ar-ti-cle de Pa-ris."
"Oh! yes, the article of Palerius."
"Exactly so. Excuse my pronunciation."
This floored him.
"Rather impertinent, your smoke-room neighbor!"—you will say.
Undeceive yourself at once upon that point. It is not impertinence, still less an intention to offend you, that urges him to put these incongruous questions to you. It is the interest he takes in you. The American is a good fellow—good fellowship is one of his chief characteristic traits.

Our local politicians are making active arrangements for the next campaign. They ordered a box of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, and feel confident and happy. Price for a bottle only 25 cents.

"A perfect success" is what dealers say about Salvation Oil, the great pain-cure. 25 cents.

THE COUNTY CONVENTION.

Interesting Proceedings of Sunday-school Workers in Plainfield.

The twelfth annual convention of the Union county Sunday-school association was held yesterday in the First Presbyterian church in this city, beginning at 10 a. m. The delegates present were as follows: Teachers, 89; scholars, 66; pastors, 13; superintendents, 11; parents, 7; State officers, 3; total, 180.

The session was opened with a devotional service led by W. D. Murray, superintendent of the Crescent avenue Sunday-school. His remarks emphasized the fact that the teacher must pray for her scholars more and increase her love for them. The remaining minutes of the half-hour were spent in prayer and singing.

At 10:30 the regular call of the convention was given. On account of the serious illness of M. M. Dunham, the president, and the absence of W. D. Porter, of Summit, the first vice-president, H. P. Opdyke, of Plainfield, occupied the chair, and presided over the gathering.

The Rev. Dr. K. P. Ketcham, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, welcomed the delegates on behalf of his people, in a most cordial manner. He spoke of the possibility of entertaining angels unaware, in such a gathering, and hoped that all would receive a fresh inspiration for service. The Rev. N. W. Cadwell, of Westfield, responded by saying that this was a time of convention, when people of all classes met together for so many different objects. He said we were beginning to learn a great lesson from the Roman Catholics, in looking after the children and giving them proper instruction. The Christians in these days—the speaker said—must be well drilled in the use of the "Word", and know how to use it to the best advantage; and to the honor of God, whose servants we are.

W. D. Porter came in at this time and was called to the chair, and officiated in his capacity as first vice-president.

The next business in order was the reading of the minutes of the last meeting, which were received and approved.

The Rev. E. B. Cobb, of Elizabeth, gave a very instructive address on "The Word." He likened it unto a seed, and drew parallel illustrations one after the other as conclusive proof of the theory which he had advanced.

The reports of the township committees were next listened to, and they showed a most promising and successful year among the different schools. With this the morning session closed, and all were invited to partake of the dinner which the ladies had provided.

The afternoon session was opened by a service of prayer and song led by the Rev. George N. Payson, of Rahway, which all participated in, and which was very helpful. A conference on "Work Outside of the Sunday-school: What? and How Done?" was conducted by John Y. Foster of Newark. Those who have heard Mr. Foster need not be told that his was a most instructive talk, and one which would help the teacher very much. He suggested correspondence and visitation among the scholars.

The next address was by Walter M. Patton, of Camden, on "The Superintendent and His Work". The superintendent—he said—must be loving, kind, gentle and Christ-like. He must not be cranky, selfish, or conceited; and should be prompt in his engagements at all times.

State secretary S. W. Clark answered a number of questions about Sunday-school work, which were asked by those present. One question was "What would you do with a superintendent or teacher who was not spiritual?"—the answer being—"They would better give him a 'call' to another field."

The address of the Rev. Mr. Loomis on "The Home Department of the Sunday-school" was very helpful to those engaged in that work.

This closed the afternoon session, and again the delegates accepted the hospitality of their friends, and retired to another room, where supper was served.

At 7:30 the evening session was resumed with a song and praise service, which lasted twenty minutes, after which took place the election of officers, which resulted as follows:

OFFICERS FOR 1891-92.

President—Rev. N. W. Cadwell, Westfield.
First Vice-president—W. D. Porter, Summit.
Second Vice-president—W. D. Murray, Plainfield.
Corresponding Secretary and Treasurer—Rev. C. S. Converse, Union.
Recording Secretary—J. M. Whiton, Plainfield.
Member of State Executive Committee—M. M. Dunham.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

R. M. Woodward, Elizabeth; Rev. J. L. Huribut, Plainfield; Rev. E. B. Cobb, Elizabeth; Isaac Faulks, Elizabeth; J. L. Clayton, Westfield; Rev. R. F. Hayes, Rahway; Rev. J. M. Nourse, Elizabeth.

TOWNSHIP SECRETARIES.

F. P. Bullman, Clark; N. B. Foster, Cranford; W. W. Banchelle, Elizabeth, first district; L. D. Platt, Elizabeth, second district; Executive Committee, Fanwood; G. Vaughn, Linden; Executive Committee, New Providence; S. F. Kimball, Plainfield; S. M. Oliver, Rahway; W. E. Reeve, Springfield; E. D. North, Summit; G. L. Headley, Union.

The "Teacher as an Evangelist" was the subject reviewed by the Rev. D. H. Martin of Newark. His remarks were pointed and practical. He said, among many other things, "Don't tell your own experience too often; be consistent and tell always the truth; study the word, and use tact."

Some people—he continued—seem to think that when the Lord tells them to "open their mouths and he would fill them" that he meant it literally; but the way some people talked gave evidence that there was nothing but air produced.

With the singing of a hymn and the pronouncing of the benediction, the convention closed. A resolution was passed unanimously thanking the Plainfield people for their generous entertainment.

Shiloh's Cough Cure.

This is beyond question the most successful Cough Medicine we have ever sold; a few doses invariably cure the worst cases of Cough, Croup and Bronchitis, while its wonderful success in the cure of Consumption is without a parallel in the history of medicine. Since its first discovery it has been sold on a guarantee, a test which no other medicine can stand. If you have a cough we earnestly ask you to try it. Price 10c., 50c. and $1. If your lungs are sore, chest, or back lame, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by J. G. Miller, No. 10 East Front street, Plainfield N.J.

Why She Left.

Mistress—What! going to leave already? Why, you have not been here a week.

Maid—I know it, mum; but I can't stand it here. Things run too smooth-like, mum.

Mistress—Why, what can you mean?

Maid—You see, mum, I has always been in places where they kept three servants.

Mistress—Oh, you are lonesome, then?

Maid—No, mum, not lonesome; but, you see, I misses the confusion.—Demorest's Magazine.

An Inadvertence.

"I say, doctor," remarked the coroner to one of his best customers, "I thought you certified that the last patient you sent me died of pneumonia?"

"Well, he did—didn't he?"

"Why, no; I sold the cadaver to a dissecting class, and the students report that the subject was poisoned."

"Dear, dear me! you don't say so! I see it all now. I must have given him by mistake some of that cough medicine I prepared for Jones' mother-in-law. I thought it was a little queer myself."—Texas Siftings.

A Rare Experience.

Young Poet—Did you ever reject one of your own articles, Mr. Shears?

Editor—Yes. I rejected one of my own poems once.

Y. P.—On what grounds?

Editor—I didn't feel that I had enough money back of me to pay me what it was worth, so I rejected it and sent it somewhere else.—Life.

A Natural Question.

Jawkins—I hear that Mrs. Loftinez has been so reduced since her husband's failure that she has had to take in boarders.

Guzzleton (who likes something more than napkins and silver for his dinner)—Poor fellows! How much a week does she "take them in" for?—Harper's Bazar.

Generosity.

He—Yes, darling, and it shall be the purpose of my life to surround you with every comfort and to anticipate and gratify your every wish.

She—How good of you, Harry! And all on twelve dollars a week, too!—Chicago News.

Invited to Try It.

J. Boreton Gabley—I am quite an enthusiastic advocate of cremation, don't you know. It's a grand idea—I think every one ought to be cremated.

Bronson—Indeed! But why don't you practice what you preach?—Jury.

Like Other Great Men.

"How did you ever happen to become so lean?" inquired the visitor at the dime museum.

"I was born so, sir," replied the living skeleton with dignity. "I began life a poor boy."—Chicago Tribune.

Another Sister.

"What a lovely girl Maud is!"

"Yes—I have her picture constantly in my heart."

"How so?"

"Oh, I got her negative the other night."—Philadelphia Press.

Conclusive Argument.

"Where are you going?" asked an Arkansaw wife of her husband.

"Down to the drug store."

"What do you want to get?"

"A fresh bottle of snuff."

"But you had a fresh bottle yesterday. Have you dipped it all up already?"

"Already! Why, of course I have. What is one bottle of snuff to a woman who is nursing a child?"—Texas Siftings.

Professional Courtesy.

Two doctors met on the street.

"I feel very sorry for you. You ought not to be out in this kind of weather. You are a sick man," said Dr. Blister.

"I am feeling very well," replied Dr. Soonover.

"What doctor is treating you?"

"I am prescribing for myself."

"You shouldn't do that. You are liable to be arrested for attempted suicide."—Texas Siftings.

Willing to Follow Directions.

Photographer—Raise the chin a little, please.

Victim—Am I all right otherwise?

"Yes."

"Just want the chin a little higher?"

"Yes. That's all."

"Anything to accommodate you."

[Takes out his false teeth, closes his mouth, and his chin comes up to his nose.]—Chicago Tribune.

Eager to.

"We are organizing a piano club. Will you join?"

"Cheerfully! What pianist do you propose to club first?"—Puck.

History Revised.

Teacher—Who was George Washington?

Dick Hicks—He was the first president who never told a lie.—Jury.

Indisputable.

"The jails ought to be abolished."

"Why?"

"They are the resorts of the vilest of criminals."—Epoch.

I WAS so much troubled with catarrh it seriously affected my voice. One bottle of Ely's Cream Balm did the work. My voice is fully restored.—B. F. Liesener, A. M., pastor of the Olivet Baptist Church, Philadelphia, Pa.

"A GOD SEND is Ely's Cream Balm. I had catarrh for three years. Two or three times a week my nose would bleed. I thought the sores would never heal. Your Balm has cured me."—Mrs. M. A. Jackson, Portsmouth, N. H.

AN INTREPID WOMAN.

Mrs. Peary, Wife of the Gallant Leader of the Greenland Expedition.

On Saturday, June 6, a little steam barkentine called the Kite sailed from a wharf in Brooklyn, bearing the North Greenland expedition of 1891-92. There were thirty-four men on board, including the commander, Lieut. R. E. Peary; but in addition the party contained an important member who, says Harper's Bazar, took precedence, in point of interest, over all the others. This was Mrs. Josephine D. Peary, the wife of the commander, who dared to brave the perils and rigors of an arctic season in order to be with her husband. The object of the party is to explore the coast of Greenland, and endeavor to learn whether or not it is a continent. A party of scientists accompanied the explorers in order to investigate the various natural and glacial phenomena of the country. As the boat went out, Lieut. and Mrs. Peary stood on the captain's bridge and received the cheers of the crowd, who wished them all manner of good luck on the perilous journey. Early in September a letter came to the New York Sun from Lieut. Peary, dated McCormick bay, in which he states that after forty-eight days' battling with arctic seas and ice packs the party have "moved within the midnight shadow of the snow-capped cliffs that line the northern shore of Whale sound." A house that was carried along in sections has been erected, and the provisions have been stored on shore. The scientists that accompanied him have gone to the west coast of Greenland, and Lieut. Peary and his brave wife, together with five men, have been left in the arctic regions to battle with the terrible winter. About the first of next May they will start on their sledge journey northward, and hope to return to their present location about the following August, when they will start for the habitations in the south in small boats. But the party that took leave of the handful of explorers believed that they saw them for the last time, unless a relief party goes to them next summer. This is the prospect that confronts the few that are now preparing for the dreary, long winter of those latitudes, and one of the few is a woman! Mrs. Peary is a handsome woman, tall and slender, and wears, in the photograph given above, the furs that were prepared for the land of ice and snow. Until the anticipated return to civilization, the only people the party will see will be the Esquimaux of that region, and the promise of their return is a matter of doubt in the minds of many. Four large Newfoundland dogs are also members of the little colony, which will be employed as leaders of teams of Esquimaux dogs, and on these faithful creatures much reliance is placed. It is sad to think of the dangers that threaten the party, but it is hoped that to Mrs. Peary may belong the honor of being the first woman arctic explorer who has gone forth with a brave heart and returned safely from the land where the ice king reigns.

A Bear Scare.

CORTLAND, N. Y., Nov. 6.—The villagers of East Scott, near here, are in a fever of excitement over the appearance of a large bear in the woods near that place. He has been seen by several persons and badly frightened a group of school children yesterday who saw him crashing through the shrubbery near the roadside. A number of traps have been set and a party has been organized to hunt him down.

If you require Whiskey for Family or Medicinal use buy the best. A. R. TUDOR'S Rye Whiskey is not made by any "peculiar," "secret" or fairy process. It is made in the good old way in which all pure whiskey is distilled. It is sold only in bottles bearing the label and trade mark of A. R. TUDOR, thereby insuring to the purchaser a whiskey absolutely free from any adulteration, and ten years old.

Witness my hand this 2nd day of September, A. D. 1891.

VINCENT W. NASH,
Special Policeman and Collector of Delinquent Taxes.

At the Reception.

"That is an unusually intelligent looking waiter over there."

"Yes. He is the Weekly Slanderer's 'Man of Society.' This is the way he gets his information."—Puck.

BUSINESS THOUGHTFULNESS.

Wife—I wish you wouldn't sit there; I'm afraid you might fall.

Husband—Well, I'm insured, you know.

Wife—Oh, yes; but you haven't paid up yet.—Once a Week.

A Passing Remark.

"If you don't stop monkeying I'll take you before the judges," said the race horse.

"You seem to forget that I have a pull," returned the jockey cynically.—Sporting Life.

The Future State.

Mrs. Dogood—I suppose you have some idea what the future state is like?

Dusty Rhodes—Yes; a place where you will have plenty of time to do the work you won't have to do.—N. Y. World.

Proof Positive.

Little Tommy—Mamma, papa has been drinking.

Mother—What makes you think so?

Tommy—He said that you were an angel.—Texas Siftings.

Well Named.

"I see now why they call them breakers," said the Jersey landlord, as a big wave came up and smashed his bathing-houses into splinters.—Harper's Bazar.

A Stuffy Place.

Jones says that the city may be a stuffy place in summer, but the most stuffy place he knows in winter is a sausage factory.—Philadelphia Press.

He is a Descendant of a British Family of Noblemen.

By Accident the Property, Which is Now Worth Over $6,000,000, Fell Into the Hands of Outside Relatives—Interesting History of the Tankersley Family—A Concentrated Effort to be Made.

NEW YORK, Nov. 7.—Lawyer Charles W. Tankersley, of No. 18 Broadway, believes that he is a part heir to a $6,000,000 estate, which is located around the cities of Hull, Sheffield and Barnsley, in old England.

Mr. Tankersley is a Virginian, as his fathers were many generations before him. He is a descendant of an English family of noblemen, like many other natives of the Old Dominion, and gets a good deal of satisfaction, in a quiet way, out of the fact.

For several days past Mr. Tankersley has been advertising for descendants of the Tankersleys in this country. He is confident, if they could be banded together to make a concentrated effort to get hold of the $6,000,000 estate, that they may be successful.

There are numerous branches of the Tankersleys in Virginia, Tennessee, Kentucky, Georgia, Alabama, Texas, the Carolinas and Louisiana. All of them do not spell the name in the orthodox way. Many of the letters of the name have been lost in the always enlarging shuffle of time, and in some remote districts whole syllables have been dropped by careless and uneducated Tankersleys.

The first Tankersley arrived in Virginia in 1690. Dr. William Tankersley, the son of George, and the grandson of Sir Henry Tankersley, was the pioneer of the family. He came to this country a couple of years after King William, the Prince of Orange, drove James II. from the throne. Dr. William was the eldest son of an eldest son, and really inherited his grandfather's estate, of Tankersley Park, Tankersley Parish, in Yorkshire. But he never returned to England to claim it, and it fell into the hands of outside relations.

The Tankersleys of Yorkshire are an old family, and date their greatness from the time of the Dolphin de Tankersley, who was a regular Pooh-Bah in the 12th century.

Lawyer Tankersley has been laboring for more than three years to get the Tankersleys in this country located. He has found over a hundred of them, and all of them are the descendants of Dr. William, who came here more than two hundred years ago.

Some of the relatives discovered by the lawyer have lost all family pride. They spell their name "Tanksey," "Tankerly," "Tanksley," and every other conceivable way, but always retaining the first four letters.

The relatives in the mountain districts of Kentucky and Tennessee never knew of the brave old Dolphin of Sir Henry, or the $6,000,000, and were also in the dark regarding the family coat-of-arms, which is composed of a shield, crossed diagonally with a red band, and ornamented with three golden scallops.

All the relatives so far dircovered have joined hands with Lawyer Tankersley, and hope to share in the $6,000,000 estate on the other side of the Atlantic.

Fatal Explosion of a Blast.

HASTINGS, Pa., Nov. 7.—A number of Hungarians employed on the extension of a small road seven miles from here placed a number of heavy blasts and, lighting the fuses, repaired to a place of safety. After an explosion the men again went to work, when one of the blasts, which had held fire, exploded with terrific force. After the smoke had cleared away, eight men were found lying under the debris. One of them had been instantly killed, while the others suffered from broken arms, legs and ribs. Two of them had crushed skulls and are in a precarious condition.

The Expelled Artist Pennell.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 7.—The artist Pennell, referred to in cable dispatches as having been arrested and expelled from Russia, is undoubtedly Joseph Pennell, a well-known artist of this city, who occupies a high place in his profession. He has of late years been traveling in Europe, making drawings for magazine articles, and it is not impossible that it was the artist's ready pencil that caused his expulsion by the Russian authorities.

Denounced as a Farce.

LONDON, Nov. 7. — The Admiralty would not permit the naval officers implicated in the recent fatal practice firing, by which a fisherman lost his life, to be cross-examined by the solicitors for the aggrieved parties, and the latter refused to attend the investigation, denouncing it as a farce.

Glasscock and Buckley With the Browns.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 7.—Jack Glasscock, the well-known shortstop of the New York League team, has signed a three-years contract with the Browns. He will, besides playing shortfield, captain and manage the team. Von der Ahe has also signed Catcher Buckley, who caught so brilliantly for the New Yorks last season.

UNITED STATES DENOUNCED.

Excited Chilians Speak Out—Egan's Demand for Protection Honored.

SANTIAGO DE CHILI, Nov. 7.—Wild stories have been in circulation here for several days to the effect that a conspiracy had been formed among the refugees in the American Legation for the assassination of Colonel Canto, who so successfully led the Congressionalists during the recent insurrection.

As a result of these reports a mass meeting of citizens was held in the Plaza to denounce the conspiracy and to take whatever action was deemed necessary.

Minister Egan notified the Junta that threats of an attack upon the Legation had been made with the avowed purpose of securing the refugees. In very firm times Mr. Egan announced that the Junta would be held strictly responsible for any damage which might be done to the Legation or any harm that might befall any of its inmates. The Junta promptly dispatched a troop of cavalry to the United States Legation for its protection.

At the Plaza meeting many incendiary speeches were made and the United States Legation, and its troop of so-called called conspirators were severely denounced. Just before the close of the meeting government officials distributed a circular among the crowd which announced that the conspiracy stories were devoid of all foundation. This had a soothing effect upon the excited citizens and they dispersed to their homes without making any demonstration whatever against the Legation.

IRON SHIP CONSTRUCTION.

A New Invention That May Revolutionize the Present Industry.

NEW YORK, Nov. 7.—Patents in the United States and Canada have been issued to Herbert M. Griffiths, a carpenter in the United States Navy, for a simplified method of construction of iron ships. Patents are pending on the invention in France, Germany, Spain and Italy.

The invention consists of an overlapping of the iron plates at a reduction of 15 to 35 per cent from the present cost of iron ship building, doing away entirely with the inside frame and lessening to a minimum the liability of strain from shock. The plates, instead of being strapped together, as in the old way, are riveted to each contiguous plate.

It has been said by prominent ship builders that Carpenter Griffith's idea is likely to revolutionize iron ship construction. One prominent builder says Griffiths was twenty years ahead of the time.

The patentee is 55 years old, and has been in the navy thirty years. He served in his official capacity as a carpenter on the Chicago during her recent service in the White Squadron.

TO CLIMB THE CATSKILLS.

A Cable Road to Be Built Between North and South Mountains.

CATSKILL, N. Y., Nov. 7.—The directors of the Catskill Mountain Railway Company have decided to build a cable road between North and South Mountains. It will be only a mile and a quarter long, but in that distince it will make an ascent of 1,700 feet. It will begin at the present station of the Catskill Mountain Railway, at the foot of the mountain, and end within an eighth of a mile of the Catskill Mountain House, one mile from the Kaaterskill and two miles from the Laurel House.

Trains will make the trip in ten minutes. At present it is an hour and a half's ride by stage coach. The road will be called the Otis Elevating Railway Company and will be built by Otis Brothers, the New York elevator manufacturing firm. Otis Brothers will take a large part of the capital stock, which will be $100,000, while the read will be bonded for another $100,000.

They Beat the Insurance Company.

BOSTON, Nov. 7.—James Sullivan and Mrs. Catherine McDonough have been arrested charged with conspiracy to defraud the New York Life Insurance Company of $2,000. John W. King is now under arrest in Brooklyn on the same charge. The above persons it is said, brought a perfectly well man to the Company's office, pretending he was the husband of Mrs. McDonough, and obtained an insurance policy, while her real husband was at the time dying of consumption, and has since died. Sullivan and Mrs. McDonough were brought here to jail.

One of the Brazilian States Will Fight Fonseca.

CONSPIRATORS TO BE EXILED.

The Army and Navy Aroused to the Utmost Vigilance.

Rebellious Soldiers Put Down by the Dictator—Dom Pedro's Nephew Said to be at the Bottom of the Projected Uprising—Constitution to be Revised by the New Congress.

RIO JANEIRO, Nov. 7.—General Fonseca accomplished his coup d'etat just in time to prevent a fruition of the conspiracy to restore the Empire. This conspiracy had strong European support, and had been directed in Brazil by adherents of the ex-Imperial family, who were leniently permitted to return or remain in the country.

The Brazilian authorities are roused to the utmost vigilance, and both the army and navy are loyal to the Republic. Several arrests have been made, and all those to whom treason can be brought home will be dealt with severely. Those under suspicion will be exiled from Brazil.

It is reported that the Count d'Eu, son-in-law of Dom Pedro, is at the bottom of the present effort to undermine the government. The Count, whose arrogance and assumption had much to do with the overthrow of Dom Pedro, has never been content to rest under the deprivation of his wife's magnificent inheritance.

He is known to have been in communication with Brazilian Restorationists, and has been watched by the Brazilian government. It is not thought that Dom Pedro has any share in the conspiracy, or even any knowledge of it.

It is reported that the State of Rio Grande do Sul, with a population of 700,000, refuses to submit to Fonseca, and will probably resort to arms to oppose. Many were injured in the riots of November 4 in the Capital, but the troops overawed the rioters, killing several, and finally clearing the streets. Citizens kept within their houses, a press censorship was established, and telegraphic dispatches passed first through the hands of the officials.

Then the troops became rebellious, but General Fonseca boldly reminded them of his past services in their behalf, and promised to care for their interests. He won over all the malcontents, and the army huzzahed for its chief. Then Fonseca assumed the dictatorship, and dissolved the Congress.

The discontented factions are very bitter. The radical Republicans were always opposed at heart to Fonseca; the Clericals do not like him, because he has curtailed the privileges of the Church, and the Moderates and Conservatives are much dissatisfied with his financial schemes.

The election for members of the new Chamber of Representatives will probably be held in January. The Congress is expected to revise the Constitution, but to retain its present representative and federal features. Northern Brazil is decidedly in favor of an Empire, and only in Central Brazil is the Republic popular. This may lead to Dom Pedro's grandson becoming Chief of the State, under a regency of three prominent citizens, representing the northern, southern and central provinces, and insuring the unity of Brazil.

MONTT WANTS NO FIGHTING.

He Accepted the Presidency of Chili Only to Insure Peace.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—Dispatches from Santiago de Chili state that Admiral Jorge Montt has accepted the Presidency of the Republic of Chili, subject to his not being expected to follow any particular plan of action. He indicates his intention of accepting the acts and votes of Congress as the expression of the will of the Chilian people.

Admiral Montt is represented as having at first been unwilling to accept the Presidency. Admiral Montt said he assumed power only to insure peace.

FEARS FOR THE CROWELL.

A Captain Reports Passing a Wreck Which May Have Been the Schooner.

BOSTON, Nov. 7.—Grave fears are entertained for the safety of the three-masted schooner Hattie M. Crowell of Providence, Capt. Chase, which sailed from Long Cove, Me., Oct. 22, with a cargo of paving stones for New York.

Captain Nickerson, of the schooner Florence Nowell, which sank off Pollock Rip Lightship during the October gale, reported having been in company with the Crowell on the evening of October 23 off Seguin. That night it commenced to blow hard from the northeast and on the following day the Nowell put into Boston for safety. It is presumed that the Crowell continued on her course and in all probabity met with disaster.

Captain Bearse, of the schooner O. D. Witherill, which recently arrived at New York, reported by letter that Oct. 23, off South Shoal Lightship, passed close to a sunken schooner, with all three topmasts out of water.

It is possible that this was the Crowell. The Crowell had seven men all told, and Capt. Benjamin R. Chase is a part owner. He has a wife and four children living in West Harwich, Mass. Mate Harvey Phillips belonged on Cape Cod and Cook Nickerson was formerly of Harwich. The four seamen are thought to be foreigners. Mr. John A. Cady, of Providence, R. I., is the principal owner.

FOUL PLAY SUSPECTED.

Farmer Foote's Friends Believe That He Was Murdered.

SUSQUEHANNA, Pa., Nov. 7.—The discovery of the remains of Farmer Richard Foote in the ruins of his barn, which was burned last Friday night in Kirkwood township, this county, has been followed by the universal belief that he was murdered, his dead body placed in the barn and the building set on fire. Foote was one of the most highly respected citizens of that locality.

Unquestionable evidence that fire was of incendiary origin has been found. The disappearance of a colored tramp, whom Foote had hired to work for him about ten days ago and with whom he had a bitter quarrel on Friday, convinces the public that he was the murderer and incendiary. He was seen about the barn in the evening not long before the fire broke out. Farmer Foote was supposed to be in a neighboring place on business at the time. His non-appearance was inexplicable to his family, but they had no suspicion of foul play until a search of the ruins of the barn resulted in the finding of his charred remains. The country is being searched for the supposed murderer, but no trace of him has yet been found.

A SOUTHERN BANK SUSPENDS.

The Florence in Alabama Closes its Doors —A Depositor With a Pistol.

FLORENCE, Nov. 7.—The Bank of Florence failed to open its doors in the morning. The bank's officers refuse to make a statement. The assets and liabilities cannot be learned.

Several exciting scenes were enacted in the bank. One depositor gained access to the vice-president, and at the point of a pistol demanded his money. He was persuaded to desist. A notice on the door says: "Closed temporarily."

Tired of Being a Doctor's Wife.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Nov. 7.—The wife of Dr. D. O. Hill, who deserted her four young children and ran away with a man, supposed to be William Cornell, recently sold most of the furniture in the house, getting all the money possible. Dr. Hill has been away from home three weeks, during which time Cornell and Mrs. Hill have been together constantly. She left her four children in charge of a simple minded old woman, who has been keeping house for them. The authorities have taken charge of the children.

The Greatest Drought in Forty Years.

COLUMBUS, Ind., Nov. 7.—There is no more prospect of rain than there was two months ago, and everybody views the situation with alarm. Wells, streams and ponds are completely dry in entire sections, and since the '50s nothing like this has been known. The worst aspect is the damage to wheat and meadows. In the inland towns, like Charlestown, water is being sold.

Iron Firm Reduces Wages.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 7.—The great iron firm of Jones & Louthlin has reduced the wages of the 500 laborers employed by it from $1.50 to $1.36. There was much grumbling among the men over the reduction, but they say they are powerless to resist, having no organization and being unskilled hands.

English Railroads in India.

LONDON, Nov. 7.—Sir John Gorst said, in a speech at Liverpool, that England owned 12,000 out of 17,000 miles of Indian railways, and had expended £9,500,000 yearly on the railways and irrigation in India. The building of a railway to the Chinese frontier was proceeding.

Kerr's Death Causes Confusion.

DUBLIN, Nov. 7.—The sudden death of Mr. Kerr, agent for the property and affairs of the late Charles Stewart Parnell at Avondale, will cause some delay and confusion in settlin the estate. Kerr had everything at his fingers' ends and no one else had.

SHERIFF CLANCY PROTESTS.

Doesn't Like the Idea of a Present to McDermott for Whipping Healy.

DUBLIN, Nov. 7.—Sheriff Clancy, of Dublin, has protested against the intention of the Dublin National Club to present McDermott with a gold-mounted whip for horsewhipping Timothy Healy.

The Sheriff, who is a Parnellite, has no objection to Healy's punishment, but he says that McDermott's father endeavored to prevent the burial of Parnell at Glasnevin, and that McDermott himself headed the undergraduates who insulted the Lord Mayor and corporation for refusing to hoist the flag on the occasion of the visit of the Prince of Wales.

IS Your Baking Powder Pure?

It may masquerade as "absolutely pure;" perhaps you think it is; but you may know whether it is adulterated with ammonia or not if you

Test it. Mix one heaping teaspoonful of baking powder with one spoonful of water in a tin cup; boil thoroughly for a few moments, stir to prevent burning, and if ammonia is present you can smell it in the rising steam. As baking powder, when thrown into water, will effervesce, do not mistake bubbling for boiling.

There is no ammonia, no alum, no adulteration whatever in Cleveland's baking powder, and in the laboratory and in the kitchen

CLOSING ARGUMENT

Mr. Hensel Sums Up in the Treasury Investigation.

THE TESTIMONY REVIEWED.

He Holds That It Discloses Inefficiency on Boyer's Part.

Tells the Senate that the State Treasurer Utterly Neglected to Enforce the Law Regarding Quarterly Payments—Boyer's Counsel to Reply to the Attorney-General—Adjournment Until Tuesday.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Nov. 7.—Attorney-General Hensel's argument in the Senate dealt principally with the points raised by the counsel for State Treasurer Boyer, claiming that the extra session had been called under misinterpretation of the Constitution as to the meaning of executive business, and that that body had no jurisdiction to inquire into the charges made by the Governor against the State Treasurer and Auditor-General.

After the Attorney-General concluded his constitutional argument in the support of his claim that the Senate had jurisdiction, he proceeded to discuss the testimony and the facts of the case, which he held fully disclosed at least incompetency and inefficiency on the part of the State-Treasurer.

He analyzed Mr. Boyer's admission of his knowledge of the law regarding quarterly payments, and his utter neglect to enforce it, and for his personal solicitation for the issue of the school warrants for the sole purpose of getting the money out of the State Treasury to evade and defeat the sinking fund law. If these admissions did not involve actual crime, or, if they could not be proved accessible to establish technical guilt, they at least disclosed such incapacity as furnished reasonable cause for the exercise of the Senate's power.

In conclusion, Mr. Hensel reminded the Senate that whatever action it might take, its decision could not fail to be of great importance and lasting influence in the Commonwealth, and they should not permit themselves to be deluded by the portentous properties of the effects of establishing arbitrary executive power, for, after all, no official could be actually removed except by the law of the land. Whatever the Senate might transmit to the Governor, or whatever action he might take, the accused official, although technically removed by the Governor, might sit safely in his office and exercise all its franchises and privileges, without bolt or barricade, until the court of Dauphin county and the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania had finally said that he had been legally and properly removed.

It was supposed that the Attorney-General's argument would close the case, so far as counsel was concerned, but the attorney of State Treasurer Boyer asked permission of the Senate to reply to the Attorney-General. State Treasurer Boyer is understood to be favorable to a decision of his case on its merits and not on constitutional grounds.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday morning.

FRENCH OUT ON BAIL.

The Amount of Money in the Maverick Bank Has Been Overstated.

BOSTON, Nov. 7.—Director Jonas H. French of the suspended Maverick National Bank is a free man. After a long discussion before Judge Nelson, in the United States Court his bail was reduced from $75,000 to $50,000, and John Stetson, the banker and theatrical manager, was accepted as bondsman. There was a rumor that French and President Potter intended to run away to Canada, and United States District Attorney Allen intimated in court that he thought French and Potter intended to leave the city.

The money in the Maverick Bank at the time of closing its doors has been overstated. The gold and legal tenders amounted to $1,000,000, miscellaneous funds to $150,000 and exchanges for clearings $300,000, or a total of about $1,500,000. There was very little money in New York. Bank Examiner Ewer deposited with the Assistant United States Treasurer $211,800, which, with the $826,000 deposited Wednesday, makes a total of $1,038,810, and for which the Assistant Treasurer has receipted as "for the benefit of the creditors of the Maverick Bank."

NOT A FORTUNE FOR FORTUNE.

The Colored Editor Gets $825 in His Famous Suit.

NEW YORK, Nov. 7.—T. Thomas Fortune, the colored journalist, has recovered $825 in his suit against James Trainor, the owner of the saloon at the corner of Broadway and 33d street, for assault and discrimination on account of his color.

Mr. Fortune claimed that on June 4, 1890, he was refused a drink in Trainor's saloon because he was a colored man, and when he asserted his right and declared his intention of remaining in the place until served he was forcibly ejected, subsequently arrested, and discharged in the Jefferson Market Police Court.

Freight Agent Charged With Larceny.

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 7.—Edward S. Hoagland, for the past six years local freight and ticket agent of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad, has been arrested, charged with stealing several thousand dollars from the company. The action was pushed by the Fidelity and Casualty Company, of New York, who were his sureties. He is in jail pending examination on Monday next. He was prominent in church and fraternal organizations and has been an officer in nine societies here. His arrest causes a sensation.

LABOR NOTES.

Tenant farmers are being made in the United States at the rate of 10,000 per week, which would be 520,000 per year.

Begging a Living.

The News has adopted the habits of a tramp and the methods of a beggar in its efforts to build up a circulation again. As probably all of its paying subscribers have left it for THE PRESS and the Courier, starvation stares it in the face and it finds itself thrown upon the town like any other common pauper.

So it lays itself down on the door steps of people's houses night after night to incite pity, and then puts forward this whining plea, "Won't you take me regular?" Within the last two weeks complaints of this have come to THE PRESS's office from almost every resident of East Ninth street. They do not want the paper even as a gift, and feel that the Council may be called upon to pass an ordinance to put a stop to the sullying of private door steps with the sheet, as they put a stop to the defacing of the trees with Carey's posters.

—"The wise man will always derive profit from the experience of his neighbor." Plainfield is full of wise men, and women too, all of whom can get, at Collier's, the benefit of 23 years' experience in the jewelry line, with goods to match the experience and at prices that can't be beat.

One or Two Friends.

I have been using Dr. Deane's Dyspepsia Pills in my own case with marked success, and upon my recommendation have induced one or two friends to try them, with pleasing results. L. E. BENEDICT, Editor Ellenville Press.

A TEN YEARS' CONTRACT.

The Borough to Have Thorough Fire Protection at Last.

The borough council of North Plainfield got through its labors in just 40 minutes, last night. All were present.

A communication was received from Frank Bergen, president of the Plainfield Water Supply company, stating that 44 of the hydrants for the borough were already in operation and that the others would be ready in three weeks.

A petition for a sidewalk on the southeast side of Manning avenue, from Patrick Duffy's place to Westervelt avenue, was referred to the committee on streets, as was another petition asking that the northerly end of Summit avenue be accepted.

The special water committee, having concluded its labors, was discharged.

Bills amounting to $451.39 were ordered paid.

The contract between the Water Supply company and the borough, for fire-hydrant service, was read and accepted, and the mayor was authorized to sign it for the borough. It provides for 70 hydrants at an annual rental of $15 apiece, but only 28 are to be paid for until after April 1, 1893. The contract is for 10 years, and has been signed by Frank Bergen and E. R. Pope for the company.

The proposition to purchase 800 feet of fire hose was laid on the table until the question of available finances was settled.

John Stine, a smiling, ruddy-faced farmer, living on the outskirts of the borough, asked to be made a special marshal, to enable him to arrest trespassing gunners. His request was granted.

Louis Conrad's license as special marshal was revoked, he having moved out of town.

The committee on fire, water and lamps were authorized to examine the fire hydrants and see if they were put up according to contract.

The council adjourned for one week.

Dr. Paul Gives Bond for Good Behavior.

On the warrant issued by justice Noodyne, yesterday, charging him with seeking the life of Walter I. Clarke, Dr. Comegys Paul was arrested by constable George R. Rockafellow at half-past nine this morning. Paul was in bed at 101 Park avenue when Mr. Rockafellow went to his house, and his landlady objected to having him aroused; but, finding himself again a prisoner in the name of the law, the physician dressed himself and accompanied the constable to justice Noodyne's office. In lieu of a boudsman, security was accepted in the shape of a certified check for $150, which Paul deposited with the justice. In case he again threatens or molests the complainant, he will not only forfeit the bond, which under the circumstances is considered none too heavy, but will be put under still heavier restraint, to keep the peace, even to the extent of being locked up if necessary. The bond is for an indefinite period. No one regrets more than does the complainant that it has been necessary to teach the unpleasant but important lesson, that in a civilized community such as Plainfield the methods of the Whyo gang will not be tolerated, and that the law will deal summarily with individuals who go hunting for human life on the streets and into private offices.

Assemblies for the Young as Well as the Old.

Two novel entertainments for the benefit of Grace church building fund, will be given in Miss Kenyon's seminary, Friday, the 27th inst. From 3 to 5 o'clock there will be a "Children's Twilight Dance", and from 8:30 to 12 a "Harvest Home" for the young women and young men at which also there will be dancing. The tickets of admission will include refreshments both afternoon and evening.

Desires to Bear Testimony.

Henry Thorne, Traveling Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., writes from Exeter Hall, Strand, London, February 2, 1888:

"I desire to bear my testimony to the value of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS. I have used them for pains in the back and side arising from rheumatic and other causes never without deriving benefit from their application. They are easily applied and very comforting. Those engaged as I am in public work which involves exposure to sudden changes of temperature, will do well to keep a supply of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS in their portmanteaus."

New Jersey's Defeat at Chess.

The rooms of the Manhattan chess club, New York, presented a lively appearance Thursday evening. The occasion was a contest between 44 crack players selected from New York and New Jersey. Among those who upheld the honor of this state were Robert B. Keys of Plainfield, and Harry Kyte and David P. Hall of Fanwood. But the New York team won.

Not Much of a Fire.

Spontaneous combustion in a heap of stable refuse, in the yard of Chas. F. Sullivan at 143 Broadway, set fire to the outside wall of the stable, against which it was heaped, this noon, and the department was called out to quench the blaze. The damage was slight. Box 25 was used in sending in an alarm, though 27 was much nearer.

Bishop Vincent Will Preside in New Brunswick.

The board of bishops of the Methodist Episcopal church, in meeting assembled at Cincinnati, to make the assignments of presiding bishops to the annual conferences for the next six months, scheduled Bishop John H Vincent, formerly of this city, to preside at the conference in New Brunswick, Wednesday, March 16, 1892.

Waste no money. Buy Salvation Oil. It kills all pain. Price 25 cents a bottle.

Catharine Lewis fainted one night in "Olivette", but it didn't cause a ripple in the play. 'Twas only a cough, and they had a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup on hand, of course.

Says She Was Not Notified.

NYACK, N. Y., Nov. 7.—A year ago an absolute divorce was granted by a New Jersey court to Thomas Main, a former wealthy resident of a Nyack suburb, by default, his wife, who was in Colorado, not appearing to answer. The wife is now on the scene and claims she was not notified of the suit. The Chancellor of New Jersey has reopened the divorce proceedings on her application. Much interest centres in the case in Rockland County, where the participants are well known.

She Killed the Spy.

YORK, Pa., Nov. 7.—Charged with murdering George Wolf by striking him on the head with a chair, Mrs. John Hess, of Franklintown, has been arrested. Wolf was helping Mr. Hess to watch his wife, possibly with a view to evidence for divorce. Mrs. Hess caught the pair, and hit Wolf with a chair so forcibly that he died.

I WAS so much troubled with catarrh it seriously affected my voice. One bottle of Ely's Cream Balm did the work. My voice is fully restored.—S. F. Liepsner, A. M., pastor of the Olivet Baptist Church, Philadelphia, Pa.

Co-operative Town Located.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7.—At a meeting of the board of directors of the Co-operative Town Company of Tennessee, consisting of Hon. Robert P. Porter, president; Hon. John G. Carlisle, Hon. Isham G. Harris, Hon. H. C. Hansbrough, Hon. Benjamin Butterworth, Hon. Louis E. McComas and Col. A. T. Britton, held in this city, it was definitely decided to locate the new manufacturing town in Eastern Tennessee. The location is at Elizabethton, in the celebrated Watauga Valley, on the Watauga and Doe rivers.

Supposed Murderers Arrested.

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., Nov. 7.—Two Italians, giving their names as James Ferro and Racci Rocco, have been arrested on suspicion of murdering John King, whose body was found on the railroad track Wednesday morning. Ferro says he slept with King on Tuesday night, and that King got up between 4 and 5 o'clock on Wednesday morning and went away. He denies, however, that he knows anything about the manner of King's death.

The market is flooded with decoctions under the name of Root Beer. Why should you experiment on such goods when the genuine Hires's Root Beer can be had? It is known to be a safe, delicious, and healthful temperance drink.

Hobbs, Champion Lockpicker.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 7.—Alfred C. Hobbs, formerly general manager of the Union Metallic Company, is dead. Mr. Hobbs had a national reputation on account of his wonderful lock-picking performances. In 1851 he went to London to attend the World's Fair, and it was at that time that he picked the famous Chubb and Barmah locks, a feat that created great excitement in England.

CONDEMNED TO DEATH.

Something You Never Thought Of.

When a criminal is condemned to death it is announced with great headlines and community shudders. Yet each moment a person is condemned to prematurely die by some neglected disease.

Clerks find themselve thin, pale and losing their former strength and steady nerve! Mechanics lose time from their work, suffering from kidney or liver disease, stomach or nerve trouble. Business men wake tired, languid after sleepless nights, with dull head; unsteady nerves, brain and nervous system in weak and irritable condition! Women are weak, tired and dragged out, with shattered nerves and exhausted vitality!

All these cases are curable if taken in time Use Dr. Greene's Nervura, the great nerve, stomach and blood remedy, and restore your health and avert the doom of death. It has saved the lives of more sufferers than any other remedy, and will save your health and life if you use it now! Purely vegetable and harmless. Druggists sell it, $1.

"My wife was cured of nervousness and liver and kidney troubles by Dr. Greene's Nervura. She was under the care of four doctors before she got Dr. Greene's Nervura, and she experienced more benefit from one bottle, than from all the doctors together! LOUIS GLANNER, 349 East 76th St., New York City."

N. B. Dr. Greene, the successful specialist in curing all forms of nervous and chronic diseases, 35 W. 14th St., New York, can be consulted, free, personally, or by letter. Call or write him about your case, or send for symptom blank to fill out, and a letter fully explaining your disease, giving advice, etc., will be returned free. 9 15 td Mon

TO BENEFIT POND WORKMEN.

An Excellent Society Organized at the Works.

At a meeting held in Odd Fellows' hall, Wednesday evening, the Pond Machine Tool company's Beneficial society was organized. It is hoped that it will have a long and successful career. The large gathering, which was composed of the workmen employed in the different departments of the works, was very enthusiastic, and after a friendly but spirited contest elected the following officers:

Honorary President—A. C. Stebbins.
President—John W. James.
Vice-president—Thos. Fox.
Secretary—A. H. Leivers.
Financier—L. M. Morgan.
Treasurer—Richard York.
Trustees—Chas. Lester, Lewis Morgan, Chas. Quarford.

The plan of the society is to have the sum of 10 cents per week deducted from member's pay, and if ill a member is to receive the sum of $5 a week, or in case of death a sum for funeral expenses to be fixed hereafter. By this way of collecting their dues, they are assured that none will run in arrears. The men are all pleased with the officers, and will each put his shoulder to the wheel and give it a push as to prosperity. Messrs. York, Dunham, Clouston, Roberts and Corless were appointed a committee on constitution and by-laws. This is a good selection, and one that will work. During the evening the following visiting committee was elected: Alex. Bodlees, B. McInnes, jr., John Trainor, John J. Lynch, E. G. Lewis, Charles Burns and Thomas Reed. Now, boys, keep her a booming!

The third large gun lathe is finished, and they are now shipping it to the Government arsenal at Watervliet, N. Y., near Troy. Hugh Smith will set in position. Our general foreman, Chas. Foster, is untiring in his efforts to have all work out on time.

One of our apprentices named Wm. (Billy) Frye received a "discolored optic" while having a friendly bout with a helper. Put an oyster on it. LATHE HAND.

News from Dunellen.

Funeral services were held yesterday over the remains of the 6-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Wahl, who was burned to death election day. The mother, in attempting to save her child, also received several severe burns. Her right arm is so severely injured as to be rendered almost helpless, and she is almost prostrated over the death of her daughter.

The Rev. Mr. Miles is visiting his sister, Mrs. Giddis.

Percy Richter has been spending a few days with friends in Dunellen.

Over 70 rabbits, besides other game, were carried through town election day, by hunters bound for their homes along the line of the Central railroad.

Pax VanArsdale and a party of friends have returned from a hunting trip on Long Island, where they met with much luck. They brought home a considerable amount of game.

Wm. G. Holton council of the Jr. O. U. A. M. has arranged with the Central railroad for a special train to carry them to Newark next Tuesday. They are to meet Mrs. W. G. Holton. A programme for a fine entertainment has been prepared. About 70 members will attend.

Quiet Refinement Won.

The New York Tribune speaks as follows of the winning of the Vanderbilt prize by W. H. Brower, of this city, and his sons, as told in THE PRESS of yesterday:

The women yesterday were particularly interested in the competition for the test table decoration between Brower & Sons, Charles A. Dards and Siebrecht & Wadley. Each competitor arranged a table of twelve covers, fully decked. Brower & Sons, who won the first prize of $100, had by far the most artistic and refined arrangement. The decorations were comparatively simple, and at first view the tables of the other competitors seemed richer and handsomer. But they had overdone it somewhat by piling on too many flowers. Brower & Son's table was a pink one. The glassware, candelabra, etc., were all of one pattern, plates white and gold, cutlery solid silver of the Louis XV period, the whole set similar to one furnished to Jay Gould. The flowers were large, brilliant, peach-pink Ada Spaulding chrysanthemums, with bouton nieres of the same color but of a small variety at each plate. Messrs. Siebrecht & Wadley had a beautifully arranged table, but lacked the quiet refinement shown in Brower & Sons' exhibit.

The Truth About the Tides.

The question of tides and the part that the moon and sun play in regulating the height of the water does not seem to be clearly understood. It is quite the popular thing to attribute tidal action to the moon only, whereas, in point of fact, it is caused by the joint action of both sun and moon, and it is due to this double influence which sometimes pulls in the same and at other times in a contrary direction that we have the ever-varying phases in the times and heights of high and low water. Tide waves occur simultaneously at points of the earth's surface diametrically opposed to each other, and are termed superior and inferior, according as they are formed on the side next the moon or on the one opposite. As water cannot be raised at one point without being lowered at another, it follows that midway between each of these waves of high water there are depressions of the surface corresponding to what we call low water.

At the period of "change", or new moon, when it and the sun are in conjunction, that is to say, when they are on the same side of the earth, and at the period of full moon, when they have the earth between them, the greatest tidal effect is produced, as at such times the solar and lunar influences are exerted in the same straight line. This is the period of springs, and should it occur when both luminaries happen to be at their nearest approach to the earth the effect is greatly enhanced. If at such times we are also treated to a severe northeasterly storm those of us situated along the river front in the lower portion of a city and other similar places will do well to consider the possibility of our cellars being flooded.

When the moon and sun are 90° apart—in quadrature, as it is termed—their actions neutralize each other to a large extent by the tendency to produce independent waves under both sun and moon. Each pulls in a different direction to the other, and thus the tides at such times are less in every way and get the name of neaps. The sun is the centre and controlling force of the system to which we belong, and his attractive power upon the earth, as a whole, is vastly greater than that of our comparatively puny satellite; for, though the sun's mean distance from us is nearly 390 times that of the moon, it is more than counterbalanced by his mass, which is 26,000,000 times greater than that of the moon. Nevertheless, the latter's influence upon the tides is nearly two and one-half times more than that of the sun.

He Served the County Faithfully.

The Union county board of freeholders at Thursday's session adopted the following:

WHEREAS, This board has learned with profound sorrow of the sudden death of their late friend and associate, C. W. L. Martine; and

WHEREAS, The deceased as a member, and for many years director of the board, served the county faithfully and with signal ability; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of ex-Director Martine this county loses a worthy citizen, faithful in all the duties of citizenship, the board a friend.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread on the minutes and a copy, signed by the director and clerk, expressing the sympathy of this board, be sent to the family of the deceased.

Organizing the Class of '94.

The class of '94 of the High School held its first class meeting on Wednesday and elected the following officers for the present school year:

President—Wm. Ellery C. Leonard.
Vice President—Phebe D. Lovell.
Secretary—Frederick K. Fish.
Treasurer—John Kirkner.
Poet—William A. Stimpson.
Orator—Florence C. Smith.
Historian—Catherine C. Baxter.
Prophet—Frederick W. Goddard.
Artist—Howard F. Turrill.

At its next meeting the class will adopt a motto and complete other details of the organization.

"A GOD SEND is Ely's Cream Balm. I had catarrh for three years. Two or three times a week my nose would bleed. I thought the sores would never heal. Your Balm has cured me."—Mrs. H. A. Jackson, Portsmouth, N. H.

Shiloh's Cough Cure.

This is beyond question the most successful Cough Medicine we have ever sold; a few doses invariably cure the worst cases of Cough, Croup and Bronchitis, while its wonderful success in the cure of Consumption is without a parallel in the history of medicine. Since its first discovery it has been sold on a guarantee, a test which no other medicine can stand. If you have a cough we earnestly ask you to try it. Price 10c., 50c. and $1. If your lungs are sore, chest, or back lame, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by J. G. Miller, No. 10 East Front street, Plainfield N. J.

THE MAN OF FASHION.

Prince Albert Coats of a Peculiar Cut Are All the Rage.

The Prince Albert coat, hitherto the least used, perhaps, of any garment in the ordinary man's wardrobe is being brought forward by fashion this season. To my eye, writes a New York correspondent, it is uglier than ever. Because it is now being worn considerably for late afternoon promenades, I will discuss its new form here. It is shorter waisted and longer in the skirts this fall. The fashionable garment does not commit the excesses of that coat which came over here a little while ago from England, and failed to achieve a conquest, but that same coat or somebody's idea that made it has exerted an influence which is now taking visible shape. Not only in the Prince Albert, but in all coats, the tendency to longer skirts and shorter waists can be seen. Society has had a chance to admire these long-tailed, short-waisted, double-breasted coats, with the accompanying bell-crowned hats at some of the recent swell weddings—the Cannon-Thompson and the Elliot-Hargous for instance. They are undoubtedly the correct thing for day weddings, and the difference between the present cut and that which has gone by would be distinctly noticeable. They must go out with the gas.

One authority tells me that indications of the long stay of this style of coat may be found in the increasing vogue of the bell-crowned hat, and in the tendency to cut pantaloons narrower than heretofore. He pointed out the fact that these three fashions have always been found in company. And here they are again. There is no doubt about the bell-crowned hat and none that the fashionable pantaloons have less cloth in them. They are cut from half an inch to an inch narrower than last year.

After Election.

IT IS NOT

A LIE.

A. R. TUDOR'S Rye Whiskey is warranted absolutely pure and ten years old, and the statement is unqualifiedly true. Read the following affidavit:

HENRY SNYDER, Jr., of the City, County and State of New York, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he has been the General Manager of the A. R. TUDOR CO. from its inception, and he knows of his own knowledge that no neutral spirits, flavoring extracts, or foreign ingredients of any kind have ever been used or contained in the Whiskey bottled under the label and trade mark of A. R. TUDOR. He further solemnly swears that he has personally superintended the withdrawal of the A. R. TUDOR CO.'s Whiskey from the U. S. Bonded Warehouse, and that the U. S. Government stamps on the barrels thereof have, in no instance, borne date later than the year 1881.

IN FASHION'S WORLD.

Dark Gray and Steel in the Place of Light Dove Tints.

A Model Street Gown—Hats That Are to Be Fashionable the Coming Winter—A New Glimpse of the Sailor Hat—How to Do Trimming.

[COPYRIGHT, 1891.]

If very light gray was the fashion last spring, dark gray is the fashion now.

If the gray is so dark and so blue in tint that it seems almost like steel color, so much the more fashionable does it become.

Fancy yourself dressed in a gown like this: A long, plain habit skirt of dark gray, brocaded in steel color, set so closely about your figure that you are walking as if a portiere were drawn about you. The back of the skirt is very full and is trained just sufficiently to sweep slightly upon the ground. The skirt is lined with silk and rustles as you walk. For a waist, you have a long-tailed, coat-like bodice of the same, brocaded with a jabot effect upon the lapels. The vest is dark gray velvet of the color of the groundwork of the coat, and there is a tall standing collar with a steel clasp upon it. Steel buttons are used upon the front of the vest.

Your hat is very dark gray felt, with a puffing of black velvet around it and black velvet strings. Gray bows and gray dove wings are used for trimmings. Gray gloves, stitched with black, are worn also.

Is not that a pretty gown and is it not becoming to you, no matter what your style may be?

Perhaps you may not care for the brocade. Many ladies do not, especially if they are inclined to stoutness. In that case, you will get plain, gray cloth, and trim the cuffs, collar and lapels with steel passementerie, allowing a band or two of the same around the foot of the skirt.

Such garments as these are complete in themselves, and do not require the long fashionable feather boa, and, indeed, such a dress looks better without one. The boa is worn only for ornament, and it hangs down in a long useless way, which, though pretty, becoming and graceful, is not serviceable when warmth is considered. Therefore, one should consider the completeness of one's toilet before adding the feather ornament and should decide whether or not the gown is more fashionable in effect without it.

The plain, tailor-made gowns, tight-fitting at the waist, without ruffles or flounces upon the bodice, and untrimmed save by passementerie, galoon

or braiding, are the ones which call for the boa, which has then a remarkably pretty effect drawn about the neck and hanging down the front, giving the appearance of a feather trimmed gown.

Such pretty hats as are being worn this fall. They are nearly all very small and are so neat and compact that one quite falls in love with them. It is a treat to stand in front of the milliner's window, and look upon the different shapes, and, so pretty do they all seem, that the question of deciding which to choose is most perplexing.

There are seasons when one exclaims "How ugly!" when one first sees the shop windows, and is brought to realize that the fashions there displayed are the ones which are to be worn the coming season. But this year one exclaims: "How pretty, how lovely! How graceful!" And one straightway falls to wondering which of the bewilderingly pretty varieties are to be chosen for one's own individual wear.

The little sailor hat continues to be in our midst. It has reappeared for the season in felt. It is exactly the same shape as the summer sailor, and is reproduced in felt of all colors.

A sailor hat is a sailor hat still—no matter what its style may be. The crown may be higher or it may be lower than that of the sailor hat which is displayed next to it. Or the brim may be broad or it may be a mere rim. But it is a sailor still and is bound to hold its own.

The most fashionable sailor shape for autumn is rather high in the crown and narrow in the brim. It comes in so many colors that you can get one exactly the same shade as your dress, and can thus, at small expense, have a very pretty hat to match one's fall suit.

Suppose you have selected a fall gown of brown cloth and brown velvet. Get then a brown sailor of the style just described and put around the brim several broad folds of the velvet. Do not fold the velvet regularly, but rather wrap it around, as if it were a piece of tulle that you were twisting around your summer shade hat. Fasten it at the back, a little to the left, and then in that very same spot put a cluster of pompons. Have the cluster a full one, with six or eight pompons in it, and have them stand well up over the top of the crown.

Many women do not care for the common shaped hats, for the simple reason ing the curious resemblance of trunk hose was of the same material. Such a design could not by any conceivable stretch of the imagination be artistically suitable to a woman's figure, but on the young matron who wore it, she being extremely slender, it was as little objectionable as it is capable of being.

The bonnet worn with this toilet repeated the pink and gray and accentuated the colors with jet trimmings.

By the way, what an amount of jet there is this autumn and how heavy it is. I noted a costume of the same private opening of which I have told you which offered a good illustration of jet tendencies. It is figured with the long cloak in the first picture. The bell-shaped skirt—to say truth that other descriptive term extinguisher is quite as appropriate—was of beige cloth, bordered with a leaf applique in black velvet. The long coat was cut in deep, narrow tabs all around, finished with velvet leaves and a very deep jet fringe. The coat opened over a gathered bodice of beige silk, and was to be worn with a little black velvet turban with Mercury's wings.

THE TRUNK HOSE.

It is not easy, even after long experience, to understand the absolute lack of common sense manifested by fashion. Why, for example, should anybody wear jet fringe?

Mouflon is among the prettiest of the fur novelties. The soft grayish white of it goes well with many colors. There are a good many women who appreciate it. Now that I think of it I saw Ella Wheeler Wilcox hovering over a cloak dress adorned with it, not many days ago. It's my impression she bought it, for she usually knows what suits her. The long, overlopping garment was of a mercury gray-faced cloth, with judicious but not overdone embroidery in black, and with edgings at bottom and up and down the front and at throat and waist and belt of the soft, feathery mouflon.

I have seen a variety of evening wraps, prepared in advance of the season, and white, rose and pale green seem to be preferred colors among them. Cream white camel's hair, lined with dull red, makes a luxurious garment, especially if it has trimmings of seal or some rich dark fur. White faced cloth is lined with rose colored silk and trimued with shaggy white Thibet fur. An antique white brocade, flowered with pale colored orchids or violets and ferns is beautiful wrap material; passementerie, gold and fur are used for decorations, and white or pink plush forms the sleeves. Pale green cloth is effective, with white fur to give it distinction.

The most comical thing about the present fashion situation is the wavering between the sheath skirt and the loop skirt; between "draperies" tight as trousers and those which call for twenty yards of material. The newest sheath skirt is more of a sheath than ever. It is strained about the figure with not an inch to spare. It has a gored seam up the front and narrow gores on each side and no fullness except for four inches in the middle of the back. It is as narrow a skirt as was ever made, and makes a pocket more than ever an unattainable luxury to be classed with the things to be looked for only in the millenium. It is absolute in its emphasis of its side of the skirt question, but on the other hand the bell skirt is now made with three flounces reaching from waist to ground and quite on friendly terms with the crinoline. We shall see what we shall see.

ELLEN OSBORN.

Barrelled Up His Son.

An eccentric man named George Bump, living in North Lyme, Conn., the other afternoon attempted to put a head in a cider barrel, but could not make the head stay while he tightened the hoops. So he put his five-year-old son, who is deaf and dumb, in the barrel to hold up the head, and soon the barrel was headed up. Bump went to work in the field and forgot his son, until his wife asked him where the boy was. Bump ran to the barrel, knocked out the head, and found the boy breathing through the bunghole, but so frightened that he went into spasms. Bump was arrested, but was afterward released. He has always been known for his absent-mindedness.

KILLED IN A SHAFT

Eight Miners Meet Awful Deaths at Nanticoke, Pa.

SIX OTHERS FATALLY HURT.

The Explosion of a Safety Lamp Caused the Terrible Disaster.

A Band of Rescuers Came Near Meeting the Same Fate—Heartrending Scenes at the Mouth of the Mine—Horrible Appearance of the Corpses—Another Theory of the Accident.

NANTICOKE, Pa., Nov. 9.—A terrible explosion of gas occurred yesterday afternoon in No. 1 shaft of the Susquehanna Coal Company's mine, causing the instant death of eight men and so badly burning and injuring several others that is feared they will die. The killed are:

WILLIAM J. WILLIAMS, 50 years old, leaves wife and four children.

PERRY R. JONES, Town Clerk of Nanticoke, fire boss, 40 years old. wife and two children.

WILLIAM JONATHAN, 36 years old, wife and four children.

JOHN ARNOTT, 40 years old, wife and four children.

CALEB JETHING, 30 years old, wife and four children.

THOMAS LLOYD, driver, 18 years old.

DAVID L. SMITH, 27 years old.

HENRY WILLIAMS.

The critically wounded are: David Powell, 32 years old; Thomas Thomas, 19 years old; Henry Williams, D. W. Evans, Howell Jofheuski, a Polander; two Polanders, names unknown.

When the news of the disaster reached this town, there was great excitement, as it was feared many had been killed, and the relatives and friends of those known to be employed in the mine flocked to the scene. While they waited for news from the shaft, the scene was harrowing in the extreme.

Women and children ran hither and thither, wringing their hands, wailing and weeping and seeking news and sympathy from relatives and acquaintances in the crowd. It was soon learned that, owing to the fact that it was Sunday, there were but fourteen men at work in the mine at the time of the explosion.

The smell of the fatal after-damp that found its way to the surface only added to the fever of suspense and all these anxious ones could do was to wait.

The officials of the mine soon had a band of brave volunteers together, and after the engines were set in motion these heroes entered the subterranean caverns.

They grouped their way through the darkness, fearful that they might be overcome by the after-damp, or that they might encounter another body of gas that might have accumulated because of a stoppage of the air current. Soon they came upon their fellow workmen and a horrible scene it was.

One by one the unfortunate men were tenderly lifted and carried to the foot of the shaft and were hoisted to the surface.

Then scenes were enacted that moved the hearts of the stoutest men; scenes that are witnessed only when the death angel stalks mercilessly abroad in a coal mine.

Ambulances were soon on hand and some of the men were taken to their homes. Others were carried there on stretchers.

Some of the corpses presented a horrible appearance, the flesh hanging by shreds to the bones and the features distorted beyond the possibility of recognition. Those who are still living are not in much better condition and their death is hourly expected.

One of the rescuing party told a thrilling story of the search for the victims. They nearly lost their way in the darkness, and they felt the gas and after damp coming upon them.

Some of them were growing faint and could go no farther, when they providentially found the air current and were saved from a fate as horrible as that met by those for whom they were searching. They groped their way through the wrecked cars and debris until they came upon the mangled bodies of the men.

They gathered the mutilated remains together and cared for the injured, then carried them as speedily as possible to the frantic wives and children above.

These were all either killed or badly hurt. The injured were in such condition that they could not be removed from the mine and it is feared all will die.

The accident was at first thought to have been caused by the explosion of a safety lamp, the flames of which ignited a quantity of gas which had formed in the shaft.

It is now thought that the gas was ignited by a naked light in the hands of some one of the men.

The damage to the mine will reach $20,000.

Shot During a Brawl.

PHILLIPSBURG, Pa., Nov. 9.—John and Andrew Campbell, with six other drivers, being refused liquor at Patrick Flynn's hotel, Morrisdale, burst the door open. Flynn ordered them out and fired a pistol to frighten them. This angered Andrew, who made a break for Flynn, and in the riot which followed John Campbell received a slight scalp wound and Andrew was shot in the neck. Physicians say he will die.

White Caps Settled With Him.

FORT SMITH, Ark., Nov. 9.—Early yesterday morning Alex. Rice was taken from his bed by White Caps, stripped to the waist and 100 lashes laid on his bare back. He was then given an hour in which to leave town, which he did. Last Tuesday night Rice, with the help of the mother, succeeded in inducing a 12-year-old girl to marry him. The child was weak and delicate, while Rice is a big, burly fellow, old enough to be the child's grandfather. The action of the White Caps is generally approved.

SECRETARY RUSK'S REPORT.

The Increase in This Year's Value of Products $700,000,000.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9.—Secretary Rusk has presented to the President his annual report as Secretary of Agriculture. He calls attention to the specially noticeable feature regarding the crop values of the present year. They are so well sustained in the presence of large yields, that the Secretary estimates the probable increase in the value of agricultural products for 1891 over 1890 at not less than $700,000,000.

Reviewing our exports and imports of agricultural products, Secretary Rusk states that during the first three months of the present fiscal year our exports in cereals alone have aggregated in value over $76,000,000. He notes the increase by some $28,000,000 in the imports of agricultural products during the first ten months under the present law by comparison with the same period during the last year of the old law.

He reviews the subject of meat inspection, stating that it was not only demanded in order to keep our foreign markets and develope them, but that there was a very general demand for some such inspection by the people of our own country, in many states of which laws had been passed providing for a local inspection. He urges a system of inspection for all articles of food which are the subject for interstate or foreign trade.

Secretary Rusk devotes considerable space to a review of the work of the bureau of animal industry. Pleuro pneumonia he regards as quite under control and limited in territory to two or three counties on Long Island and in New Jersey, over which a thorough quarantine is exercised.

He earnestly recommends increased appropriations to extend meat inspection to all applicants. "The benefits," he says, "which have already accrued by the opening up of the foreign markets to pork products, the increased demand for beef products, and the re-establishment of their reputation for wholesomeness and soundness in the markets of the world, together with the protection which this inspection furnishes to our own consumers, amply justify a liberal appropriation."

Of the rainfall experiments he states briefly that they have been made, but that as regards the production of rain he has no data yet at hand which would justify him in expressing any conclusions on the subject.

In concluding his report he indicates that from the time he assumed the reins of office he has devoted his personal attention to a general enlargement of the scope of the work of the department in the interest of practical agriculture, especially to the extension of the market for the disposal of the surplus of our great staple crops.

A RUNAWAY TRAIN.

Down the Mountain Side at a Terrific Rate—Marvelous Escape.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 9.—Yesterday morning a coal train ran away on the Lehigh Valley Railroad and came down the mountain side at the rate of 70 miles an hour.

The crew of the train tried to stop it, but the brakes refused to work. The brakeman and the fireman then jumped and saved their lives. The engineer, however, remained at his post.

At the foot of the mountain the runaway train collided with another train, smashing the engines and cars in both trains and piling up wreckage to a height of 30 feet. The engineer, who had so bravely remained at his post, was buried deep in the wreckage, but, strange to say, he was taken out entirely uninjured.

A Spendthrift Marquis.

PARIS, Nov. 9.—The Duc de Vallambrosa, father of the Marquis de Mores, and the Marquise de Mores, the latter's wife, have decided to jointly apply for an order placing the Marquis under the restraint of the Judiciary Council in order to prevent him from further squandering his property. The Marquis de Mores was well known in America some time ago as a stock raiser on a Western ranch, where he sunk a fortune in shipping dressed beef, as he expressed in his advertisements, "from ranch to table."

Pennsylvania W. C. A.

ALTOONA, Pa., Nov. 9.—Miss Blanch Zehring of Ohio, Miss Bertha McCurdy of Scranton, Pa., Miss Corabel Tarr and Miss Hattie Dyer of Pennsylvania, were the speakers at the meeting of the State Women's Christian Association convention yesterday. The convention finally adjourned last night without selecting a place for next year's meeting.

Wants $25,000 Damages.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 9.—William Hamlin, guardian for Daniel G. Watkins, has commenced action against the Steam Gauge and Lantern Company, formerly of this city, to recover $25,000 damages for injuries sustained by Watkins in the great lantern works fire of 1888.

Hope for Justice Adams.

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—Justice N. S. Adams, of Sanford, Fla., who was almost suffocated by gas in the Morton House on Thursday night last, is now resting easier at the hospital and the doctors have hopes of his final recovery.

INDIGNANT OFFICERS

Angry at the Torpedo Yarn About the Baltimore.

THE CHILIANS SEEKING PEACE.

Captain Schley Will Allow the Wounded Men to Testify.

But They Must First be Recovered in Health—Officers Given Leave to Go Ashore at Night—Chilian Police Still Guard the Stewards—A Peaceable Settlement of the Trouble Likely.

VALPARAISO, Chili, via Galveston, Texas, Nov. 9.—Captain Schley and the other officers of the United States war ship Baltimore are indignant at the yarn about its sinking, for there is not the least semblance of truth in the rumor. They know that it must have caused a great deal of unnecessary anxiety among their families, friends and the people generally of the United States.

The utmost quietude prevails in this city and in the harbor, where the Baltimore is lying as peacefully as if she were in home waters and nothing had happened to disturb life aboard ship.

Her stewards for several days past have gone ashore to do necessary marketing, under the protection of a police guard furnished by Intendent Arlegui. The officers will be granted leave by their captain to land to-night.

Although, as a matter of fact, no threats have been made nor any signs been given that violence would be attempted should the American officers appear again on Valparaiso's streets, Captain Schley, in order to be on the safe side and as an act of prudence, had stopped night leave.

In reply to a letter sent Captain Schley, asking him to allow the victims of the recent riot to appear before the court of inquiry and tell Judge Foster what they know of the outrageous assault upon them, Captain Schley sent word that he was willing to grant them permission to testify on certain conditions.

The injured men would first have to be entirely recovered in health, and the officers of the Baltimore must be permitted to be present at the inquiry while the men are giving evidence. Capt. Schley also agreed to give the court a copy of the information about the assault sent to the United States government.

A Yarn Pure and Simple.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9.—All the efforts to ferret out the origin of the story current Saturday night that the cruiser Baltimore had been destroyed by a torpedo at Valparaiso have proved fruitless. The yarn caused considerable excitement for some time.

WANTS TO BE FRIENDLY.

Chilian Government Seeking a Peaceable Solution of the Trouble.

VALPARAISO, Nov. 9.—The Chilian government is seeking a friendly solution of the difficulty with the United States over the Baltimore sailors' incident.

TO SHOW OUR STRENGTH.

Likely that Every Steel Ship May Go South Before Long.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9.—Of course there is no intention on the part of our government to provoke war, but it is evident that the United States naval force in South American waters is about to be so increased as to give us a fleet of greater strength than we have ever assembled since 1865.

With the exception of the Miantonomoh, the Chicago, the Dolphin, the Vesuvius and the Cushing, every one of our completed steel ships may be gathered in one South American port within the next two months.

The ships thus to be assembled, if necessary, are the Atlanta, the Baltimore, the Bennington, the Boston, the Charleston, the Concord, the Newark, the Petrel, the Philadelphia, the San Francisco and the Yorktown.

It is not expected that this fleet will be called upon to do any fighting at the present time, or even make a "demonstration" against any South American State; if assembled its purpose will be simply precautionary.

Sometimes the knowledge that a sufficient police force is close at hand will keep the mob from reckless acts that they would commit if no repressive force was available. Similarly a show of naval strength may repress a tendency among the people of a brave, but ill informed nation, to attack us.

He Was Too Sensitive.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 9.—Frank M. Doyle, aged 25, an electrician, committed suicide in his room on Smithfield street yesterday, by taking a mixture of poisonous acids. Deceased was formerly a resident of Cleveland. His face and hands were badly disfigured some years ago by an explosion. No cause can be assigned for his committing such a rash act, but it is thought an extreme sensitiveness at his personal appearance caused him to wish to end his life.

WANTS A MEAL EVERY HOUR.

Abnormal Appetite of a Girl Who Was Cursed By a Tramp.

NORTH PLAINS, Conn., Nov. 9.—The peculiar case of Miss Julia Hepburn, who resides near here, is attracting the attention of local physicians. She has become possessed with a mania for eating, and the amount of food that she daily devours is astonishing. She has to be fed every hour in the twenty-four, and her appetite is growing. She seems to enjoy perfect health physically, but she has become very nervous. Her physicians think she is suffering from a nervous affection of the stomach, and suggested that she be fed until she was glutted, and that she be forced to take food, until she turned sick. This was tried, but she ate all that was placed before her without signs of distress, until the physician gave up the treatment in despair.

A magnetic healer from New Haven claimed that he could cure her by hypnotizing her, but he failed. Then came a physician from Hartford, who claimed that she was "cranky," and said that if she was put on a diet of three meals a day, and not allowed to eat any more, she would come out of the "spell." This treatment was tried, but she became delirious. She seems to have no preference for food. Anything that is edible she devours ravenously, so long as it is cooked.

Miss Hepburn, who is of a religious turn of mind, believes that she is suffering from a curse. Last September she turned a tramp away from the door of her father's house one morning, refusing to give him food. In departing the tramp told the young woman that God would curse her for her treatment of him. These words preyed upon her mind so that she reported the tramp's words to her parents, who laughed at her. But she grew moody over the matter, and about six weeks ago the voracious appetite came upon her. Since then she has got rid of the melancholy fits she had previously. She possesses her senses perfectly and is able to perform household duties.

WAVERICK BANK DIVIDENDS.

Controller Lacey Says They Will Be Larger Than Expected.

BOSTON, Nov. 9.—Controller Lacey makes this statement in connection with the affairs of the Maverick National Bank:

"Receiver Beal has filed his bond and received his commission, and is now actively employed in providing for the prompt return to correspondents of such remittances as have been received since the failure of the bank.

"They are so large in volume that their proper investigation and classification will necessarily employ some time, but is hoped that a very few days will complete all this part of his duties.

"As investigation proceeds there is a more cheerful feeling as to the assets. The judgment of those best informed is that larger dividends may be realized by creditors than at first anticipated.

"I know of no other bank in Boston which is not fully entitled to confidence. Both myself and the receiver agree that a dividend shall be declared at the earliest practicable moment, and it is hoped that every creditor of the bank will promptly present his claim for allowance."

DISGUSTED WITH FONSECA.

Republican Party of Brazil Not in Love With the Dictator.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Nov. 9.—The new dictatorial government has prohibited the holding of public meetings until all signs of uneasiness pass entirely away. The newspapers are commanded not to make any remarks about Da Fonseca's dissolution of Congress or dictatorial proclamation.

There are many evidences that the Republican party is disgusted with the acts of the President. Baron de Lucena is the only one of the Ministry who remains in the Dictator's Cabinet, and is regarded as an Imperialist.

Both the army and navy continue to uphold Fonseca in the new role he has assumed. The rumored uprising in the State of Rio Grande do Sul seems to have died out, according to the latest news from that part of the Republic, for everything is reported to be quiet.

Exit John E. Redmond.

CORK, Nov. 9.—John E. Redmond, the defeated Parnellite candidate, took his departure from Cork last night. He was escorted to the railway station by a large gathering of his adherents bearing torches and headed by bands of music. Before taking his seat in the train Mr. Redmond was presented with an address by the members of an organization known as "Young Ireland," composed of young men who have just attained the right of suffrage. Mr. Redmond replied briefly, thanking his supporters for their adherence in the face of the violent tactics resorted to by their opponents.

BOUNDARY LINES IN DISPUTE.

Two Hundred Thousand of Indiana's Population May Belong to Ohio.

The World's Fair Site Said to Be in Indiana—Surveyors Bribed by the Early Traders—Twelve Thousand Square Miles in the Territory in Question—A Complication That is Likely to Cause Much Trouble.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9.—Word is received here that the report of Professor Mendenhall, chief of the surveying party sent out by the National government to locate the boundary line between Ohio and Indiana, is ready for submission. This boundary line has been in dispute for some time.

The facts found by the surveyors are, as heretofore alleged, that the true line, as declared when Ohio was organized into a State, commences 12 miles west of the present boundary line at the north and runs directly south to the present line between Ohio and Indiana, thus making a strip 200 miles long and of an average width of six miles—1,200 square miles—to which the State of Ohio lays claim.

The strip described includes the cities of Fort Wayne, Richmond, and Union City, and has a population altogether of about 200,000.

An inquiry into the causes that led to the juggling of these boundary lines discloses that at the time Ohio was made a State there were post traders located at Richmond at Fort Wayne whose trade with the Indians was very profitable.

If the line had been run correctly these posts would have been taken into the new State of Ohio and the occupation of these traders would have been gone. The post traders, it is said, bribed the survey party which located the line, and Richmond and Fort Wayne were left on the Indiana side.

The question is a very important and complicated one, for, should Ohio's claims on Indiana be enforced, Indiana would, on the same grounds, have cause of action against Illinois.

The organic act of Ohio fixes the western boundary by a line drawn due north from the mouth of the Great Miami. The Ohio officials claim that a line north would run into Indiana, taking the cities of Richmond, Butler, Union City and a strip of territory from a few inches at the Ohio River to 12 miles at the northern boundary, throwing half of Steuben County into Ohio and about one-third of Allen County.

It is also claimed that the boundary line between Illinois and Indiana is too far east, and that when it is corrected a large part of Chicago, including the World's Fair site, will be in Indiana.

Last winter Governor Campbell brought the matter to the notice of the disputed boundary before the Ohio Legislature, and a resolution was adopted asking that the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey run the line over.

Forged the Endorsement.

AUGUSTA, Me., Nov. 9.—A. E. Blanchard of Kansas City, Mo., was arrested here yesterday, charged with embezzling $2,100. A man named Clarke of New Portland sent $2,100 to Blanchard for investment. He received a gilt edged mortgage, but, recently, for some reason, he became suspicious of the security, and had Blanchard arrested. Blanchard has admitted forging the endorsement on the mortgage, and raised the money, which he has refunded to Clark. Blanchard was held as a witness on a case now in court.

Disgusted With Their Messiah.

RENO, Nev., Nov. 9.—The Indians who are holding ghost dances in this vicinity and another delegation of Indians tribes east from the Rocky Mountains have been to Walker Lake to see Jack Wilson, the Piute Messiah. The "Big Braves" from the East are much disappointed. They expected to see a powerful, brawny Messiah, muscularly developed, but instead of that they find that he is a very ordinary looking Indian.

He Was a Prominent Californian.

NASHUA, N. H., Nov. 9.—Samuel H. Centre, of San Francisco, aged 63 years, who died suddenly in this city Saturday, had resided in California for several years, but was a native of Massachusetts. He was superintendent of mines in California at the time of his death, and has held prominent positions in the United States Mint, and Custom House in California. He came to this city last week to visit relatives.

Mexico and the Fair.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8.—The Latin-American Department of the World's Columbian Exposition is informed that the Mexican Government will send a special representative to Chicago at once to take charge of Mexican interests there. Detailed instructions to the Governors of the various States have been prepared, and full directions are about to be issued.

Baron Fava Promoted.

ROME, Nov. 8.—Baron Fava, Italian Minister to the United States, who has been absent from his post of duty on leave, owing to the controversy between the Italian and United States Governments on account of the New Orleans affair, has been promoted to the rank of Plenipotentiary of the First Class.

Sale of Seats for Yale-Princeton Game.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—Over five thousand dollars were realized at the sale of boxes, reserved seats and tally-ho stands for the Yale-Princeton football game on Thanksgiving Day, on Manhattan Field. Mrs. Garrison, of Princeton, paid $105 and H. H. Streng of the Union Club paid $100 for boxes.

PARNELL'S LETTERS.

Tim Harrington Will Make Matters Warm for William O'Brien.

DUBLIN, Nov. 9.—Timothy Harrington, in an interview last night, said that he had just come into the possession of the original copies of Mr. Parnell's date of the late leader's parleyings with the representatives of the McCarthy faction at Boulogne. These, Mr. Harrington said he would certainly publish within twenty-four hours.

He added that the documents would prove very unpleasant reading for Mr. O'Brien and his Liberal friends, and would confirm fully his own and Mr. Redmond's statements of what had occurred at Boulogne, which they had made from memory.

Mr. O'Brien, Mr. Harrington declared, had wilfully suppressed letters which would vindicate Mr. Parnell's motives and explain his position.

The originals would show that Mr. Parnell's object was to obtain such assurance from the Liberal leaders as would render it impossible for them to backslide from Home Rule. Mr. O'Brien really represented the Liberals in the conference, and informed them by letter from time to time of the progress of his treatings with Mr. Parnell.

The final failure of the conference was not due to the obstinacy of Mr. Parnell, as had been represented, but to the refusal of Mr. Gladstone and his colleagues to give any assurance of their adherence to former pledges. Mr. Gladstone's letter to Mr. Goschen, denying any connection with the conference, was, Mr. Harrington said, like most of the Liberal leader's utterances, difficult to understand.

NEW AND FATAL DISEASE.

Asiatic Black Tongue Makes Its Appearance in Indiana.

FRANKFORT, Ind., Nov. 9.—A new and dreadfully fatal disease has made its appearance near Mirklin, Ind.

A few days ago one of the children in the family of John Wyman was attacked with a peculiar disease that baffled all medical skill, and in 48 hours the child was dead. One after the other the children out of a family of four contracted the disease and died. Two days ago the mother, Mrs. Wyman, died. The father and husband is left a raving maniac.

The description of the disease is almost too dreadful to realize. For the first few hours the patient is afflicted with a mild fever, the tongue then becomes inflamed and assumes huge proportions. The organ then turns very black in color, decomposition sets in, and in the paroxysms of the most intense sufferings death ensues.

Physicians say the disease is known to them only as it is described in medical books and that its home is in Asia, where among the natives it is as fatal as cholera. They call it Asiatic black tongue and confess their utter inability to combat its deadly work. Later news from the affected district says seven new cases are reported beginning with the same symptoms.

GLAVE'S ALASKA EXPEDITION.

Back After Seven Years of Exploration—Valuable Discoveries.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9.—A. J. Glave, late of Stanley's exploring expedition, who has been in Alaska for the last seven years, has arrived at Victoria, B. C., after attempting to discover the head waters of Alaska River. He located the source about 110 miles northeast of Mt. St. Elias and has, by his expedition, demonstrated the fact that the whole of the country east of Schwatka's field of explorations, is available for pack horses.

He himself took and brought back four horses in perfect condition. Heretofore nothing but manual labor has been employed in the country traversed. He has discovered and taken photographic views of the whole country lying between North Yukon and the base of the St. Elias Alps, and finds it more suitable for traffic than was ever imagined.

Glave is coming direct to Washington to ask the United States government for an appropriation to enable him to open up trails next season. Mr. Glave's party was composed of himself and a friend named Dalton. It was the smallest party that has ever traversed the region. They took 400 photographs and report having discovered an enormously rich copper mine.

DID HE KILL HIMSELF?

Missing Lawyer Bard Believed to Have Committed Suicide.

READING, Pa., Nov. 9.—It is now believed that Willian P. Bard, the missing lawyer, committed suicide, and a search is being made for his body. The Schuylkill Canal was drawn off yesterday opposite this city, and the river banks have been carefully examined, but no trace of his body has been found.

It is stated that he is some $3,000 behind in his accounts with the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company of Philadelphia, and that he also was unable to pay over considerable sums of money which he held for various persons and estates. The exact amount of his shortage cannot be ascertained, but it will be largely beyond his ability to pay.

—About the largest assembly of people that the Dunellen M. E. church ever contained at any one time, was last evening, the occasion being a union meeting of the four churches in the interests of temperance. The Rev. L. E. Livermore addressed the meeting very ably on the question, and brought in many points of interest in relation to the license law.

—The fourth of the Saturday evening dances at The Albion, was highly enjoyed by the guests and a number of young couples from among the best society of the city, last Saturday. The music was fine and the selection of dances was to the taste of all. These entertainments will be tendered by the proprietor on every alternate Saturday evening, during the winter.

Joe English Again To-night.

The coming of Joe English to Reform Hall again last evening brought out a great audience. Long before the time for the opening of the doors, the steps and sidewalk were crowded. At 7:30 there was not a vacant seat in the house. When Mr. English appeared he was enthusiastically applauded. He spoke until 9 o'clock, with his usual success. Twenty-seven signers to the pledge were secured. H. N Spencer presided at the meeting. The Rev. W. E. Honeyman led the devotional services. The platform was filled with representative men. Andrew Vanderbeek as usual led the choir. Miss Doremus played the piano. By strong request Mr. English was persuaded to remain in town over Monday. His talk to-night will begin at 7:30.

Notes of the Boys' Club.

The average attendance at the rooms last week was 57 per evening, the largest being 63 and the smallest 52. The number of visitors was 21. Eight boys joined during the week.

There will be an entertainment for the boys this evening, at the rooms, beginning at 8 o'clock.

The papers and magazines which have been contributed during the last month are fully appreciated. The club is always glad to receive them.

THE POOL TOURNAMENT WINNERS.

In Spite of a Big Handicap Penalty, Lyman Gets Third Prize.

The Crescent League handicap pool tournament has closed. Only 96 of the full schedule of 210 games have been been played, but as interest lagged because of the large number of entries, the committee decided to close the contest and let the members give their undivided attention to bowling.

All those who had played six games and over were counted in, and the following winners announced:

1st prize,	F. S. Green	92.3	per cent.
2d	" C. B. VanWinkle	80.	"
3d	" Charles Lyman	76.5	"

Next saturday evening there will be an informal stag party at the club house, when the prizes will be presented and other entertainment rendered. The members will invite their friends.

This is the complete score of the tournament, showing the handicap each player gives and the games won and lost:

News from the Public Library.

At the special meeting of the board of directors of the Public Library, held Saturday night, all were present except directors Dumont and Talmadge.

A communication was received from the librarian, together with petitions from citizens, requesting the establishment of a delivery station nearer the business center of town. These were referred to the library committee with power to establish such delivery stations as they may see fit, provided no extra expense be incurred.

The librarian was instructed to grant the privileges of the library to persons who are temporary residents of the city for the period of a month or more, provided that the return of the books shall be guaranteed by some responsible citizen.

Bills to the amount of $234.45 were approved and ordered paid.

The librarian's report for October was read approved, and ordered on file.

Bills amounting to $169.70, for which warrants had been drawn and signed by the president and treasurer, were approved.

The treasurer reported that $48.27 had been deposited in the First National bank as the amount received from fines, etc., for the last three months.

The matter of trimming and cutting down the trees on the library grounds was referred to the executive committee with power.

The report of Miss E. L. Adams, librarian, for October, 1891, is as follows:

TREVORTON, Pa., Nov. 9.—C. C. Ford, recently employed by the Weiss Produce Company of Klingerstown, has absconded, with money and securities valued at $6,000. Mary Flocher, Ford's sweetheart, is also missing and the impression prevails that she has eloped with Ford.

NEW JERSEY BRIEFS.

The barn of Col. John McEnery, Jersey City, was destroyed by fire yesterday with several valuable horses. Loss, $5,000.

Atlantic county officials have refused to accept from the contractors the new $50,000 county bridge, owing to a flaw in its construction.

Detective Dalton has left Jersey City to bring back from San Francisco John Hyer, who it is alleged absconded with $6,000 belonging to his employers, Messrs. Harney & Sons, real estate dealers.

An application has been made before Judge Knapp of Jersey City for the examination as to the sanity of Mrs. Mary O'Connor, who killed her two children ten years ago and who has since been confined in an insane asylum.

The Jersey Lily has become quite famous for her beauty, and she means to keep it, too, for, hasn't she learned in the great United States to cure colds with Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup?

PARTICULAR MENTION.

James Brooklyn was visiting friends in Dunellen yesterday.

Miss Fannie Woodruff of Rahway, has been visiting her aunt, Mrs. Joseph S. Cutter.

Dr. D. C. Adams, George F. Brown and J. A. Smith have gone to shoot redheads and wood-duck at Barnegat.

T. T. C. Crain, city chamberlain of New York, will speak to men in the Trinity Reformed church next Sunday afternoon at 4:15.

George Kyte and Sidney E. Flower met this morning for the first time since election. They shook hands cordially and exchanged congratulations.

The Crescent League will send the following team to Elizabeth, this evening, to bowl the crack team of that city, on the E. A. C. alleys: H. W. Emerson, Teel, Rogers, Thiers, Vail, VanWinkle, Reed, Doane, Davis, VanEmburgh.

Mme. Blouet, wife of "Max O'Rell", who lectured in the Casino last Thursday evening, has translated all of that French writer's books into English, except the last, which was written in English. She is a Devonshire Englishwoman, daughter of a well-to-do ship owner named Bartlett.

Several Plainfield women were present last Friday at the first monthly meeting after the winter of the "New York League of Unitarian Women". Among the addresses delivered was one by Mrs. D. W. Pond of this city in which she gave an interesting narrative of the origin and growth of the Unitarian society of Plainfield.

A very charming christning took place in St. Mary's church at four o'clock, yesterday afternoon. Father Stafford gave in baptism the name of Florence May, to the two-weeks' old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Goeller of 169 West Third street. Dennis Hickey, an uncle of the baby, and Miss Kittie A. Mahoney were the sponsers.

Miss Collishaw, one of new York's prominent workers in mission work, will be a guest of the Whatsoever circle, King's Daughters, of the Park Avenue Baptist church, next Thursday evening, and will give a short talk on the work as it is carried on in her mission, the Mariner's Temple. Her talk will be one of great interest to all King's Daughters, and she will doubtless have a very large audience.

Alexander Warnock, father of the late Mrs. Vincent L. Frazee, and of Mrs. J. Howard Wilson, of this city, died at Englewood, Saturday, in the 56th year of his age. The cause was consumption. Mr. Warnock was long a resident of Plainfield until about a year ago when he moved to Englewood with his second wife and their child, and engaged in business there. By a former wife he had five children. Funeral services will be held tomorrow afternoon, at 2 o'clock, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. J. Howard Wilson, 144 Grove street.

The Earl of Leven has written a letter from Roehampton House, Roehampton, England, to Andrew D. Mellick, jr., of this city, the author of "The Story of an Old Farm; or, Life in New Jersey in the Eighteenth Century", thanking him for the tribute he pays in his book to the Earl's great uncle, Captain William Leslie, of the 17th British Regiment of foot. This young officer was wounded at the battle of Princeton, January 3, 1777, and Mr. Mellick in his work gives a very full and interesting account of Captain Leslie's death on the following day at Pucklamin and of the impressive funeral ceremonies on Sunday, the 6th, in the Lutheran graveyard of that village, where the young officer still lies buried.

For the Benefit of the Boys' Club.

Recreation is necessary to keep in tune our mental and physical energies. We get tired in this work-a-day world, and without something to turn our thoughts away from weary bodies our abilities would wane and our activity fail. Is there anything more restful than good music.

H. R. Haines in Musical Memories says: "Music has a destiny as a vast civilizer, recreator, health-giver, work-inspirer, and purifier of man's life. Have we never known an invalid to forget pain and weariness under the stimulus of music? Have you never seen a pale cheek flush, a dull eye sparkle, and alertness and vigor take possession of the whole frame, and animation succeed apathy? What does this mean? It means that music attacks the nervous system directly, reaches, and rouses, where physician and change of air can neither reach nor rouse."

The first concert of the season takes place next Thursday evening, at 8:15, in the Casino, when John Cheshire, the very prince of performers, will visit Plainfield for the first time. From the first touch upon the golden wires the audience will be enraptured. Melody will be represented also in the Mendelssohn quartette, and the sweet flowing, sonorous tones of these male voices will be, what they ever have been, a satisfying, restful relaxation. The concert is for the benefit of the industrial training department of the Plainfield Boys' club, and all advocates of this form of education should help to insure a crowded house for these talented musical friends. Let all give them a royal welcome. For tickets, see the advertisement elsewhere.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Col., Nov. 9.—The remains of Helen Hunt Jackson, the famous poetess, known as "H. H." were removed Saturday from Cheyenne Mountain, where they have been buried for six years. They were taken to Evergreen Cemetery and buried, and the spot will be appropriately marked. This step has been in contemplation for a long time, as the spot which the authoress intended should be held sacred by those who knew her has been desecrated by toll-gates and become the resort of pleasure seekers.

THE BUILDING OF THE CHURCH.

Unitarians Lay the Corner-stone of Their New House of Worship.

The corner-stone of the new Unitarian church building on Park avenue, near Seventh street, was laid at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The Rev. Hobart Clark, pastor of the church, presided at the service, and the Rev. Daniel W. Morehouse, secretary of the Unitarian conference for the Middle States and Canada, pronounced the stone well and truly laid, when it had been lowered into place, and preached an open-air sermon on "The Modern Church". The list of contents of the box sealed up in the stone was read by Henry B. Wells. The new church is to be a handsome edifice of stone. Its cost will reach considerably more than $10,500, the amount originally estimated, but it will e practically free from debt. During the services hymns were sung by the congregation. The following paper was read by the Rev. Mr. Clark:

RECORD OF THE BEGINNINGS OF THE FIRST UNITARIAN SOCIETY OF PLAINFIELD, NEW JERSEY.

Prior to the year 1889, A. D., there were living in this city, mostly unknown to one another, and connected with other churches, or with no church, Unitarians who had come here from other parts of the country, and also other earnest, liberal-minded Christian men, and women not calling themselves Unitarians, although in sympathy with the spirit and purpose of the movement known as Unitarianism.

No Unitarian services were held here, however, until May 12, 1889; on that day the Rev. Robert Collyer of New York held the first Unitarian service, and preached the first Unitarian sermon here, in the church of the Seventh-Day Baptists, which was kindly offered by that society for the purpose.

After that date services were held at 17 East Front street from May 19 to July 14, and from Sept. 8 to Oct. 6, 1889, by the secretary of the New York State conference, the Rev. D. W. Morehouse, and by other ministers who volun*teered their assistance.*

On Oct. 6 it was announced that another meeting-place must be provided, and the Hon. Job Male, mayor of the city, offered for that purpose a dwelling-house belonging to him at 4 Second place; his offer was gladly accepted, and services were first held there regularly until the present time, and the society expects to continue to hold them there until the church is built. In the meantime an organization had been effected, and the first board of trustees was elected, being composed of the following members: the Hon. Job Male, Henry B. Wells, (president), Charles W. Opdyke, (clerk), Mrs. David W. Pond, Mrs. Ruth C. Leonard, H. B. Nichols, and George D. Patton, the last named being chosen as the first treasurer of the society, which was incorporated July 17, 1889, the articles of incorporation being filed and recorded in the county clerk's office Aug. 26, 1889.

A Sunday-school was called together, and organized Sept. 22, 1889, of which Henry B. Wells was chosen superintendent, an office which he continues to fill.

On Dec. 1, 1889, the Rev. Wm. P. Tilden took charge of the society, and continued his ministrations for 25 Sundays; that is, until March 1, 1890, when, owing to failing health, he was obliged to sever his connection with the society; but in that brief period "his wise and loving hand" had so "guided and strengthened the infancy of our church life"—he had made so deep an impression by the rare saintliness of his spirit, and by the loftiness and purity of his Christian ideals—that the influence of his word and of his presence must long abide among us.

Mr. Tilden never recovered his health; he died at his home in Milton, Mass., Oct. 3, 1890. Memorial services were held by the society here on Sunday, Oct. 5, and appropriate resolutions regarding his death, his character, and his work here, were adopted unanimously.

On May 5, 1890, the Rev. Hobart Clark was called to the pastorate; he took charge of the society June 1, and was installed as pastor the evening of June 13, 1890. [A copy of the order of services then held is deposited herewith.]

At a meeting of the trustees held Jan. 27, 1890, Mrs. D. W. Pond and Mr. C. W. Opdyke were requested to act as a committee to receive subscriptions for the building of a church edifice. Job Male was afterwards added to that committee. On April 28 the treasurer reported that the building fund amounted to $360.

About this time Mr. Male purchased, with the intention of presenting it to the society, the lot of land on Park avenue upon which the church building is now being erected; and the subscription committee, having made an active canvass, reported to the trustees, Aug. 25, that the sum of $2,810 had been subscribed to erect such a building provided the sum of $6,000 could be raised. On Oct. 27 the total subscription amounted to $4,560. On Oct. 13, 1890, the society had elected a building committee, consisting of Job Male, Henry B. Wells, Joseph O. Osgood, S. R. Krom and C. W. Opdyke. Since then Mr. Male has died, and Messrs. Opdyke and Krom have retired from the committee, their places being filled by David W. Pond, William T. Broadway, and L. B. Woolston, who with Mr. Wells and Mr. Osgood now constitute the committee.

At the annual meeting of the society on Jan. 12, 1891, a deed was read, executed by Mr. Male Dec. 20, 1890, conveying to the society a lot of land on Park avenue for the erection of a house of worship; and also a written statement signed by Mr. Male reciting that he had placed said deed in the hands of Nelson Runyon, attorney at law, "to be held by him in escrow until the church building shall be completed and paid for, and then to be delivered to the society's trustees". The thanks of the society were thereupon returned to Mr. Male, and to Mrs. Sarah Stout for a gift from her of $1,000.

The building committee having held a number of meetings, and after consultations with architects and with the society, finally submitted to the society at a meeting held May 28, 1891, a plan and elevation for a church building in stone designed by Oscar S. Teale; and it was voted by the society, on motion of N. D. C. Hodges, that "the society approves the work of the building committee, and authorizes them to go on with the work in such a manner as they deem desirable".

After some modifications in the plans, which were found to be necessary on the ground of economy, the committee made contracts for the stone-masonry work with I. W. Pangborn, and for the carpentry work with John Abbott. Ground was broken for the building Oct. 2, 1891, and the work is now being carried forward rapidly.

This record of the beginnings would not be complete without some mention of the great loss sustained by the society in the death of the Hon. Job Male, which occurred on Jan. 29, 1891. Upright, honorable, just, and liberal, the whole community mourned his loss in common with this society, of which he was a generous benefactor. It should also be noted that this society has from the first received generous aid and encouragement from the American Unitarian association; that it is indebted to the kindness of Mrs. Joseph P. Hale of New York for the gift of the piano and hymn books which it now uses; that the building fund has been added to by the contributions of Unitarians living elsewhere, and has been materially increased by the zealous exertions of the woman's aid society connected with this church; the Wednesday evening committee which has for two winters maintained free lecture courses is now working successfully for the same purpose. All these, and other people and organizations, have helped in various ways to build up the society, to increase its usefulness, and to establish it in a house of its own which shall also be a house of God, our Heavenly Father.

To commemorate the foundation of this building destined for the worship of God, and the service of man in the spirit of Jesus Christ, this stone was laid, on the eighth day of November, Anno Domini Eighteen hundred and ninety-one, by the Rev. Daniel W. Morehouse, secretary of the Unitarian conference of the Middle States and Canada.

This box received its contents, and was sealed, in our presence.

And So It Goes.

A small boy was drifting about the borough the other day getting rid of tickets for the coming entertainment of the Four Leaf Clover as fast as he could deal them out and make change. At length his pursuit of customers led him along one of the streets where a gang of Italians were laying the new water pipes, and he resolved to tackle one of the aliens who were tolling in the ditch. So up he sailed to a big, long-armed digger, and began:

"Say, mister, don't you want to buy a ticket to the entertainment of the Four Leaf Clover".

"Na—Italiano no buya"—vaguely replied the foreigner.—"Italiano pulla de string, maka da monk jump. Youa dropa da nick, I doa da rest, ya."

"Oh, come on"—said the speculator.—"You don't know what I mean. I want you to buy a ticket to the Four Leaf Clover's entertainment, on the 17th; cost you fifty cents."

"Fifty cent; gooda gracia! You talka thro' your hata. Fifty cent! Oh, you maka me feel like the Russiano whata say: 'Zxywbglowskyowquiemhylozhgftatlomulqpjzskygivemetimetothinkitoverowski.' Fifty centa buya me shirta—but letta me see da tick." And the youngster passed out a card of admission for inspection, with a little bill of lading to show just what the ticket would let one in to see.

"Gooda show for da kids?"—queried the critic.

"Great!"—answered the guest.—"The children cry for it."

"Ya—; I canna believe"—was the comment.—"I like da look; brights, neat; breaka da amateur recordo, sure. I buya da tick, you betta your life. You taka my check for him?"

"I'd rather have the money"—said the youth.

"Alla right, I calla round and pay you in the morning." And the PRESS man had to move on then lest he too should be persuaded to follow the crowd and buy more tickets than he needed.

Excellent Results Already Accomplished.

(From the New York Journalist.)

Two Plainfield newspaper men—James Alfred Demarest, of the Press, and Frank Willets Runyon, of the Courier—have made a theatrical venture this fall that is panning out very successfully. They have taken hold of the Stillman Music Hall, the principal theatre of the place, and have already accomplished excellent results. The hall had suffered greatly through the laxity of management on the part of the board of directors, and its patronage was so poor that it steadily lost money for the stockholders. Demarest & Runyon, however, have infused vigor and enterprise into the body corporate, and the result is a gratifying transformation. From being a cheerless barn-like place, the hall has been changed into a cosy, handsome theatre of decided "citified" appearance, so that what was before almost hideously unattractive is now a thing of beauty. The accoustics also have been perfected. The new managers are booking none but first-class attractions, and are being rewarded with large and cultured audiences and big box-office receipts.

Oh, What a Cough!

Will you heed the warning. The signal perhaps of the sure approach of that more terrible disease, Consumption. Ask yourselves if you can afford for the sake of saving 50c., to run the risk and do nothing for it. We know from experience that Shiloh's Cure will cure your cough. It never fails. This explains why more than a Million Bottles were sold the past year. It relieves croup and whooping cough at once. Mothers, do not be without it. For lame back, side or chest, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by J. G. Miller, No. 10 East Front street, Plainfield, N. J.

Plainfield's Leaders Will Participate.

The fourth convention of the Young Men's Christian associations of the fourth district of New Jersey, which includes the counties of Middlesex, Monmouth and Union, will be held in Rahway, beginning Friday evening, Nov. 20, and closing Sunday evening, Nov. 22. Friday evening at the Baptist church there will be an address by Prof. Austin Scott, of Rutgers, preceded by a song service led by James Dunn.

Saturday morning at the association building there will be a business meeting with reports, etc., and addresses by J. H. Manning, of Plainfield, W. A. Venter, of Trenton, W. J. Scudder, of Rutgers, and H. M. Shaw, assistant State secretary; in the afternoon at 2:30 there will be addresses by F. B. Sanford, of Rutgers, W. D. Murray, of Plainfield, and E. S. Campbell, of New Brunswick; in the evening at 7:45, at the First Presbyterian church, a service of song will be held, followed by devotional exercises and addresses by James McGee and W. D. Murray, of Plainfield.

On Sunday, at 9 a. m., at the Association building, there will be a consecration meeting, led by A. C. LaBoyteaux, of Plainfield; 4:15, meeting for men, led by the same; at same hour and place, women's meeting, led by the Hon. Elkanah Drake, of Newark; same time and place, boys' meeting, led by A. D. French; 7:30 p. m., platform meetings at the different churches; farewell meeting at the Presbyterian church at 9 p. m., led by State secretary Moore. The visitors will probably make addresses at some of the churches at the morning services.

A Double-Umpire in the Bowling Tournament Games.

In the match games of the American Bowling Union tournament—of which a schedule of the games of the New Jersey district were published exclusively in THE PRESS of Saturday—there will be two umpires. The first game which the Plainfield team will contest, will be rolled at Roseville, the 20th inst.

From the opinions heard on all sides the bowlers are all in favor of the double-umpire system, and it is only a question of time now when the scheme will be adopted by all the leading tournaments in the country. That two umpires are necessary at every tournament and match game was demonstrated by the dispute that arose in one of the national tourney games last week, when the umpire called a foul ball on the right alley while his eyes were on the pins standing on the left alley. These disputes can hardly arise at games where two umpires are used, for one only watches the foul line and the other stands at the base of the alleys and calls out the number of pins that drop after each ball is rolled. The scorers, of course, are at the lower end of the alleys also.

What May Be Seen in the Skies.

November and August are the two months of the year when meteors are most frequent. It has been supposed that the entire solar system is traversed by innumerable streams of meteors, probably varying in dimensions from the size of peas to that of base-balls, though some falls are recorded of meteors nearly a ton in weight. The number of these small bodies that cross the earth's orbit must be enormous, for it has been calculated that 7,000,000 enter the earth's atmo*sphere every twenty-four hours.* Yet the earth cannot encounter more than one meteor stream for each of the many millions whose orbit must pass above or below the place of the terrestrial orbit. But despite these enormous numbers it is calculated that the average number of meteors is less than one per million cubic inches of space, so that if they were equally distributed the mean distance between each meteor would be over 100 miles.

Music at Holy Cross.

The second musical service of the season at Holy Cross church took place yesterday afternoon, and the pretty little church was crowded with attentive listeners. The choir of men and boys rendered the programme published in THE PRESS of Saturday, comprising much more elaborate music than they have heretofore attempted, and it must be said that they were never heard to better advantage.

"How Lovely are the Messengers," from Mendelssohn's St. Paul, which the Choral society will sing next spring, was excellently sung, and so, indeed, was the whole service. Choir-master Miner was again the recipient of many congratulations on the fine work of his proteges, and Plainfield's lovers of good music left the church regretting only that the date for the next choral service was one long month away.

Our George is Making Plainfield Known From Sea to Sea.

George Thatcher who brings his new comedy alliance, "Tuxedo", to Music Hall next Thursday evening, takes a novel way of advertising Plainfield, which should be appreciated by his fellow townsmen.

The plot of "Tuxedo" and its scenes are laid at Tuxedo Park, the story deals with the attempts of a party of amateurs to arrange a performance. They are about to fail when Thatcher arrives at Tuxedo as a guest. His object in going there is to invite several of his friends over to Plainfield to witness a dress rehearsal of his minstrels, but learning of the trouble they are in, he concludes to take the minstrels to Tuxedo, instead of having the amateurs come to Plainfield. The annual tour of "Tuxedo" extends from New York to San Francisco, and the beauties of Plainfield will be read of by thousands through the efforts of Thatcher.

All the druggists sell the Tudor Whiskey. Some of the other dealers do not. They say it pays too small a profit. PURE whiskey never does yield a large profit. It is the adulterated stuff which makes the money. Do you want to pay your dealer an exorbitant profit on an adulterated article, or do you prefer genuine old Whiskey which is sold at a moderate profit? Decide for yourselves. The TUDOR WHISKEY is WARRANTED ABSOLUTELY PURE and TEN YEARS OLD.

POET AND EDITOR.

A Visit to Sir Edwin Arnold in the London "Telegraph" Office.

Chances of Success in England and America—Anxious to See America—Strike Out a Literature of Our Own—The Newspapers of America.

[COPYRIGHT, 1891.]

High noon in Fleet street, London. It is a crisp day. The sun comes down brightly on the thoroughfare where great Sam Jonson; foolish and lovable Goldsmith; that prince among truthful reporters, Boswell; inimitable Garrick; mighty Burke, and a host of others toiled their way in times long past.

Fleet street can never be anything but interesting to Americans, just as it is dear to all Englishmen.

Those of us who have read of its inns and coffee houses, where struggling literary men met in the long ago, or of the Fleet prison, or the Fleet marriages that Walter Besant has written so well about, or of a hundred and one things that have made the old thoroughfare can but feel that he is jostling musty but interesting ghosts of the days that may never come again, as he makes his way along. But when I turned into Peterborough court, it was no ghost that I came upon, but a very substantial affair of the present in the shape of a sign that told me that here were the offices of the London Daily Telegraph. I had received a kind note from Sir Edwin Arnold inviting me to call upon him for a chat. The note ran thus:

"I have not much time to devote to interviews, but I can spare you at least a few minutes, although I am a very busy man."

Sir Edwin Arnold, poet, scholar, diplomat and journalist, is the powerful chief of the Daily Telegraph, the most widely circulated newspaper in Great Britain.

A young man in the business offices of the great newspaper on the ground floor received me blandly and looked upon me somewhat pityingly when I told him who I wished to see. Still he took my card and disappeared. When he returned he respectfully requested me to accompany him and I felt that I had grown several inches in his estimation. He showed me at once to the great editor's sanctum or at least to a part of it.

"Sir Edwin was temporarily engaged," my guide explained. "Would I wait for a short time?"

Of course I would and did and meanwhile examined my surroundings. A cheerful fire burned in the grate. There was a comfortable looking leather covered sofa on one side of the room and three or four chairs. Near one of the windows stood a table and it is at this that the editor works.

It was rather disappointing, this simplicity, for report has had it that Sir Edwin has long been enamored of the glories of Indian palaces and the luxuries of far Japan. There was nothing here to suggest this. If these signs west for anything, this office was the work room of a plain practical business man.

Most men if they had written such peotry as this man has, if they were the head of one of the most powerful newspapers in the world, a favorite in the inner circles of the court of Great Britain, a friend of more kings and emperors than one has time to calculate, besides being a fellow of the Royal Geographical society of London, of the Royal Asiatic society, of the Royal Geographical society of Marseilles, a knight commander of the Indian empire, not to speak of three or four decorations of the sultan, the order of the White Elephant from the king of Siam, the order of the Lion from the Shah of Persia and the recipient of countless other honors — most men, I repeat, would be inclined to think a great deal of themselves and to show it very plainly.

Sir Edwin Arnold probably knows his own worth as well as any man, but there is nothing in his manner to show this. I had not been in his company ten seconds before I was firm in the belief that I had never before met a more pleasant yet more unaffected man. He stepped briskly forward and greeted me simply and affably. Then drawing a chair up near the table at which he works, he waved me into it, making a humorous reference to the ubiquitous "interviewer" of the American newspaper, as he did so. Then he seated himself. First I referred to a statement made by Mr. Bret Harte, to the effect that he could get nearly three times as much money for his stories in London as in the United States, and to another by an ex-mayor of New York, A. Oakey Hall, in which he said he could live in London for less than two thirds what it cost him in New York and then I asked him if in his opinion London offered a good field for American newspaper or literary men.

The poet editor paused and twirled his thumbs a moment.

"How can I a'swer that?" said he, at length, reflectively. "No one knows London better than I do. It is pretty full, but I think there is always room in it for energetic, apt and capable people. I have the highest opinion of the American people; I don't know what part of the world they would fall in if they put their backs to it. Look at this last invention of Edison's, for instance. What place would not open to such a genius as that?"

"Yes," I replied, "but leaving men like Edison out of it, how about the ordinary man—fairly endowed with intelligence and pluck?"

"Well," said Sir Edwin, slowly and thoughtfully, "I should say the average smart American would not have as much chance as an Englishman, just the same as the latter would be somewhat at a disadvantage in America. Energy and genius will succeed everywhere. Still, London is pretty full, as I have said before."

I wanted to draw the famous poet out on some of our younger writers and their works, but he fought shy of this and I was forced to be content. Besides time was precious. There was another question I had to ask him and that was his opinion of American newspapers. Englishmen generally hold some very odd impressions concerning American journalism and it may be said some very erroneous ones. But the opinion of this talented man, who for thirty years had been the head of England's great newspaper in point of circulation —why that was another thing. So I put the question directly.

"On the whole, I must say that your newspapers make me shake my head. There are many good ones, but the general tone is distressing. Once I picked up a paper in Washington, while I was waiting in the president's room. I glanced down the column, and the following heading caught my eye: 'Sunset Cox is dying.' It shocked me. Just fancy speaking so of a statesman, whose name should be sacred to the heart of every true American—one who has done so much for his countrymen. This sort of thing makes me sorry. You need not be dull, heavy or goody goody, but journalism should be dignified, and these American headings shock me sometimes. However, the American press was very kind to me, and I owe nothing but a debt of gratitude to American journalism."

All this was certainly plain, even if it was not complimentary to American journalism. Sir Edwin spoke so freely and earnestly that I was disposed to urge him on.

"What, in your opinion, will the newspaper of the future be like? Will it differ much from that of the day?".

"I don't think," said he, seriously, "that the newspaper of to-day can be improved very much in point of composition and writing. I consider that our own paper and the Times are almost perfect monuments of composition, but I think that art as applied to newspaper illustrations will come into very general use. I don't know how it is to be done, but the pictures will have to be perfect. Illustrated journalism is in its infancy yet. The reporter of the future will have to draw of course."

Then he went on speaking of the requirement of the journalist of the future. "A man cannot be too well educated for the press; nobody can be good enough or too good. The more you have read the more you know; the more fit you are; but you never can be perfectly fit. It deserves the very best work."

"You are an enthusiast on the subject of the press?"

"Yes, I am," replied the great editor, "because it is such a mighty instrument for good. I am very proud to have served the press for thirty years, during which time I have written 8,000 leading articles besides my editorial work. I look back upon this labor with very great satisfaction."

The home life of Sir Edwin Arnold has always been unostentatious. Since the death of his wife it has been even more quiet than before. Much of his vacation time he has latterly spent in Japan, but he is an Englishman to his finger tips, and what is more a lover of London.

As might be expected of a poet of such rich imagination and exquisite fancy, his home is a most beautiful one. He has been a great traveler, and in addition an industrious and intelligent collector of rare gems in the way of bric-a-brac. These are scattered all about the house. The rare taste of the poet and scholar is shown in these gems that he has picked up in various parts of the globe as thoroughly as anything could show it. But in addition to these are others that came to him as presents from the sultan, the shah, from kings and from Indian princes and rajahs. No one in England outside of the court has such a collection as that which adorns his home.

An Oddity in Painting.

The provincial cities of France are just now being entertained by a remarkable artist, one who displays wonderful skill in her own peculiar style of painting. With plates of various-colored sand before her she takes the sand in her right hand and causes it to fall in beautiful designs upon a table. A bunch of grapes is deftly pictured with violet sand, a leaf with green sand and relief and shadows with sand of the colors to suit. When this has been admired by those artistically inclined it is brushed away and is soon replaced by a bouquet of roses or some other object, all done with great dexterity and delicacy. Even the finest lines are drawn with streams of sand, all as distinct as though made with an artist's brush.

A BIG CONSPIRACY

How the Arsenal Pottery at Trenton Was Robbed.

GOODS WORTH $100,000 STOLEN.

Trusted Nephew of the Owner at the Bottom of the Schems.

He Stole Steadily for Six Years—Had Confederates in New York, Philadelphia and Ohio, Who Received the Stolen Ware and Shared the Profits—A Number of Arrests.

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 10.—The arrest of W. W. Sweet, invoice clerk of the Arsenal Pottery here, brings to light one of the greatest conspiracies known in Trenton since the robbery of Ott and Brewer in a similar manner about ten years ago.

Sweet had upwards of ten confederates, who were receiving the goods and disposing of them in other cities at less than cost to manufacture, and although the amount taken cannot be exactly learned owing to the time that the operations have been going on, Joseph Mayer, the proprietor, says that it will reach $100,000.

Morris Heers and Frank Work Shafter of Philadelphia are under arrest in that city, and Sweet, his wife and Isaac Levy are behind the bars in Trenton, on the charge of being concerned in the conspiracy.

Sweet had accomplices in New York, and even as far as Ohio, and the detectives are now watching for proof upon which to arrest them.

Sweet apparently had entered into a big conspiracy with outsiders to ruin his employer. According to a statement by him he did not suggest the thing first, but crockery dealers came to him and offered to divide profits if he would send them extra goods when they sent an order. It is apparent that if he had not been caught just at this time he soon would have caused the failure of the pottery. More than $1,200 worth of goods, which were not entered on the books, were sent out by him last week.

Sweet's manner of defrauding Mayer was a common one, which would not be thought of by Mayer. When an order would be sent in for $10 worth of goods Sweet would send it to the packing room with orders to have it packed. The goods would then be shipped and the order returned to him. Instead of marking it "shipped" he would allow it to lie on his desk for a day or two, when his attention would be called to it, and he would again ship the same order. Thus would two orders be sent to the same person for the price of one. This he has done as often as four times on a single order.

The stealings last year amounted to something enormous, and added to a number of bad speculations, involved Mayer heavily in debt. Mayer called his men together one day and told them that he knew that goods were disappearing from the place, but that he was unable to find out who was stealing them. He asked them if they would not let up on him, saying that if they did not they would ruin him. All professed innocence, but the robberies continued for a time. Then they suddenly ceased.

About five months ago Mayer was in Philadelphia taking orders for his goods when he was surprised to see some ware from his pottery in an auction store. He knew that he had not been selling anything in that city, and at once suspected that it was some of the stolen goods. He went into the place and quoted the prices on goods of exactly the same make, but they informed him that they could buy them at a price which Mayer said was sixty cents lower than he could afford to make them for. He was compelled after this to sell his goods twenty per cent. lower than usual in order to keep his trade.

Soon after his discovery of the goods in Philadelphia Mayer informed the chief of police of Trenton. When the story was told the police could hardly believe it, but as soon as the detectives got to work on the case they found that Mayer's story was true. Packages of goods were shipped to fences in New York and Philadelphia almost daily and no one knew of it. At length two tags in Sweet's handwriting were taken from two large hogsheads of ware and then the detectives decided that they had the right man. The ware was most all costly, and consisted of fine vases, urns, fancy pitchers and dishes.

Detective Pilger of Trenton, and Detective Bond of Philadelphia, arrested William Eardley of Philadelphia yesterday afternoon. Up to about a year ago Eardley was employed as a packer at the Mayer pottery. Sweet says that Eardley put him up to stealing. Eardley has been employed in the wholesale glass house of Wright, Tindall & Thomas in Philadelphia since leaving Trenton.

Largest in Its History.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—Capt. Wm. M. Meredith, Superintendent of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, has submitted his annual report to the Secretary of the Treasury, in which he says that during the past year the delivery of securities, stamps, and miscellaneous work was the largest of any year during the fourteen years the Bureau has been in existence.

The Wrecked Kingston Bank.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Nov. 10.—C. M. Preston, Superintendent of the State Banking Department, has concluded his examination of the Ulster County Savings Institution, and issued a statement of the condition of the wrecked bank. He finds the amount due depositors to be $2,474,453.89 and the assets $2,108,547.83, leaving a deficiency of $365,918.50.

The homestead of G. W. Delamater, at Meadville, was sold by assignees yesterday for $8,000 for the benefit of the creditors of the defunct Delamater & Co.'s Bank.

IT WAS HIS TURN.

The Bridgeport Suicide Club Has Now But Two Members Left.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 10.—John Kopp, who has just hanged himself, was one of the famous Suicide Club of this city, and it was time for another member to die. He had been a member of the club from its beginning and had officiated at the funeral of nearly all the members and often said that his turn would come in a short time.

There are only two other members of the club now living. Every member who joined when the club was first projected has died by violence and his own hand.

They have died in almost every style. Some have hanged themselves, some have wooed death with a revolver or shotgun, others have thrown themselves in front of railroad trains, but none have taken poison. That was considered too easy and unworthy the members of the Suicide Club.

Kopp is the 17th man of the club who has killed himself. One man disappeared and no trace of him has ever been discovered. It is believed that he has committed suicide by drowning, but the members of the club refuse to accept that version, as drowning is prohibited by the rules. The two remaining members of the club are expected to do their duty.

TWELVE VICTIMS.

Four More of the Injured Nanticoke Miners Dead.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 10.—The number of the victims of the Nanticoke mine explosion now reaches twelve. Four more of the injured died yesterday.

There names are: William Williams, Jr., Thomas R. Thomas, Edward D. Williams and David Powell.

The latest theory as to the cause of the accident is that some of the men disregarded the rules and worked with naked lamps, which set the gas on fire. No blame is attached to the company.

The Corry Bank Failure.

ERIE, Pa., Nov 10.—The reports in connection with the Corry National Bank failure are that the liabilities are about $800,000 instead of $450,000 as were estimated. The reports of two prominent lumber firms in Corry making assignments are without foundation. President Allen and Cashier Hermon are both seriously ill from nervous prostration. A receiver will be appointed as soon as Bank Examiner Miller makes his report. The only new judgment entered until to-day is one by L. L. Bliss, guardian against Cashier Hermon for $12,000.

For Trying to Poison Her Husband.

WOBURN, Mass., Nov. 10. — On the charges of attempting to poison her husband, Mrs. Mary Halloran was held in $1,000 bail for trial. Some five weeks ago, Mrs. Halloran put some paris green in the food she served to her husband. The latter was made seriously ill. She said that she had merely sprinkled some powder on the food for the purpose of increasing her husband's affections, but he is of the opinion that the woman wanted to put him out of the way in order that she might gain possession of some real estate owned by him.

Escape of Three Desperadoes.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Nov. 10.—The notorious Kendall boys, George, "Boots," "Popsy" and Milton, jr., who were in prison at Georgetown with their father, Milton Kendall, for killing John Jarves and A. J. Montgomery, last August, escaped yesterday afternoon by cutting a hole through the prison wall. Old man Kendall is very sick and could not leave the prison. The Kendalls evidently had outside help, and it is believed they are fully armed and will fight to the death to avoid recapture.

Died of Hydrophobia.

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 10.—William Reading, the 9-year-old son of Charles Reading, of this city, died yesterday morning of hydrophobia after several days' terrible suffering. The boy was bitten about two months ago by a dog belonging to John McKay, a neighbor. He apparently recovered, but a fortnight ago he had a relapse, and grew worse every day. His two brothers were bitten by the dog at the same time.

General Offices to Be Moved.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 10. — The Adams Express Company will shortly remove the general offices of the New England division of the company to this city from Boston. The offices have always been located here until quite recently, when they were removed to Boston. Mr. Sanford, the new President of the company, who is a resident of this city, has ordered the change.

Believed to Have Eloped.

MANCHESTER, N. H., Nov. 10.—Walter Bond disappeared from this city last Tuesday evening, and it is now believed he has eloped with Miss Abbie Fuller, and that both have gone to California. Bond drew $2,900 out of the bank—$900 of which belonged to his wife—before starting. Mrs. Bond now has $100 in the bank. Miss Fuller was a former sweetheart of Bond's

CAUGHT US NAPPING

The Demand Made on Chili Couldn't Be Enforced.

WHY THE SHIPS ARE PREPARING

They Will Be Near Valparaiso When the Second Claim is Made.

A Civil Reply Will Have to Come Then—The Reason Why the Junta Was So Insolent in Its Answer—The Big Fleet That Is Getting Ready to Sail for Southern Waters.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—The Secretary of the Navy, in giving out a reassuring dispatch from Capt. Schley yesterday, which states that no threats had been made regarding the Baltimore, took pains to announce that there was no warlike significance in the unwonted activity at the navy yards.

It is not questioned, however, among navy officials and others who have followed the development of affairs that the rumpus in South America is the moving cause of the rapid repairs and speedy construction now going on.

The Administration expects that the Chilian government will bring the present negotiations to a satisfactory conclusion and has acted on that presumption throughout.

Nevertheless it recognizes the fact that the weakness of our naval transport at the time the demand made for reparation was originally made through Minister Egan told heavily against us and gave the foreign minister of the pert little republic to the South an opportunity to send back a reply which could hardly have been more saucy without being warlike.

In view of this experience it is not intended that we shall be caught napping again, and if it should become necessary to repeat the request there will be something decidedly more impressive than a navy on paper to convince the Chilians of the impregnability of our position.

The immediate reason for haste lies in the fact that the inauguration of the new government in Chili, which will mark the restoration of constitutional functions in that distracted country, will take place in the middle of December. We shall wait until that time before sending another demand in case the one already made fails to bring a satisfactory response, because there is no desire to place the responsibility for the affront received by our sailors upon any but a fully responsible government.

By the middle of December there will be such a force in the harbor of Valparaiso and on the way that the reply to any demand it may be necessary to make cannot but be prompt and exceedingly civil.

It is not believed here that there is any present intention of ordering the Miantonomoh away from the vicinity of New York. That boat is already in commission which entails a large expense and, simply as a matter of economy, she should be put to sea at once. The Navy Department, however, are watching carefully for the interests of our Atlantic seaboard, and they see in the Miantonomoh the most effective engine of protection which can be made available.

At the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 10.—The unusual activity at the navy yard still continues. This morning the scene presented was much more animated than on Sunday, the full force of 2,000 men being hard at work. From the huge smokestacks of the shops and foundries there arose volumes of thick black smoke that must have been a surprise to the usually clear and quiet atmosphere that hangs over that part of Brooklyn.

Inside the shops hundreds of men are at work at forge and lathe getting the material for the new war ships ready for use. In one shop parts of the Atlanta's engines are repaired. In others the work is for the Miantanomoh, Puritan, Maine and Terror. On the latter vessel the teak packing for her side armor is very nearly in place. On the Puritan the work of getting the sides ready for the armor is also progressing rapidly. These two will be powerful vessels.

Many Visitors to New York.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Nov. 10.—The presence of a number of war vessels and the unusual activity at the Navy Yard is attracting many out of town people, who seem to take great interest in surveying Uncle Sam's defenders, plodding over their decks, and probably picturing in their minds the vessels in an engagement shelling some Chilian city. Many visitors are expected from along the line of the Ontario & Western Railroad between the 19th and 30th of this month, on account of an excursion at reduced rates, which that road has arranged from all points on its line to New York city.

Cut His Eyes Out With a Razor.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 10.—Michael Segate got into an altercation with a countryman yesterday. The latter slashed him about the head with a razor, cutting his eyes out and inflicting injuries which caused his death last evening.

SPOILED BY RAIN.

Lord Mayor's Day in London a Failure—Wales' 50th Birthday.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—Great preparations had been made for the usual parade yesterday and other ceremonies attendant upon the inauguration of the Lord Mayor elect, David Evans, Esq.

It was expected that the usual throngs would line the streets through which the procession passed, but when day dawned the hopes and expectations of many of the would-be sightseers were dampened by the knowledge that the day would not be favorable for any outdoor display.

Rain was falling with a monotonous downpour which gave promise of continuing throughout the day. And so it happened that though the parade was carried out as arranged, it was spoiled by the dismal weather.

Despite the inclemency of the day, however, quite a number of persons braved the elements, determined to see all that was to be seen of the Lord Mayor's show. Their enthusiasm sufficed to carry them to points of vantage, but many were so thoroughly drenched after standing awhile that they did not wait for the procession to pass.

They did not lose much, however, for the show, as a whole, was but a repetition of the shows of former Lord Mayors, the only novelties worthy of note being several allegorical cars emblematic of incidents in the life of the Prince of Wales.

The occasion for the introduction of these cars was the fiftieth anniversary of the birth of the Prince, which occured yesterday.

AN INHUMAN DOCTOR.

Because an Injured Man Couldn't Pay He Undoes His Work.

CUMBERLAND, Md., Nov. 10.—Yesterday morning Frank Laflin was walking along the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad tracks when he fell into a cattle guard, cutting a fearful gash in his leg. Friends carried him to the office of Dr. Craigen, the county physician. The doctor examined the wound and after dressing it put several stitches in it and then asked for his pay, which was $2. The doctor said that if they did not pay him he would undo his work. They insisted they were penniless and the doctor cut the stitches, thus undoing his work.

All persons who are aware of the doctor's action express indignation and disgust.

On the Subject of Revision.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—A full meeting of the New York Presbytery was held yesterday to receive a report from the committee which was appointed to consider the subject of Revision of Presbyterian Confession of Faith, as proposed by the last Presbyterian General Assembly. The committee reported that it approved of the work already done by the General Assembly's committee on revision, but recommends to that committee several additional amendments in the line of the work they have already done. The report was accepted by the New York Presbytery.

Cut His Throat With a Stiletto.

PUNXSUTAWNEY, Pa., Nov. 10.—Steve Lagra cut Michael Raveish's throat with a stiletto at Walston mines Sunday night, killing him instantly. Italian and Hungarian miners were drinking beer in a shanty. A quarrel arose and the men separated into a faction. Half of the party remained in the shanty. Shortly after the quarrel Michael Raveish left the house, whereupon Lagra seized him and cut his throat. Lagra and two of his companions were arrested. Lagra acknowledges his guilt.

To Risk Their Lives Again.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—The two famous ocean voyagers, Captain Andrews and Captain Lawler, both of Boston, are in this city, preparing for another race across the Atlantic in dories. Captain Andrews' boat will be but 12 feet long and built entirely of canvas. It is his intention to start about June 1 next, starting from the Battery and cruising to St. John, N. B., thence going across the ocean to Queenstown.

The Summerfields Are Dead.

BERLIN, Nov. 10.—The Summerfields, father and son, both members of the firm of Friedlander & Summerfield, the bankers of this city, who failed on Saturday last, and who, after the close of the day's business, opened veins in their arms and then shot themselves in the head with revolvers, have both succeeded in their attempts to escape the consequence of their financial embarrassment.

Drought in New Hampshire.

CONCORD, N. H., Nov. 10.—The effects of the long drought in New Hampshire are becoming very serious. All the important streams are remarkably low and the wells are giving out in all directions. Many factories are shortening their hours of labor on account of the scarcity of water.

OVER THE BORDER

Official Reports of the Influx of Chinese.

EIGHT THOUSAND ARE COMING.

Secretary of the Treasury to Make a Special Report to Congress.

Extensive Smuggling of Opium and Dutiable Goods—Startling Evidence from the Montana Customs Collector—Chinese Crossing the Border With Impunity—Larger Appropriations Needed.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—The Treasury Department is in receipt of official reports of recent date from Treasury special agents in the Northwest, giving testimony of a startling nature relative to the extensive smuggling of dutiable merchandise and opium into the United States from Canada and British Columbia, of evasions of the customs laws and of the influx into this country of large numbers of Chinamen.

The expose of the wholesale violations of the customs laws and enormous depredations upon the revenues due to the unprotected condition of the customs frontier, has awakened the Treasury Department to the situation. The reports of the special agents who have been called upon to investigate the matter will be embodied in a special communication which the Secretary of the Treasury will make to Congress when he asks for an appropriation sufficient to enable him to check the rapidly growing evil of smuggling.

The United States Collector of Customs for the District of Montana, with headquarters at Fort Benton, writes to Secretary Foster as follows:

"I beg to inform the department that there is an alarming increase of arrivals of Chinese in the adjacent foreign territory north of here with the United States as their ultimate objective point. The force in this district at present is totally inadequate for their exclusion. We were fortunate in capturing the first considerable number who made the attempt to enter, but cannot count upon circumstances favoring us always."

The Collector's reference to favorable circumstances relates to the fact that a stroke of lightning killed the smuggler who was guiding this band of Chinamen across the prairies, and the poor Celestials, without a guide and ignorant of the country, walked plump into the Collector's hands, without any effort on the part of the customs officers.

Continuing, the Collector says:

"[illegible] is a large force of mounted men stationed at intervals along the line of the Great Northern Railway in communication by wire with this office. To be materially effective in enforcing the provisions of the Chinese Exclusion act, there should be established four new stations besides Sweet Grass (at present the only station upon the Montana border)—namely, one at Blackfoot, where the 113th meridian crosses the railroad; one at or near where the 111th crosses; one at Chinook, on the 109th, and one at Poplar Creek, between the 105th and 106th meridians. At these points prominent roads or trails cross the border and are at such distance as to be independent of each other.

"These stations should be supplied with three mounted men, together with a set of harness and buckboard so that inspectors may be enabled to carry provisions and bedding for a journey of two or more days if necessary. Upon receipt of information of smugglers two men should start out in whatever direction they may be advised parties are coming. There is very little use in one man going alone and attempting to make a capture on the prairie. Chinese and smugglers usually travel in companies of from two to five and upward, and one man cannot be expected to cope with a crowd. It seems to be absolutely necessary to intercept Chinese while on their way across the border in order to make a case.

"This is the maximum force that would be required to enforce the laws against Chinese in this district east of the Rocky Mountains. West of the Rockies there is a proposition that will require attention very soon.

"These inspectors should be men of bravery, acquainted with the country and the work expected of them; fearless and competent to effect a capture at all hazards. The Chinese seem to have suddenly found a large opening here, and if the United States undertakes seriously to exclude them, some such force as I have outlined must be supplied."

Accompanying this communication from the Collector of Customs is a letter from Chinese Inspector Cummings, attached to the Fort Benton district, who states that he had just returned from Vancouver, B. C., the port of entry of the Chinese intruders, and that he learned while there the startling fact that nearly 8,000 Chinamen had landed at Vancouver since Jan. 1 of this year.

Demarest Will Be Tried.

NYACK, N. Y., Nov. 10.—The District Attorney of Rockland County announces that the forgery indictments against ex-Assemblyman Frank P. Demarest will be positively tried by the County Court on Monday, Nov. 23. It is thought that a judge from some other county will preside at the trial.

Water Supply Low.

FITCHBURG, Mass., Nov. 10.—The water supply is very low and the City Council has been petitioned to shut off the water from manufacturers until such time as the reservoirs fill up again. This is in order to save water for the domestic demand in the event of possible fires.

Parson Cotton in Trouble Again.

DUBLIN, Nov. 10.—The Rev. S. Cotton, who with his wife is under bail awaiting trial on charges of inhuman cruelty to children in his orphanage at Carogh, has again been arrested, for causing the death of a boy by neglect and exposure.

WIPED OUT THE FAMILY.

A Farm Hand Kills an Old Man, His Wife and Son.

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa., Nov. 10.—The usually quiet village of Green, Pike County, is greatly excited over a tragedy enacted at the home of George David, an aged farmer, two days ago. Simon P. Field, employed on an adjoining farm, entered the premises of David, called the latter to the door and blew the top of his head off with a load of buckshot.

Field then turned on David's wife like a savage beast, shooting her in the face and beating her about the head with a gun. The assassin then rushed down the farm lane where he met a son of the David's whom he shot in the back.

David is dead and it is believed the mother and son cannot live. Field was arrested, taken to Milford and locked up. He claims to have no recollection of his crime.

BIG BARLEY SCHEME.

Land to be Offered German Farmers by a Chicago Syndicate.

ST PAUL, Minn., Nov. 10.—The Edgmoor Land Syndicate, best known as the Barley Syndicate of Chicago, has purchased [illegible] acres of land in North Dakota, on which it is proposed to place German farmers to raise barley for malt purposes. These lands have been purchased in Nelson, Norman, Tower, Ramsey, Steele and Bottineau counties.

These emigrants will not be tenants but owners of the land, it being sold to them on easy terms. The crops will be bought by the company and shipped to all points where there is a demand for barley for brewing purposes.

To Petition the President.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 10.—The Finance Committee of the City Councils last night reported a resolution to the Councils requesting the President of the United States to allow the Councils' investigating committee's experts to examine the books and papers of the suspended Spring Garden National Bank. Acting Secretary Spalding of the Treasury Department, recently refused to allow this, and the resolution reported is for the purpose of asking the President to overrule his decision.

Riots Reported in Brazil.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—A dispatch from Rio Janeiro says: "Riots are reported in Rio Grande do Sul. Code telegrams from that district are prohibited. Local dispatches are subject to censorship. The government line to Port Alegre has been cut.

Thought to Have Been Murdered.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 10. — Eric Anderson, an aged hermit who lived near Ney Aug, was found dead in his hut yesterday. The body was badly eaten by rats. His money is gone and it is believed he was murdered.

Suing For Divorce.

SIOUX FALLS, S. D., Nov. 10.—John McKim Minton of the "Illustrated American," New York, has begun action for divorce from his wife who is now in the city to secure a separation from him.

Prominent Pittsburg Man Dead.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 10.—James Penny, who for eleven years has been national treasurer for the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, is dead at his home here. The cause of his death was blood poisoning. Mr. Penny was 63 years of age and was widely known among manufacturers and iron and steel workers throughout the country.

NEW YORK NEWS IN BRIEF.

Willie Wilde, the husband of Mrs. Frank Leslie, is seriously ill.

The prosecution in the case of Rev. Mr. George at Catskill has rested.

George C. Waldo, the New York lawyer who was shot by crazy George S. Thomas in Brooklyn, is dying.

John Forgie, a salesman for Wise Bros., New York, is another of Dr. Keeley's bichloride of gold patients who has gone wrong.

Comptroller-elect Frank Campbell has filed a report of his election expenses with the Secretary of State. The amount is $3,000.

The rumor that County Clerk Conway of Rensselaer County had been removed by Gov. Hill proves to be without foundation, as the Governor has issued an order appointing a further hearing in the case for to-morrow.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—A meeting of special prayer for young men will be held at the Y. M. C. A. rooms, this evening at 8 o'clock.

—A devotional meeting of the young men's auxiliary to the Y. M. C. A. will be held this evening at 7:30 o'clock.

—A regular communication of Anchor lodge will be held this evening in Masonic hall, and the E. A. degree will be worked.

—Joe English had another big audience at Reform Hall last night, and secured 30 pledge-signers. He has consented to speak again to-night. Don't fail to hear him.

—Tickets for the harp recital are to be had at H. P. Reynolds's drug store. To attend this concert is not wholly philanthropical, for the music itself will be worth more than the price of a ticket.

—Trinity Commandery, No. 17, K. T., held a regular conclave last evening, and received two applications for membership. One new member was elected. At the next monthly conclave the Grand officers will be present.

—One reason why Edsall's popular store is so liberally patronized is because ladies have but little trouble in finding what they want there, and are always sure to get the best article and at lowest prices. His stock is unusually large just now.

—All old members of the Y. M. C. A. bowling section and others interested, are requested to apply at once at the association rooms and see whether their names are enrolled on the new list that has been prepared. There will be no bowling to-night.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

J. Linn Edsall is slowly recovering from his recent illness, though the fever has not entirely left him.

Mr. and Mrs. John Stryker, who for fourteen years have lived on Orchard place, have removed to the home of Amos Moffett, Mrs. Stryker's father, 38 West Sixth street.

Miss Lillie Miller of 247 West Third street, left Saturday for a six weeks visit among her many friends of Philadelphia and Harrisburg. She will be missed at Hope chapel.

W. H. Packingham, of Buffalo, N. Y., is visiting his sister, Mrs. A. B. Warner, West Front street. It was a happy meeting between brother and sister; they had not seen each other in sixteen years.

Councilman L. A. Hummer, of Somerset street, on his return home last evening, found a large number of friends and relatives waiting to congratulate him on the anniversary of his birthday. Music, games, and bountiful refreshments helped to while away the evening hours most pleasantly.

At the home of the bride, 87 Broadway, Thursday afternoon of next week at five o'clock, will take place the wedding of Miss Mary Brooks and Edward J. Cooley. Miss Brooks is a daughter of John Brooks of the Potter Press Works company. Mr. Cooley is a traveling salesman for a New York dry goods house.

The borough council will lose a valuable member Friday evening, when James F. Buckle will present his resignation. Mr. Buckle is about to remove to this side of the brook, into his new house on Bay street. He has done excellent and honorable service as borough councilman, and his sound business methods will be missed from the committees of which he has been a member.

The Hoboken Evening News publishes the following about one of Dunellen's prominent citizens who has a host of friends in Plainfield: "Water Commissioner William J. Winges, who for upwards of thirty years has lived in this county and city, is no longer a resident. He moved to Dunellen, N. J., about two years ago for a summer residence, and liking the place he has decided to live there permanently. He will resign his office at the next meeting of the council." Mr. Winges cast his first vote in Dunellen, last Tuesday, and says he voted the straight Democratic ticket. He is gratified to know that he did not lose his vote, as every candidate he voted for was elected.

Sudden Death of Dory Johnson.

Theodore Johnson, a colored man known by everybody, and who had worked a long time for Tier in the ice business, did suddenly last night. He had been very ill several days, and fell to the ground, dying, while passing through Fairchild's all-y. He was picked up for dead, and carried into Terrill & Cole's, where he breathed his last. His daughter from Newark is expected to come to take charge of the remains. The funeral will be to-morrow afternoon.

Foot Race in the Crescent Rink.

J. W. Anderson, of Plainfield, formerly of Pittsburg, and Geo. Dufrane, of Elizabeth, champion long-distance runner of this State, are matched to run 3 miles, Monday evening next for a purse of $200, and the championship of New Jersey. Both men are well-known professionals, and it should be a test of speed and endurance. The race will be run in the Crescent rink, starting at 8:30 p. m.

THAT WICKED BIG 6 AGAIN.

They Are Charged With Blame Because the Benefits They Put Within the People's Reach, Were Obstructed by Enemies.

A misinformed New York paper intimates that the "Big 6" are to be disciplined at the coming municipal election, because "Every important ordinance of theirs has found its way into the courts under one pretext or another."

The councils of the "Big 6" have passed more ordinances of importance to the city's prosperity and of vital consequence to the people's welfare and interest, than has been done by all the other councils of the past ten years. The "Big 6" provided for competition in water service, a street railway, a system of sewerage, and brought about finer streets for less money, more thorough outdoor lighting at a lower price, horses for the fire department, an electric signal service, and filled other "long felt wants" too numerous to mention. They deserve the people's credit and support for all of that, and they will have it. If defeated on December 1, it will be merely because the Republican vote in this city is so much greater than that of the Democrats.

Everybody in Plainfield knows that it was not the fault of the "Big 6" that their "important ordinances have found their way into the courts under one pretext or another." Everybody in Plainfield knows that those ordinances were thrown into the courts under one pretext or another by the Republican bosses of this city simply for selfish and political purposes. The people have been deprived of the advantages of competition in water rates, and street cars, and sewers, by the Republican bosses who are now striving to elect a council of their slaves, and trying to defeat the "Big 6" with dishonest methods and lies that the people know are lies.

200 TOO SHORT.

The Crescent League Bowlers Never Had a Chance to Win, Last Night.

The bowlers of the Crescent League never got within sight of the score that the Elizabeth Athletic club cracks rolled up last evening on their own alleys. It was a phenomenal score. The lowest man was above 150 and the highest above 200.

The Plainfielders, however, made a very respectable showing for bowlers on strange alleys. But the Elizabethans took the lead at the start with 174 on their first frame, and never lost it. The score:

Undertakers Anxious for a License Law.

At the third annual convention of the New Jersey State funeral directors' association, to be held at Trenton, to-morrow and Thursday, many prominent matters will be discussed. Perhaps the most interesting subject to be presented to the convention will be the advisability of asking the next Legislature to enact a license law for undertakers.

An effort was made last year to have such a law passed but the matter was treated as a joke by the legislators, and the bill was buried.

It is proposed by the advocates of the license idea that every undertaker or funeral director shall be required to pass an examination before a competent board as to his knowledge of and fitness for the business.

It is not proposed to make the examination so severe as to exclude any person of ordinary intelligence, the main object being to bring funeral directors under some authority. It is claimed that there are many engaged in the business who are ignorant of the first principles of preparing a body for burial.

Sentence Suspended.

Dr. Comegys Paul appeared before judge Codington this morning, retracted his plea of not guilty to the charges of disorderly conduct and threats, preferred against him, and pleaded guilty. He said that he thoroughly appreciated the wrong he had committed, and was sincerely penitent for it. Under the circumstances the complainant made no attempt to produce his witnesses to prosecute the case; and the court, after stating that he could punish him severely, suspended sentence on the unhappy physician, who was given clearly to understand the law in the matter, and warned that any future outbreak would result in summary punishment. Dr. Paul avowed his resolve never to permit himself to repeat the offense, and was released from custody.

A Brave Young Daughter Saved the Place.

Considerable excitement was caused at the home of J. Britian Martin, 13 Monroe avenue, last evening, by the explosion of a lamp. The burning oil was scattered all about the room, and Mrs. Martin fainted from fright. Her seventeen-year-old daughter, however, threw the blazing lamp out of doors, at the risk of her own life, smothered the flames with a rug, and then revived her mother.

MORE REPUBLICAN CANDIDATES.

Case, Erickson and Weber the Nominees for Councilmen-at-Large.

The local Republicans are very proud of the city convention they held last night. It was the most harmonious, they say, that Plainfield ever witnessed. The only office for which there was a contest was that of school trustee. F. C. Lounsbury got 26 votes, while H. B. Newhall received 20. The full list of nominees is as follows:

For Councilmen-at-Large—Rufus K. Case, Eric N. Erickson, Herman A. Weber.
For Assessor—Joseph A. Hubbard.
For Collector—John Johnson.
For Treasurer—Alexander Titsworth.
For Chosen Freeholders—J. F. Hubbard, Andrew Vanderbeck.
For Commissioners of Appeal—Manning Vermeule, J. Fred. MacDonald.
For School Trustee—Fred. C. Lounsbury.

The officers of the convention were:
Chairman—John B. Dumont.
Secretary—C. A. Baynon.
Judge—Jacob Kirkner.
Inspector—R. F. R. Huntsman.

A CONDUCTOR'S BRAVE WIFE.

What the Fearlessness of a Woman Did to Scare Away a Thief.

One of the boldest attempts at burglary ever heard of in this vicinity was made Sunday afternoon at Roselle, but was frustrated by the presence of mind and bravery of Mrs. TenEyck, wife of conductor TenEyck of the Central railway, who is known to all Plainfield commuters.

At about 3:30 o'clock Mr. TenEyck took a friend and three of his children out for a drive, leaving his wife, baby and a feminine friend the sole occupants of the house.

Mr. TenEyck had not been gone very long when the ladies thought they heard a noise on the lower floor, and Mrs. TenEyck, suspecting that something was wrong, took a revolver and went down stairs to investigate. Arriving at the ground floor, she heard footsteps in the cellar, and without delay hied herself to that place. Opening the cellar door, she discovered a man groping about, evidently looking for plunder. Without a moment's hesitation she raised the revolver and pointed it directly at him, at the same time demanding his business.

The man turned around and found himself looking down the barrel of a six-shooter. But only for a moment, for in a remarkably short time he was flying over the back fence and disappeared.

When Mr. TenEyck returned he was acquainted with the facts, and made a thorough search of the house and surroundings, but learned nothing of the thief.

The intruder could not have been long in the house before he was discovered, for nothing was missing. It is supposed that he saw Mr. TenEyck leave the house and imagined that there was no one at home.—Elizabeth Herald.

BACKUS'S BABY.

Thatcher Tells How Its Papa Rung It In Even When He Was Threatened With Death.

The last time Thatcher was in Plainfield he was in rather a reminiscent mood, and in speaking of old times to a PRESS reporter, asked, "Did I ever tell you about Backus and his baby? No! I don't believe I ever did, and I don't ever remember seeing this story in print.

"Well," he continued, "in my mind Backus was the greatest minstrel man known. You know he was married twice. By his last wife he was presented with a bouncing baby, and that baby was the ideal of Backus's heart. The baby was about nine months old when the facts that make up my story took place. After the baby was born, Backus was continually ringing in gags about his baby. Birch had been married about forty years and was childless, but he possessed a horde of pet dogs and parrots. Whenever Backus would refer to the baby, Birch would tell about his parrots or dogs.

"'Say, Birch,' Backus would say, 'I've got a baby, and don't have to depend on dogs and parrots.'

"Well, no matter what Backus was talking about, he would ring in that baby.

"Backus was playing with Birch, Backus and Wambold's minstrels, and gave imitations of various actors. Among them was an impersonation of Ned Booth, in which Backus simply raised one shoulder, lowered the other, and like a tragedian walked across the stage, and in his deep voice said, 'I am a ghost! I am a ghost!'

"One night Joe Booth was present and he took exceptions to Backus's imitation of his brother, though Ned Booth and Backus were the warmest of friends, and Ned was amused at the impersonation. Backus and I were in the lobby of the theater as the audience came out that night, and when Joe Booth came out, Backus said, 'Hello Joe!' 'Don't speak to me, you loafer!' said Booth, his anger rising. 'Don't speak to me, you loafer,' retorted Backus. 'I'll kill you yet,' replied Booth in a loud tone.

"Everybody stopped at this threat, when Backus rose up on tiptoe, and in his big bass voice, loud enough to be heard all over the lobby, said: 'Damn it, Joe! Don't kill me, kill Birch; I've got a baby!'"

Desires to Bear Testimony.

Henry Thorne, Traveling Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., writes from Exeter Hall, Strand, London, February 2, 1888:

"I desire to bear my testimony to the value of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS. I have used them for pains in the back and side arising from rheumatic and other causes never without deriving benefit from their application. They are easily applied and very comforting. Those engaged as I am in public work which involves exposure to sudden changes of temperature, will do well to keep a supply of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS in their portmanteaus."

NEWS OF THE DAY.

George H. Boyer, the well known "if-not-why-not" advertising man, was found dead in his office in Chicago yesterday. Death was caused by asphyxiation from escaping gas. He had committed suicide.

Reputable dealers throughout the length, breadth and depth of our glorious land fortunately keep the genuine Hires's Root beer in stock. Did you ever try it? It is easy to make, and ever so delicious—and it is such a safe drink.

The Run Practically Over.

BOSTON, Nov. 10.—It is stated that during the six days of the run on the Five Cent Savings Bank $791,176 of the deposits were withdrawn. Everything is quiet at the institution to-day, and the amount of the withdrawals is not more than the average. Some of those who withdrew their deposits during the excitement have again deposited their funds with the bank. The run is now practically over.

STORY OF A CHILD.

Of Greatest Interest to All Parents.

Infants and children are peculiarly liable to nervous disorders; they become nervous, restless, fretful, cross, irritable; they toss restlessly from side to side, grit their teeth or murmur in sleep, grow thin, pale, slight and puny.

If your infants or children are sick, give them that greatest of all children's remedies, Dr. Greene's Nervura. This marvelous remedy is the great family medicine, and calms and soothes the nerves, strengthens and invigorates the body, restoring healthful color to the cheek, refreshing sleep, strong nerves, stout limbs and that bounding health which all children should have. Being purely vegetable and harmless, it is perfectly safe to give to infants or children of any age, and its curative effects are wonderful.

Do not neglect the health of your children, parents. Use Dr. Greene's Nervura in all nervous diseases of infants and children, and see them improve in health and strength every day and every hour. Druggists sell it, $1.

RESULT OF NEGLECTED NERVOUSNESS.

"My little girl has been taking medicines for a severe nervous trouble nearly two years, receiving no benefit. I then bought a bottle of Dr. Greene's Nervura, and her recovery by its use has been remarkable! Others of the family have received benefit from its use.
C. H. BEMIS, Granby, Mass."

N. B. Dr. Greene, the successful specialist in curing all forms of nervous and chronic diseases, 35 W. 14th St., New York, can be consulted, free, personally, or by letter. Call or write him about your case, or send for symptom blank to fill out, and a letter fully explaining your disease, giving advice, etc., will be returned free. 9 15 td tuas

ALL A LIE.

President Smith Denounces the False and Malicious Publications of a Fool.

President Smith of the common council took the trouble last night to deny what every sensible person in town knew was false—that ridiculous story of an imaginary scheme for redistricting the city so as to change the political complexion of the majority in some of the wards.

Mr. Smith said that the story was all a lie from beginning to end, that there was no foundation for it, and that everybody knew that it emanated from the mind of the "journalist" who published it in his paper. No such a scheme, he said, had ever been contemplated. The thing was all fiction—false and malicious; and no words could be strong enough to denounce it as it deserved to be.

No meeting of the council was held. Instead, adjournment was taken for one week, to enable the Republican members to attend the city convention.

The Official Vote of Union County.

The Union county board of canvassers has completed the canvass of the vote at the recent election. The result, with the exception of a few scattering votes allowed to the candidates as the intention of the voters was manifested, is the same as was given in THE PRESS on Wednesday afternoon last.

The several official tables are as follows:

Distinguished Visitors to Brother Ford's Lodge.

(From The Royal Craftsman.)

A pleasant evening was held at Jerusalem lodge, No. 26, F. and A. M., of Plainfield, on the evening of the 6th ult., when the Master Mason degree was conferred. Among the distinguished visitors present were Past Grand Master Veghage, Grand Secretary R. W. Brother T. H. R. Redway, Grand Pursuivant Worshipful Brother Gillespie, R. W. Brothers Antony Schoder and Freeman, and Past District Deputy Grand Masters of the Fifth Masonic District, and large delegations from Morristown, Somerville and surrounding lodges.

The work was rendered in a very creditable manner by Worshipful Brother William J. Ford, assisted by his associate officers, and after the work a fine repast was served in the banquet hall. Owing to the lateness of the hour and the desire of the Grand Lodge officers to take the train for their respective homes, the brethren lost an opportunity which long they sought to hear from the distinguished visitors. Grand Secretary Redway, however, tarried and interested the brethren assembled in a discourse on the duties of the secretary. The evening was very pleasantly and profitably spent, and voted by all present as "a treat."

Get the best and cheapest; that means, buy Salvation Oil for only 25 cents.

WHAT DISTRICT CLERK IS THIS?

He Has a Very Funny Way of Telling About His Plainfield Trips and Other School Affairs, When Charging Up Expenses.

A newspaper man who had occasion to visit the rural districts, yesterday, was shown the following report that was rendered by the clerk of a certain "deestrick" school in this county. It would seem that Bill Nye and Josh Billings have been outdone for originality. The clerk's name is withheld, but perhaps readers of THE PRESS can guess who he is. The following are some of the items of the bill he rendered:

The Stirling Rioters Sentenced.

Gray Torrey, son of Herbert Gray Torrey, Chief of the United States Assay office in New York city, and Frank Moffet and his brother, sons of Clarkson B. Moffet, Justice of the Peace in Stirling, with the other young men found guilty of "whitecapping" the Rev. Mr. Dill of Stirling—particulars of all of which were first published exclusively in THE PRESS—were sentenced yesterday morning by judge Francis Child in Morristown. Each was sentenced to pay a fine of $50 and costs. Mr. Dill asked the court to be lenient.

Before passing sentence, judge Child remarked that, in imposing the penalty, the court considered the fact that it was apparent that there was somebody more cowardly and more brutal than the men convicted who was back of the entire affair. He added that the whole matter was a cowardly affair from beginning to end, and that the community in which it took place ought to be ashamed of it. He further said that since the trial it had come to his attention that a further criminal act had been committed, by which the Rev. Mr. Dill might have lost his life or have been seriously injured.

The court no doubt referred to the fact that, while Mr. Dill's horse and carriage were standing in front of his church on a recent evening, some one removed three of the nuts from the wheels, so that in going down the hill the wheels came off.

CONTESTED WILLS.

What Robert G. Ingersoll Thinks About Them.

Thoughts Suggested by the Famous Davis Will Case—What Is Pitiful in Such Contests—The Love for Hoarding Money.

There are too many will contests. Rich men will have to take more pains in drawing up their last will and testament to prevent these great battles for millions. I have recently returned from Butte City, Mont., writes Robert G. Ingersoll in the New York Sunday Journal, after having spent weeks and weeks fighting one of the most bewildering forgeries of a will, that of the old mine owner, Andrew J. Davis, that I have ever seen.

To-day we hear a great deal of the difference between fact and opinion in will contests. After we got through with our case we proved that this will of '66, as it is called in the Davis contest, was a forgery. There was only one juror who couldn't be won over, but we will go back to the fight in Montana with the people with us. They found that I wasn't such a terrible sinner after all, and that we didn't intend to carry off Andrew J. Davis' millions.

I say we have heard a great deal of the difference between fact and opinion. There is a difference between fact and opinion, but sometimes when we have to establish a fact by persons we are hardly as certain that the fact ever existed as we are of the opinion, and although one swears that he saw a thing or heard a thing, we all know, or should know, that the accuracy of that statement should be decided by something besides his word.

There is this beautiful peculiarity in nature. A lie never fits a fact, never. You only fit a lie with another lie made for the express purpose, because you can change lies, but you can't change facts, and after a time the time comes when the last lie you tell has to be fitted to a fact, and right there is a bad joint; consequently you must fit the statements of people who say they saw, not by what they saw, but by other facts, by the surroundings, by what are called probabilities; by the naturalness of the statement. If we only had to hear what witnesses say in our courts jurymen would need nothing but ears—their brains could be dispensed with; but after they do hear what they say they should call a council in their brains and make up their minds whether the statement, in view of all the circumstances, is true or false.

Another thing in the will contests of to-day that should be checked is the quarreling among the lawyers. I never quarrel with anybody, my philosophy being that everybody does as he must, and if he is in bad luck and does wrong, why, let's pity him, and if we happen to have good luck, and take the path where roses bloom, why let's be joyful. That is my doctrine.

There is something pitiful in these great will contests, too. Take A. J. Davis, for example. He went on piling up his money, thousands on thousands. Greed grew with old age, as it generally does. Gold is spurned by the youth and loved by the old. There is something magnificent after all about the extravagance of youth, and there is something pitiful about the greed of old age. This love of gold is a terrible passion. All the evidence brought out in the Davis will case showed that Andrew J. Davis went on year after year in a maddening race for the yellow gold. He was methodical and keen and sharp. The question left for the jury to answer was whether or not he left his old father naked to the world; whether he cared nothing for sisters and brothers; whether he cared nothing for the children of the sister that raised him. Ah, if Andrew J. Davis had gone back in thought to when he was a child, when all the children were gathered around the same knees, the children that had been nourished at the same tender and holy breast, he would not have cut off those relatives without their share in the great fortune he had amassed. How beautiful the generosity of childhood, the hospitality of childhood; and as men grow old there comes the love for gold, and the love of gold seems to have the same effect on the heart as it does upon the country where it is found. All the roses fade, and the beautiful green trees lose their leaves and there is nothing in the heart but sage bush. And so it is with the land that holds within the miserly grip of rocks what we calf precious metals!

Will contests are brought to-day with altogether too great alacrity by distant relatives who hope for a compromise and a fat sum for their trouble. The forgery in this Davis case was so ignorant and clumsily done that it almost makes me smile to go over the evidence in the brain. Rich men should insert clauses in their wills telling just whom they don't intend to leave riches to. Then the wills should have more witnesses to testify to sound mind and no undue influence.

Y., Nov. 10.—Dr. Lucien Howe, the famous eye and ear specialist of this city has given his beautiful house and lot on Delaware avenue to be used forever for the purposes of a public eye and ear hospital for the benefit of the afflicted poor of the city. There goes with the property the gift of $25,000 in money to be used as a hospital endowment fund.

Seventy-Seven Were Drowned.

CALCUTTA, Nov. 10.—On Monday last a cyclone passed over the Andaman Islands, situated in the Bay of Bengal. The steamer Enterprise, belonging to the Indian government and used to convey prisoners to the islands, was at one of the ports when the cyclone set in. The vessel foundered, and of her crew of 83 men only six were saved.

IN FASHION'S WORLD.

Dark Gray and Steel in the Place of Light Dove Tints.

[COPYRIGHT, 1891.]

If very light gray was the fashion last spring, dark gray is the fashion now.

If the gray is so dark and so blue in tint that it seems almost like steel color, so much the more fashionable does it become.

Fancy yourself dressed in a gown like this: A long, plain habit skirt of dark gray, brocaded in steel color, set so closely about your figure that you are walking as if a portiere were drawn about you. The back of the skirt is very full and is trained just sufficiently to sweep slightly upon the ground. The skirt is lined with silk and rustles as you walk. For a waist, you have a long-tailed, coat-like bodice of the same, brocaded with a jabot effect upon the lapels. The vest is dark gray velvet of the color of the groundwork of the coat, and there is a tall standing collar with a steel clasp upon it. Steel buttons are used upon the front of the vest.

Your hat is very dark gray felt, with a puffing of black velvet around it and black velvet strings. Gray bows and gray dove wings are used for trimmings. Gray gloves, stitched with black, are worn also.

Is not that a pretty gown and is it not becoming to you, no matter what your style may be?

Perhaps you may not care for the brocade. Many ladies do not, especially if they are inclined to stoutness. In that case, you will get plain, gray cloth, and trim the cuffs, collar and lapels with steel passementerie, allowing a band or two of the same around the foot of the skirt.

Such garments as these are complete in themselves, and do not require the long fashionable feather boa, and, indeed, such a dress looks better without one. The boa is worn only for ornament, and it hangs down in a long useless way, which, though pretty, becoming and graceful, is not serviceable when warmth is considered. Therefore, one should consider the completeness of one's toilet before adding the feather ornament and should decide whether or not the gown is more fashionable in effect without it.

The plain, tailor-made gowns, tight-fitting at the waist, without ruffles or flounces upon the bodice, and untrimmed save by passementerie, galoon

or braiding, are the ones which call for the boa, which has then a remarkably pretty effect drawn about the neck and hanging down the front, giving the appearance of a feather trimmed gown.

Such pretty hats as are being worn this fall. They are nearly all very small and are so neat and compact that one quite falls in love with them. It is a treat to stand in front of the milliner's window, and look upon the different shapes, and, so pretty do they all seem, that the question of deciding which to choose is most perplexing.

There are seasons when one exclaims "How ugly!" when one first sees the shop windows, and is brought to realize that the fashions there displayed are the ones which are to be worn the coming season. But this year one exclaims: "How pretty, how lovely! How graceful!" And one straightway falls to wondering which of the bewilderingly pretty varieties are to be chosen for one's own individual wear.

The little sailor hat continues to be in our midst. It has reappeared for the season in felt. It is exactly the same shape as the summer sailor, and is reproduced in felt of all colors.

A sailor hat is a sailor hat still—no matter what its style may be. The crown may be higher or it may be lower than that of the sailor hat which is displayed next to it. Or the brim may be broad or it may be a mere rim. But it is a sailor still and is bound to hold its own.

The most fashionable sailor shape for autumn is rather high in the crown and narrow in the brim. It comes in so many colors that you can get one exactly the same shade as your dress, and can thus, at small expense, have a very pretty hat to match one's fall suit.

Suppose you have selected a fall gown of brown cloth and brown velvet. Get then a brown sailor of the style just described and put around the brim several broad folds of the velvet. Do not fold the velvet regularly, but rather wrap it around, as if it were a piece of tulle that you were twisting around your summer shade hat. Fasten it at the back, a little to the left, and then in that very same spot put a cluster of pompons. Have the cluster a full one, with six or eight pompons in it, and have them stand well up over the top of the crown.

Many women do not care for the common shaped hats, for the simple reason that they are common, and, they prefer to select a style which may be made more individual by trimming and which is not so easily duplicated.

The scoop bonnet is a favorite, because it is generally becoming and is so shaped that while being a bonnet it has the youthful appearance of a round hat.

The distinctive feature of the scoop bonnet is that it has no brim at all, and that it lies perfectly flat upon the front of the head, just over the forehead. This gives a very nice chance for a becoming face trimming.

Women with small regular features find the scoop bonnet very becoming, if trimmed with a standing bow, which is placed on the front of the bonnet in the most upright, aggressive manner possible. Around the edge of the bonnet there must be a heavy ruching of some kind of velvet, and at the back another upright bow. This makes a very pretty hat, and one which will probably be fashionable all winter.

The Japanese hat is one of the novelties of the season, but it is so trying that only the prettiest women can wear it. It is shaped exactly like the hat Ah Sin wears upon the Japanese fans with which you decorate your room, and it is trimmed by a puff of velvet round the edge and three puffs running at regular intervals around the crown. The little point on top like the peak of a Chinese pagoda is left untrimmed, and no feathers, pompons, or ornaments are used upon the hat. Upon women with small heads and naturally curly hair the hat is becoming, but let others beware.

No matter what may be the season, the tea gown and the house dress must always be of interest to the woman who likes to look nice in the house as well as out of doors.

In these days of steam heated and comfortably warmed apartments, one does not need to make the house dress any warmer in winter than in summer, because the temperature is at summer heat all the year round. Therefore a greater latitude is afforded to a woman in buying her house dresses than in buying her street dresses.

At a luncheon which was given a short time ago by a young society woman who had just returned from Lenox and wished to entertain a few of her lady friends, before starting upon an autumn trip, the prettiest gown of all was that which was worn by the hostess herself.

She had no intention of being elaborately dressed, and therefore the material which she selected was plain white cashmere. The bodice was square-necked and tight-fitting to the waist line. Below that it was slashed all around. The skirt was perfectly plain, and hung full both front and back. To relieve the clinging appearance, it was lined with silk, and this gave it a more graceful hang and an appearance of heaviness. The sleeves of this gown were of the same white cashmere, and consisted of one big puff. Over the cashmere there were bands of white satin ribbon.

There was a broad, white satin collar trimmed with white Valenciennes lace, and a little of the lace edged the front of the bodice and took the place of a belt.

The effect was lovely, and so much admiration did the gown provoke that the hostess declared that she felt quite embarrassed at wearing so pretty a gown, as if she had tried to outdress her guests.

The same gown in two shades of blue is quite as pretty, and by reason of its color is not as dressy in effect and makes an admirable luncheon gown.

Have you seen Agnes Huntington's Russian cloak? It is white crepe de chine, lined with blue, and it has a hood. It is so voluminous that when Miss Huntington throws one end of it in great folds over her left shoulder, the cloak hangs full to the ground, and Miss Huntington must gather it up as she walks. Several fashionable women have ordered cloaks of the same description for the ball room when the dance is over.

Out of Material.

Mrs. Bingo—How are you getting on with your crazy quilt?

Mrs. Kingley—Pretty well. But I have got to go out shopping to-day and get a few more samples.—Cloak Review.

Ghoulish Glee.

"Why did you laugh so fiendishly at Wiggins when his umbrella blew inside out?"

"Ha! It was one he borrowed from me a month ago."—Puck.

RUN DOWN AT LAST

Capture of a Clever Gang of Letter-box Thieves.

THEY HAVE STOLEN $100,000.

Bankers Swindled Out of Large Amounts by "Raised" Checks.

Have Been Rifling the Mails in All the Cities of the Country—One of Their Number an Expert Penman Hard Work of the Authorities in Ferreting Out the Robbers.

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—After months of diligent search and patient watching the Postoffice authorities have at last succeeded in capturing one of the boldest gangs of mail robbers that has ever operated in the cities of this country.

They have successfully pillaged mail boxes of their valuable contents for nearly a year in every prominent city of the Union. In this city they operated in May last by breaking open several letter boxes and stealing their contents. The prompt action of Postmaster Van Cott, who had every box in the city watched for several days, soon caused the gang to abandon New York.

Harry Armstrong, alias "Sheeney," who was caught here by Postoffice Department Inspector J. E. Jacobs, is the last of the gang to be captured. The others of the gang are: Charles Hubbard, alias "Charles Diamond," who is the leader of the gang; T. C. Boalan, alias "T. Clayton," and J. K. Stratton.

The latter three were caught a week ago in Atlanta, Ga. Stratton and Hubbard were then taken to St. Louis for trial, and Boalan to Nashville, Tenn.

These four thieves have been operating since August, 1890, and have robbed the mails of more than $100,000. The postoffice inspectors have checks for amounts aggregating $25,000 which the robbers stole and had cashed at banks all over the country. These checks were taken from letter boxes in Washington, Pittsburg, Chicago, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Baltimore, Denver, San Francisco, Louisville, Cincinnati, Nashville, New Orleans, Atlanta, St. Paul, Rochester, Syracuse, Kansas City and many other places.

Post Office Inspectors J. E. Jacobs and R. Morrison, of this city; A. M. Sprosser, of Washington; Paul A. Williams, of St. Louis, and J. B. Holmes, of Cincinnati, who hunted down the gang, traveled thousands of miles to capture the thieves. They followed the gang from city to city for months and were led a merry chase.

The members of the gang never stopped more than a few days in one city. They would open the letter boxes with false keys, abstract the letters and take them to their lodgings. They opened the letters by steaming. Those that contained cash or checks were destroyed and those that had neither were resealed and remailed.

The checks were altered where they were payable "to order" so as to read "to bearer," and in many instances were "raised." The writing was removed by means of acids. One of the thieves was not only an expert penman, but also an artist. Where checks were tinted of course the tint was removed by the acids. He had all kinds of crayon pencils, and with these he first retinted the checks and concealed the discoloration made by the acid before filling them in again.

As soon as the thieves got their checks cashed they always went to some city remote from the scene of their last robbery.

The members of the gang did not always travel together. Sometimes they would separate and each thief would "work" a town. They would then come together again in one of the large cities.

The inspectors could have arrested certain members of the gang sooner, but they wanted to get them all, and for that reason they delayed the capture.

Gen. E. G. Rathbone of Washington, formerly Chief Postoffice Inspector, put the inspectors on the case last February. The inspectors first visited the banks that had been swindled and got a description of the men who presented the checks for payment. The descriptions varied greatly, showing that the thieves were in the habit of disguising themselves.

Inspector Jacobs managed to get hold of some correspondence between Hubbard and Prentiss Tiller, who is serving a five years' sentence at Jackson, Mich., for robbing the Iron Mountain Railroad of $116,000.

The letters that Tiller wrote to Hubbard showed he had formerly belonged to the gang of letter box thieves. The gang made their headquarters at a saloon kept by J. Carrero, in Louisville, Ky. The inspectors followed Hubbard about and after a time got to know other members of the gang by sight.

Three weeks ago the inspectors followed Hubbard, Boalan and Stratton to Denver. The thieves went from there to Dallas, Texas. A fair was in progress and the Dallas police refused to allow them to leave the train, as they suspected them of being crooks. They then proceeded to New Orleans and from there traveled to Atlanta.

The inspectors arrested the trio at the Folsome House. In their room and on their persons were found 65 letter box keys, 15 mail pouch keys, three saws, 11 files, two boxes of crayon pencils and several bottles of acids. The thieves were locked up in the Atlanta jail, and on the following day Inspector Jacobs had himself committed as a counterfeiter. He was put in a cell between Boalan and Stratton. He overheard them calling out to each other that they must swear that they were strangers to one another, and also learned of the whereabouts of Armstrong and of the fact that Stratton had shipped a satchel to himself at Atlanta.

This satchel was seized at Louisville. It was found to contain a full set of burglars' tools, several gold watches and a great lot of jewelry. Inside the case of one of the watches was engraved "Clarence E. Stedman."

Hubbard is a well-known thief and is No. 340 in Inspector Byrnes' Rogues' Gallery. He was sentenced to Sing Sing in this city in 1884 for four years for highway robbery. Armstrong is the son of a once wealthy gambler of Louisville. He is well educated and a good penman. He did the "check raising" for the gang. Nothing is known of the others, but it is believed they have criminal histories, and the records of various prisons will be scanned for the purpose of ascertaining their identity.

Will Pay Another Dividend.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., Nov. 11. — Bank Commissioner Chapin says that a second dividend will soon be paid to depositors by the wrecked Stockbridge Savings Bank. The bank has already paid one dividend of 35 per cent., but it is not believed that the second one will be as large as the first one. Chas. E. Collender, one of the bondsmen of the defaulting Treasurer Chas. H. Willis, will not contest the suit brought by the receiver on the bond. He says he will pay to the extent of his ability.

Gov. Flower's Inauguration.

ALBANY, N. Y., Nov. 11.—In contradiction of the published statement that Gov. Roswell P. Flower would have no military parade or other demonstration at his inauguration, it is authoritatively stated here by the Adjutant-General that there will be a suitable military escort and demonstration provided for Gov. Flower and that he will be inaugurated with all due form and ceremony befitting his rank as Commander-in-Chief of the National Guard and Governor of the State.

Firemen Charged With Arson.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Nov. 11.—John Fouhout, 24 years old, and John McCann, 19 years old, both members of the local fire company, were arrested yesterday charged with firing barns and outbuildings. Fouhout confessed to having set fire to half a dozen buildings during the past three months and implicated McCann. The latter denies all connection with the matter and will have an examination on Friday. Fouhout was held for the action of the grand jury.

Massachusetts Board of Trade.

BOSTON, Nov. 11.—The annual meeting of the Massachusetts State Board of Trade was held yesterday. President Charles E. A. Adams presided. The resignation of the secretary and treasurer, William J. Golding, was accepted and F. L. Vreesy of Brookline was chosen secretary, and J. A. Davis of Boston, treasurer. President Adams was re-elected.

President Thompson Indicted.

CAMDEN, N. J., Nov. 11.—The Grand Jury found a true bill against Wm. J. Thompson, the President of the Gloucester Jockey Club. The indictment charges Thompson with maintaining a nuisance and a disorderly house. It was procured through the efforts of the Camden Law and Order League.

Colored Murderer Hanged.

NORFOLK, Va., Nov. 11.—Henry Custis, colored, who killed an old man named Waller near Tanner's Creek, Sept. 5, 1880, suffered the extreme penalty of his crime in the Portsmouth jail yard yesterday. The drop fell shortly before 1 o'clock, and in eight minutes Custis was pronounced dead.

Said to be the Work of Strikers.

UNIONTOWN, Pa., Nov. 11.—Ex-Commissioner James Nixon's hotel and three other dwelling houses at Fairchance were burned yesterday. Nixon's loss is $7,000. The fire is claimed to be of incendiary origin and is said to be the work of the late strikers against whom Nixon took such a decided stand during the big coke strike.

Taxation of Bank Surplus Invalid.

ALBANY, N. Y., Nov. 11.—In an opinion submitted yesterday, Corporation Counsel D. Cady Herrick decided that taxation of bank surplus is invalid. The opinion will take off the rolls of Albany County over $2,000,000 that had been assessed by the County Supervisors.

NEW JERSEY JOTTINGS.

A movement is on foot in Jersey City to establish a society for the systematic dispensation of charity.

The Jersey City Turn Verein, the oldest society of its kind in Hudson County, having been organized in 1854, is about to collapse.

Miss Helen J Downer of Jersey City, attempted suicide by jumping into the ocean at Asbury Park yesterday, but was rescued in time to save her life.

Susan Trainor, in Hudson County Jail as a disorderly person, scaled a 10-foot wall on Saturday and escaped. She was arrested on Monday and yesterday was sent to the penitentiary.

The Board of Engineers of New Brunswick decided last night to retain Chief Engineer Acker. A charge had been made against him of bringing the fire department into ridicule at Atlantic City, but the Board decided to retain him in his position.

WANT HIS WEALTH

Queer Fight For the Possession of a Fortune.

THE CASE OF JONATHAN HUNT.

Scorned While He Lived, the Money He Left Now Causes Contention.

He Had No Right to a Father's Name—Descendants of Samuel R. Smith, His Reputed Father, Trying to Prove That the Relationship Existed—Jonathan's Eccentric Life and Mysterious Death.

MORRISVILLE, N. Y., Nov. 11.—A short time prior to the war of 1812 a certain Widow Hunt, living on a farm near what is now the seat of Colgate University, in Hamilton, then a settlement, gave birth to a son, over whose paternity gossips wagged their tongues, but for whose being no man was ever held responsible.

Living near Hamilton was Samuel R. Smith, a well-known business man. In 1820 Smith's wife died, and shortly afterward he married the Widow Hunt. Jonathan Hunt, the reputed illegitimate son, was never publicly acknowledged by Samuel R. Smith to be his son. From this marriage were born three children—Adon, Sidney and Charlotte, afterward Mrs. Adams—who were always spoken of as half-brothers and half-sister of Jonathan Hunt.

Jonathan Hunt, while yet a boy, went to New York City and became a bootblack and newsboy. He prospered, and at thirty-five was spoken of as a wild speculator. But as the money flowed in he invested it in land on Manhattan Island and in the South.

In the mean time Jonathan's mother had died and her husband had married again, and by the third marriage other children were born.

By 1845 Jonathan Hunt was reputed one of the wealthiest men in America. He possessed millions, but his eccentricity was the talk of New York. In January, 1847, Jonathan Hunt was in Charleston, S. C. Early on the evening of the 17th of that month he left his hotel for a short walk, from which he never returned. None that knew him ever saw or heard of him again.

To-day the descendants of Samuel R. Smith are trying at the special term of the Supreme Court of New York, to prove that Jonathan Hunt was the son of Samuel R. Smith and that they are of the blood of Jonathan Hunt through the father, who never owned him as a son in his lifetime.

If these allegations shall be proved, about fifty descendants of Samuel R. Smith by his third marriage, will claim to be entitled as heirs at law of Sidney Smith, lunatic, deceased, one of the devisees and heirs of Jonathan Hunt, to seven-ninths of all of Sidney Smith's real and personal estate, now said to be valued at much over $1,500,000 and consisting of properties in New York City and in Alabama and other Southern States.

The case is being argued before Judge Parker. Senator John E. Smith, of Morrisville; ex-Congressman Mason and S. W. White, of Hamilton, and Judge Countrymen, of Albany, appear for the plaintiffs, and W. Mann, John E. Parsons and ex-Judge Russell for the defendants. It is agreed that William Kernan, of Utica, brother of ex-Senator Kernan, shall act as referee.

The records are being overhauled, and gravestones, old papers, diaries, newspapers and letters are being drawn upon for evidence.

Thus the litigation over Jonathan Hunt's millions, their once possessor dead and his bones lying no one knows where, may perhaps secure for him after all these years the right to possess even in death a father's name.

Guards Knew of the Plot.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 11.—A sensation came out yesterday when it was announced that one of the recaptured convicts had confessed that for two days previous to the night of the Briceville attack the guards knew the release of the convicts would be made; that word had been spread all over the valley, and the night of the mob's uprising only one guard was left on duty, and his gun was taken from him.

Claims He is Ineligible.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 11.—John A. Bernhard, defeated candidate for the Assembly, filed a protest with the Monroe County canvassers yesterday against the eligibility of Richard Carran, the successful candidate, on the ground that he was a park commissioner 100 days before election. The communication was received and ordered filed.

Signed With Pittsburg.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 11.—Pitcher James Galvin and Outfielder Ed. Swartwood yesterday signed contracts to play with the Pittsburg National League Club next season. Galvin received the $500 bonus promised him last season by ex-President J. Palmer O'Neill for good pitching before he signed his contract.

SULLIVAN WILLING.

He Challenges Slavin to Fight for All the Money He Can Raise.

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—Charley Johnston, Sullivan's friend and backer, has received a letter from the champion, authorizing him to match Sullivan with Slavin for the largest purse offered and a side bet of the greatest amount the other side will put up. Sullivan stipulates that the fight shall come off in the latter part of September or the middle of October.

Mr. Johnston, on receipt of the letter, immediately called at the office of the "Herald" and issued the following challenge to Slavin:

"On behalf of John L. Sullivan, who has empowered me to arrange a match with Frank Slavin for the championship of the world and as much money as the Australian can possibly raise, I challenge the said Mr. Slavin to meet the champion in a fair stand-up fight, the battle to take place in America before some responsible club which will offer the largest purse, the match to take place in the latter part of September or the early part of October, under the recognized rules. To show my earnestness I hereby deposit in the New York "Herald" $2,500, to remain up until January 1, 1892.

"CHARLES JOHNSTON."

UNITED STATES MINTS.

Director Leech's Report—Largest Coinage in the Country's History.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11.—Edward O. Leech, the director of the Mint, has submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury a report of the operations of the United States mints and assay offices for the last fiscal year. The value of the gold deposited the mints and assay offices during the fiscal year, 1891, was $59,625,678.08 against $49,228,223.66 in the preceding year.

The deposits and purchases of silver aggregated 71,869,663.92 standard ounces, of the coinage value of $83,630,154.31, against $43,565,135.15 in the preceding year.

The coinage executed at the mints was the largest in the history of the mint in this country, aggregating 119,547,877 pieces.

Preparing for the Convention.

BOSTON, Nov. 11.—The first of the preliminary meetings of the dual convention of the World's and the National Women's Christian Temperance Unions, which occurs Friday, was held yesterday by the executive committee of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union. Representatives are present from all quarters of the globe, among them being Lady Somerset and Miss Hall, of England; Miss Telsono, the woman lawyer from Japan, and members from Honolulu, China, Australia, South Africa and India.

Heretic Temporarily Reinstated.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 11.—The Allegheny Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church was in session all of yesterday and far into the night. Allegheny City Revision and the case of the Rev. H. Bausmann, of Rochester, Pa., the accused heretic, were the two important questions considered. The Bausmann case was temporarily disposed of on a compromise basis by the Presbytery sending him back to his Rochester charge, pending a further investigation into his orthodoxy by the investigating committee that has him in charge.

Ex-Governor Smith's Funeral.

ST. ALBANS, Vt., Nov. 11.—The funeral of the late ex-Governor John Gregory Smith occurred yesterday afternoon. A large gathering of distinguished railroad and general business men and men of political reputation was in attendance. The religious services were held at 2 o'clock, Rev. M. H. Buckham, president of the University of Vermont, officiating. Business in the town was generally suspended during the funeral and flags were displayed at half mast.

Missing Collegian Welsh Turns Up.

NORTH ADAMS, Mass., Nov. 11.—Robert Clark Welsh of Brooklyn, a student at Williams College, who disappeared about ten days ago was found at a farm house on the top of the Hoosac Mountains, nine miles from here. He returned to the college with Student Phil Allen yesterday. He refuses to talk of his disappearance. His relatives in Brooklyn were notified of his return.

A Peculiar Suit.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 11.—The case of the city of Bridgeport against Maria A. Hotchkiss and others is on trial in the Superior Court. The city owes the Hotchkiss heirs $50,000, but owing to litigation between the heirs, it fears it may repay the amount to the wrong parties, and therefore brings the suit that it may follow the court's directions.

May Contest the Election.

GLENS FALLS, N. Y., Nov. 11.—It is possible that William Cameron, the Democratic candidate for Assembly, will contest Howard Conkling's election. The latter has 44 plurality. Cameron claims that more than twenty ballots were not allowed him.

NEW YORK NEWS IN BRIEF.

Henry L. Betts, who killed Charles Blish at Peekskill, has been indicted for murder.

The twenty-third annual convention of the New York State Woman Suffrage Association, is in session at Auburn.

Leonard A. Giegerich, County Clerk of New York, has been appointed Judge of the Court of Common Pleas by Gov. Hill.

Stuart Robson, the actor, and Miss May Waldron, the leading lady of his company, were married yesterday in New York.

It is thought that Rev. Mr. George, at Catskill, will be unable to escape conviction unless some startling developments in his favor are brought out soon.

CIVIL WAR IN BRAZIL

Two Provinces Have Revolted Against the Dictator.

SERIOUS FIGHTING REPORTED.

Several Other States Expected to Declare Their Independence.

Rio Grande do Sul and Grao Para in Open Mutiny—Telegraph Wires Cut All Over the Country—Rumor that Fonseca Will Resign—Bitter Opposition of German Colonists—Threatening State of Affairs.

PERNAMBUCO, Brazil, Nov. 11.—The province of Grao Para has declared its independence and will resist President Fonseca. The province of Bahia is expected to do likewise.

RIO JANEIRO, Nov. 11.—There is no longer any doubt that the province of Grao Para has followed that of Rio Grande do Sul in a declaration of independence of the Fonseca government. Two other provinces are expected to revolt also. It is reported that General da Fonseca has been informed that he is suffering from a disease which must cause his death, and he has announced his willingness to resign.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—Owing to the strict guard kept by the Brazilian government over the telegraph and cable lines it is almost impossible to obtain reliable news as to the exact state of the country. It is now generally admitted, however, that the Province of Rio Grande do Sul has declared its independence, and, as it includes 50,000 fighting Germans in its population, the revolution there is undoubtedly serious.

The German population of this province is reported to be organizing into armed bodies on the plan of the Dutch settlers of South Africa. The troops under the command of General da Fonseca are said to have been ordered to move on Rio Grande do Sul. This report, however, is not believed here, as it is understood that the dictator has been warned to do everything possible to avoid bloodshed.

The report of fighting in the province of Rio Grande do Sul has been confirmed. The trouble is said to have its centre at Port Allegre, the capital of Rio Grande do Sul. The telegraph wires leading from there have been cut.

SAYS WAR IS INEVITABLE.

Capt. Schley's Reported Assertion—Other Chilian News.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—A dispatch from Santiago, Chili, says that Minister Egan and Capt. Schley continue to exhibit a bitter animus against Chili. Capt. Schley declares that war is inevitable.

The American Consul at Valparaiso adds that a strong fleet is coming, and that therefore other war ships are leaving, and that no evidence of Chilian hostility remains.

The Captain of the Esmeralda reports that he was not allowed to coal at Acapulco. The Captain of the Itata speaks in high terms of the sympathy shown for the Congressional party in California.

Big Irrigation System Sold.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Nov. 11.—One of the greatest irrigation systems in the West, the canal, reservoirs and lands of the Colorado Land and Water Company, has within a few days passed into the hands of a number of Buffalo capitalists, and will hereafter be managed chiefly from this city. This company virtually controls the agricultural lands of the northern slope of the Arkansas Valley for nearly 100 miles, and expect to make $3,200,000 by the sale of water rights. Over $200,000 worth of water rights have already been sold.

Agree to Arbitrate.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11.—In the argument before the United States Supreme Court yesterday, in the Behring Sea case, Attorney-General Miller announced that the correspondence between the United States and Great Britain respecting the Behring Sea controversy had resulted in an agreement to submit the matter to arbitration.

Spiritualistic Medium Exposed.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 11.—Anna Eva Fay, the alleged spirit medium, was made the subject of a complete and successful expose by Reuben A. Punnett, of this city, at Washington Rink last night, before a large and intelligent audience, her entire performance being repeated and exposed as sheer trickery, pure and simple.

Strikers Return to Work.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 11.—The men who belong to the Amalgamated Association at Jones & Laughlin's mill, who have been on strike, returned to work to-day, pending an investigation into their grievances by the National Committee of the Amalgamated Association.

The Corn Crop Large.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11.—The statistical returns of the Department of Agriculture for November make the corn crop one of the largest in volume, with a rate of yield slightly above the average of 26 bushels per acre.

PENNSYLVANIA BRIEFS.

The State Farmers' Alliance is in session at Harrisburg.

"Arbor Day" will be celebrated at Reading on the 27th inst.

Moncure Robinson, one of Philadelphia's noted citizens, is dead.

Eleven people had a narrow escape from death in a fire in Philadelphia yesterday morning.

At to-day's session of the State Senate it will probably be declared, by vote, that the Senate has no jurisdiction in the matter of the Treasurer and Auditor-General.

THE COTTON CROP.

It is Under the Average on Account of Rain and Frost.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11.—The cotton returns of the Department of Agriculture for November are not favorable for a high rate of yield. The lateness of the crop, the extremes of temperature, the excess of rainfall followed by drought, causing enfeebled vitality and loss of foliage and fruit, have been unfavorable for a large crop. On the northern border of the belt killing frosts occurred on the 29th; in some places as early as the 23d. West of the Mississippi there has been some improvement during the past month.

The season has been very favorable for picking. Quality is almost everywhere reported high and the fibre is of good color and unusually free from trash. The yield, as averaged from the county estimates, averages 179 pounds per acre, distributed by States as follows: Virginia, 151; North Carolina, 178; South Carolina, 160; Georgia, 155; Florida, 120; Alabama, 165; Mississippi, 190; Louisiana, 200; Texas, 195; Arkansas, 210; Tennessee, 170.

As killing frosts have not yet been general in the southern and western sections of the belt it is possible, with favorable weather following, that current expectations may be slightly exceeded.

LABOR NOTES.

The cabinet-makers of Philadelphia have successfully terminated their strike for nine hours.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen has donated $500 towards erecting a Labor Temple in Indianapolis.

The retail clothing salesmen and stock clerks of clothing houses are to be organized under the Knights of Labor.

The Baltimore carpenters and the other building trades in that city will inaugurate their eight-hour work-day on Jan. 1, 1892.

The trouble between the French glass-blowers and their employes, which arose a month ago about time and wages, has been settled by compromise, and work will be at once resumed.

The struggle of the Dockers' Union of London threatens to terminate disastrously. It is said that the officers of the Union have become lukewarm, and that their management has been bad.

Lottery Men Win.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 11.—A hotly contested primary election was held in this city yesterday for the selection of delegates to the Democratic Convention. The election turned largely on the lottery issue. The anti-lottery men put a full ticket in the field but were overwhelmingly defeated by the other faction, which carried the city by a majority of over 11,000 in the largest primary vote ever polled.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

Berlin banks have survived the run upon them.

Hon. Samuel Creelman, of Halifax, aged 102, is dead.

Lord Salisbury announces that England will retain possession of Egypt.

The fifth annual session of the Fraternal Congress is in session at Washington.

The River Neva is blocked with ice and navigation to or from St. Petersburg is suspended.

The town of Hayward, Wis., was badly damaged Monday night by an explosion of dynamite.

The loss of life in the Andaman Islands by the recent cyclone was over 200, and as many more were injured.

The people of Touat have rebelled against the Sultan of Morocco, decapitated five emissaries and declared for independence.

The Rankin Manufacturing Company, wholesale clothing house of Nashville, made an assignment yesterday. Assets, $193,000; liabilities, $133,000.

The Canadian government will adopt strenuous measures to attract immigration next year, but the Canadian debt has increased to $385,000,000.

Weather Indications.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11.—For New England: Continued warm brisk and high southerly winds; threatening weather and rain; rain to-morrow.

For Eastern New York, New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware and Eastern Pennsylvania: Continued warmer; brisk and high southerly winds; threatening weather and rain; rain to-morrow.

For Western New York, Western Pennsylvania: Continued warm; southerly gales; threatening weather and rain, occasionally heavy; rain to-morrow.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—Reserved seats for "Tuxedo" are almost all gone.

—The monthly business meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held at the rooms at 3:30 p. m. to-morrow.

—The reflection of a fire in the direction of New Brunswick was seen in this city at 6 o'clock this morning.

—To-night will be probably the last appearance of Joe English at Reform Hall. He had another rousing meeting last evening.

—The Crescent League has engaged sixty seats at Music Hall for to-morrow evening, when they will royally welcome Ed. Marble and George Thatcher.

—The women of the M. E. church will hold a Christmas bazar, Dec. 1, 2 and 3, afternoon and evening. They are working very hard to raise money for the new chapel in North Plainfield.

—Tickets for the harp recital are to be had at H. P. Reynolds's drug store. To attend this concert is not wholly philanthropic, for the music itself will be worth more than the price of a ticket.

—The ward tickets nominated by the Democratic party at their primaries were adopted at the citizens' meeting last evening, and those men receiving such nominations are alone entitled to support as the nominees of the citizens' party.

—Marsh, Ayers, & Co., of 29 East Front street, will for the next 30 days, to close out this year's patterns, sell their stock of paper at cost, to make room for new goods. They offer the greatest bargains ever offered in wall paper in Plainfield.

—Miss Ida Fitzhugh, a Chicago society girl and charming singer, is one of the sextette of ladies with "Tuxedo" at Music Hall, to-morrow evening. Miss Fitzhugh's vocal and dramatic talent was discovered by her teacher in French and Italian, who was so charmed by her voice that he enthusiastically urged her to go on the stage.

—At the annual convention of the Young Men's Christian association of the Fourth New Jersey district, to be held at Rahway, Nov. 20-22, the following prominent men have promised to be present: Austin Scott, LL. D., president of Rutgers college; James McGee of Plainfield, and the Hon. Elkanah Drake of Newark. Interesting topics will be presented for discussion. Information may be obtained from E. L. Suffern of the district committee, or at the association rooms in this city.

The Railroad Must Pay for the Burning.

Timothy A. McCarthy has come out victor in his suit against the Central New Jersey railway. He sued them for the burning of his barn, at Evona, last June, claiming that the fire was caused by locomotive sparks. The jury, in justice Nash's court, gave him a verdict for the full amount, yesterday.

Happy and content is a home with "The Rochester," a lamp with the light of the morning. Catalogues, write Rochester Lamp Co., New York.

NO DEMOCRATIC TICKET.

Instead a Citizens' Movement is Substituted, and the Battle-cry Is "No Bonds for Plainfield!"

The delegates elected by the Democratic primaries of each ward to attend the city convention, met last night at Cutter's hall to nominate their candidates for city offices.

When delegate Love nominated Seymour G. Smith for councilman and it looked as though there was going to be no opposition, judge Louis F. Wadsworth took the floor and protested that it was contrary to all party usages to place a Republican in nomination on a Democratic ticket. Peter Flynn then moved that the convention adjourn without day, and the motion was carried.

A few minutes later a call was filed in the hands of the secretary for a citizens' convention, and the voters present proceeded to organize such a convention.

There was little opposition to the slated candidates, and the list of nominees was completed as follows:

For Councilmen-at-Large—Daniel S. Roberts, Seymour G. Smith, Elmore D. Moffett.
For Assessor—Joseph A. Hubbard.
For Collector—John Johnson.
For Treasurer—Alexander Titsworth.
For Chosen Freeholders—J. Frank Hubbard, Andrew Vanderbeck.
For Commissioners of Appeal—Manning Vermeule, Jeremiah Manning, John B. Brown.
For School Trustee—DeWitt C. Ivins.

The chairman of the meeting was J. M. Dayton, and the secretary Lewis H. Brown.

The following platform was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That in view of the blighting effects of city bonds upon our sister cities of Elizabeth and Rahway, we, the citizens of Plainfield in convention assembled, do most emphatically protest against any system of city improvements that may lead to the burdening of our city with bonds; and do hereby demand of our candidates that they shall oppose all measures that may tend in that disastrous direction.

A motion was carried accepting the regular Democratic ward nominations as the ward nominations of the convention.

The Republicans, evidently alarmed at the prospect of having a non-political ticket in the field, are to-day seeking to prove that the citizens' convention was illegal. They claim that attached to the call were the signatures of leading Republicans who, on being told that for signing the call they would be cast out of the party and out of public office, protest that they never signed. They further claim that some of the signatures are of men who live over the brook, and that the call lacked by many names the requisite number of genuine signatures. On the other hand it is insisted that the proceedings were proper and legal in every particular, as will be seen when a copy of the call is filed according to law with the city clerk, and that all the charges brought against the citizens' movement are the invention of a desperate partisan enemy.

The Famous Four-leaf Clover.

[From The New York Recorder.]

Plainfield's quaint comedy quartette—George Taggart, Howard, Will and Tiffany Spencer—will give their first performance of the season next Tuesday evening. Two plays will be presented: "The Curate", an original comedetta by George Taggart, and "Second Sight", a farce comedy by Bernard Herbert, which has been remodele to suit the peculiar requirements of the Clover. The foot-ball team will consist of Alex. Milne, captain, A. B. Carpenter, J. Shepherd, H. Woolston, Geo. Snedeiker, A. B. Crane, H. Drake, E. Peck, H. Woodland, J. Schenck and N. Probasco.

She Miraculously Escaped Death.

An eighteen-year-old young woman living on Madison avenue had retired to bed, the other evening, and was just in a doze, when her mother called her. She arose and turned on the gas to light it. Just then her mother called back "No matter", and the daughter, half asleep, got into bed again without turning off the gas. Fortunately, the windows of the room were open all night, and the deadly air escaped. Otherwise she would have been found dead in the morning.

A FORTUNATE ESCAPE.

Though Caught Between Two Trains, He Suffered Only Minor Injuries.

William Clegley, a stranger, is a patient at the Muhlenberg Hospital as the result of an accident which occurred at Grant avenue this noon. He was standing between two tracks, watching a coal train pass in front of him, when a Blue Line express whizzed by at his back. He was struck by one of the cars, but fortunately did not fall under the wheels. The worst injury is a bad cut on the shoulder.

The Blue Line express was going at such a speed that Evosa was reached before it could be stopped. The engineer thought he had struck and killed the man, and was surprised that he could not find the body. The injured man had already been taken to the hospital.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Charles C. Dilts is very ill at his home, 44 West Fifth street.

Miss Butcher is spending a few days at New York and Brooklyn.

Everybody will be gratified to know that Mrs. Charles Potter, jr., is much better.

Mrs. Benjamin F. Bremner, of Rutherford, N. J., is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Chas. G. Hedge, on Sandford avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Taylor of Newark are happy over the advent of a bright baby daughter. Mrs. Taylor was formerly Miss Emma Whitlock of Plainfield.

At the five-days national convention of the W. C. T. U., at Boston, there are present from this city Miss Clementine R. Yates, Mrs. S. R. Krom, and Mrs. T. H. Tomlinson.

Miss Mary S. Patten, the oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George D. Patten, is very ill at her home on LaGrande avenue. There is little hope of her recovery. She was a graduate of the High school in this year's class.

Miss Mamie Gilroy, who plays the soubrette in "Tuxedo" at Music Hall, tomorrow night, is one of the prettiest and most winsome little ladies in the profession. Her dancing with John A. Coleman is one of the hits of the performance.

F. L. Rudolph Laurent died at his home, 7 Somerset street, at 10 o'clock last night, after a painful illness of several days. He was in his forty-sixth year. Funeral services will be held Friday afternoon from the house at 2, and from the German Reformed church at 2:30.

Emma Derickson, wife of Charles W. Burton, formerly of this city, died in Philadelphia, yesterday. She was a daughter of the late Judge David Derickson, of Meadville, Pa. Funeral services will be held at 4,208 Walnut street, Philadelphia, to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Funeral services over the remains of Theodore Johnson were held at 2:30 this afternoon, from Terrill & Cole's undertaking establishment, at the expense of J. H. Tier, his late employer. The pallbearers were: John Tier, John Tier, jr., William Tier, and Garrett Hammill. The funeral was very impressive.

Prof. Edwin H. Lewis, son of the Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, has resumed the editorship of the college paper at Alfred University. The current issue contains the following: "Harry L. Maxson, Ph. B., '90, has spent a year in the law office of Wm. M. Stillman, at Plainfield, and has now entered the new law school in the Equitable building in New York."

Frank M. Bower, who formerly lived at 35 Duer street, died suddenly in the railway station at the New York entrance to the East river bridge, Monday evening. He was attacked with heart disease while climbing up the stairs, and breathed his last just after saying "For God's sake get my wife and baby here before I die!" Funeral services will be held at his late residence, 111A Chauncey street, Brooklyn, to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock.

A very enjoyable entertainment was given by the Young People's League of the First Baptist church last evening. The programme included comic recitations by Walter McGee, who kept all in a frenzy of laughter, and violin solos by Master Edward Waring, whose selections were enjoyed by all. L. H. Biglow, jr., sang "Anchored" in the same pleasing way which always marks his singing. There were also piano duets by Miss Classen and W. E. MacClymont.

Died of a Broken Heart.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 11.—Mrs. W. J. Williams, whose husband and son were killed in the mine accident at Nanticoke on Sunday, died yesterday of a broken heart.

NEW ENGLAND BRIEFS.

It is learned that the schooner Hattie M. Cole, of Greenport, Mass., foundered at sea, and that the captain was drowned.

Twenty bicyclists from New Haven were arrested at Savin Rock, Conn., for riding on the sidewalks. They were fined $7 apiece.

Only two Senators were present yesterday when the Connecticut Senate convened, and an adjournment was taken until to-day.

The plant of the New Bedford (Mass.), Cordage Company, which was sold to John C. Furman, of New York, Monday, was yesterday transferred by deed to the Security Company of New Jersey.

"A GOD-SEND is Ely's Cream Balm. I had catarrh for three years, and two or three times a week my nose would bleed. I thought the sores would never heal. Your Balm has cured me."—Mrs. M. A. Jackson, Portsmouth, N. H.

I WAS so much troubled with catarrh it seriously affected my voice. One bottle of Ely's Cream Balm did the work. My voice is fully restored.—S. F. Lleagner, A. M., pastor of the Olivet Baptist Church, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE CAMERA CLUB EXHIBIT.

'Twill Be a Fine Array of Pictures by Plainfield Artists.

The annual exhibition of the Plainfield Camera club is to take place this month, beginning Saturday, Nov. 21, and closing Saturday, Nov. 28. All pictures are to be those not heretofore exhibited, and all exhibits must be ready and hung on the club room walls by Friday, Nov. 20. As an inducement to the members to exhibit, and to show their best work, it has been decided to give awards of merit in the following classes: Landscapes, portraits, marines, interiors, animals, composition and grouping, instantaneous work, and hand-camera work. Any member may compete in any one or number of these classes.

There will be first and second awards in these classes to members who do all their own work; and honorable mention in said classes to members who make their negatives but do not do their printing.

Members exhibiting for competition must number or letter their exhibits with some arbitrary mark, and number each of their pictures consecutively, and furnish duplicate lists to the committee for the use of the committee and judges, both lists enumerating the pictures and the classes in which they compete, and stating if all the work was done by the exhibitor, or not, as per above provision, and without the exhibitor's name; and accompanying said lists shall be a sealed envelope containing the exhibitor's name and his arbitrary mark.

No competing exhibitor's cards are to be put on the exhibits until after the decision of the judges on Saturday the 21st.

A board will be posted in the club room illustrating and describing the disposition of the awards, and cards will be furnished at the exhibition setting forth the same matter.

The awards will be as follows:

Landscapes—first award, gold star and two white ribbons; second award, silver star and one white ribbon.

Portraits—1st, gold star and two blue ribbons; 2d, silver star and one blue ribbon.

Marines—1st, gold star and two red ribbons; 2d, silver star and one red ribbon.

Interiors—1st, gold star and two yellow ribbons; 2d, silver star and one yellow ribbon.

Animals—1st, gold star and two pink ribbons; 2d, silver star and one pink ribbon.

Composition and Grouping—1st, gold star, white and blue ribbons; 2d, silver star, white and blue ribbons.

Instantaneous Work—1st, gold star, white and red ribbons; 2d, silver star, white and red ribbons.

Hand-Camera Work—1st, gold star, white and yellow ribbons; 2d, silver star, white and yellow ribbons.

The awards will be attached on the exhibitor's frame adjacent to the winning pictures.

Honorable mention will consist of designating cards also attached to the exhibitor's frame.

FORGER STODDARD AGAIN.

He Signs Winnie Davis' Name to a Letter Begging for Money.

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Nov. 11.—Two letters have been sent South from Jersey City recently, purporting to be written by Miss Winnie Davis, daughter of the late Jefferson Davis, begging for $1,000. One was sent to Dr. William Morrow, of Nashville, Tenn., and the other to General Gordon, of Atlanta, Ga.

There is little doubt but that they were written by Stoddard, the forger, who lies in the Hudson County Jail, and who forged his way out of the Tennessee mines by a letter to the Governor asking for his pardon, purporting to be signed by the State's Attorney, and a petition pretending to be signed by a lot of the foremost people of Tennessee.

Superintendent of Police Smith received a letter from Dr. Morrow enclosing a copy of the note sent to him. He turned the case over to Chief Murphy, who wrote to Dr. Morrow for the original. A day or two later a friend of Miss Davis came from New York with the note to Gen. Gordon. The General knew the address of Mrs. Davis and her daughter in New York, and knew that they would not need to write to him for money, so he sent them the letter to put them on their guard.

LIKE A VENDETTA.

Attempt to Assassinate John Woodward —His Daughter Was Murdered.

WAVERLY, N. Y., Nov. 11. — The would-be assassin of John Woodward has not yet been captured.

As Woodward was passing along a street in the suburbs of the village some one shot at him, the bullet passing through his hat. The would-be assassin then ran and was soon lost in the darkness. Woodward has no idea who the man was.

In July last the bodies of Lou Woodward, a daughter of Mr. Woodward, 18, and Arthur Pierce of Athens, Pa., were found in a piece of woods two miles east of Waverly, dead.

Their deaths could not be accounted for. Both were shot through the head, and, as no revolver could be found, foul play was suspected.

It is thought that the person who shot at Woodward had a hand in the murder of Pierce and Miss Woodward, and that he is anxious to remove Woodward, who has been active in pushing the investigation. The shooting will be investigated.

Reputable dealers throughout the length, breadth and depth of our glorious land fortunately keep the genuine Hires's Root beer in stock. Did you ever try it? It is easy to make, and ever so delicious—and it is such a safe drink.

A Missing Man Found.

BOSTON, Nov. 11.—Arthur D. Mayo, 30 years old, son of Rev. A. D. Mayo, who has been missing from his home in this city for more than a month, has been found in Philadelphia in a demented condition. How the young man managed to reach Philadelphia is a mystery to his relatives and friends here.

A NEW-FOUND EDEN.

The Coming Season at the Famous Coronado Already Gives Great Promise.

THE HOTEL DEL CORONADO,
CORONADO BEACH,
CALIFORNIA, Oct. 23, 1891.

October is comparatively quiet at Coronado Beach, as it is at other all-the-year-round resorts. It is a month of rest and recuperation for the big Hotel del Coronado—a fortunate dispensation of the powers that rule such things.

The guests just now are numbered by scores instead of by hundreds. On Saturday, the 24th, however, three excursion parties from the East are due. These will add more than a hundred people to the resident colony—only a drop in the bucket, truly, but nevertheless noticeable at this season. Among the tourists expected from New York city are Mrs. Roundy and Miss Roundy; from Brooklyn, Miss M. W. Plummer, Miss H. B. Prescott, Miss Belle Barr, and Mr. R. R. Bowker; from Yonkers, Miss Alice B. Cook, Miss D. K. Sheman and Miss E. A. Tafft.

There are already abundant and positive indications that the approaching winter season will be the most brilliant in the history of this famous watering-place. From all over the United States, and from Europe as well, letters are pouring in engaging rooms for periods varying from a week to a year. The wonder is that such is not the case every week in the year. Del Coronado will take care of more than a thousand guests in all the comfort and luxury of the most elegant hotel in New York. Were half the truth known concerning this new-found Eden in which the hotel is situated, and the ease with which the journey hitherward can be made from every part of the country, ten hotels of Coronadoan dimensions could not accommodate the crowds that would come. There has been but one day this month that by any stretch of the imagination could have been called unpleasant. Three solid weeks of dazzling weather! The preceding month was the same, and also the month before that; in fact, a really disagreeable day in this part of southern California is as infrequent, winter or summer, as is a thoroughly agreeable one in New York in March. Day in and day out, from the year's beginning to its end, there are from ten to fifteen hours of uninterrupted sunshine, with a temperature that rarely goes beyond the seventies or falls below the sixties, and the air is so dry and so pure that simply to breathe it is an exquisite delight.

Major and Mrs. W. E. Whittemore, U. S. A., are at the hotel. Major Whittemore is in command of the military post at San Diego, across the bay. A military ball was given last Saturday by Mr. Babcock in the beautiful ball room of the hotel, to the officers of the force. Invitations are out for another swell affair tomorrow evening. TOURIST.

'Twill Be the Wheelmen's Headquarters.

About two years ago, Frank L. C. Martin opened at 75 Park avenue the first store in this vicinity devoted exclusively to the sale of bicycles and sundries. He secured the agency of the world-famed Columbias, made by the Pope Manufacturing company, besides several other makes, and, believing the Columbia to be superior to anything else on the market, he made them the leaders, and with his usual push and perseverance managed so successfully the sale of these wheels that his business has grown in consequence to such an extent that he now finds his old quarters inadequate for his use, and has leased the large store in the Miller building, corner of Park avenue and Fourth street, formerly occupied by George E. Williams, the druggist, where he will open, about January 1, a "Wheelmen's Headquarters". Besides the usual line of bicycles and accessories, he will have a complete repair shop on the premises under the management of an experienced bicycle repairer, a department for the sale of hose, jerseys, sweaters, shoes, etc., a cigar counter, and last but by no means least a soda-water fountain, from which will be dispensed the most delicious soda-water that can be made.

Contrary to rumor, Mr. Martin will continue to carry on the life, fire and accident insurance brokerage business in New York city as successor to his father, the late J. Marc Martin. He has the best wishes of the community for his success.

A Bible for Dunellen's Council.

Over 60 young men, members of W. G. Holton council, Jr. O. U. A. M., went from Dunellen to Newark, by special train, last night, at the invitation of the members of Geo. H. Adams council.

The Dunellen boys were royally entertained by their Newark friends. A bountiful collation was served to both councils.

After the dinner, a large and handsomely-bound Bible was presented to the Dunellen friends by A. K. Smith, a national representative of the order. This Bible was the gift of Mrs. W. G. Holton, as a token of appreciation for the council which had chosen for its name that of her deceased husband.

Mr. Roberts accepted the gift, and made a very able address, which was well applauded. Many other speeches were given, after which the visitors adjourned to the railway station, and arrived at Dunellen at 2:30 this morning.

The great question of the day is: "How to keep the Irish dynamite excitement in a manageable condition." Easy enough. Give each man a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Price 25 cents.

The triumph of the age—Salvation Oil, a first-class liniment, for 25 cents.

TAXES IMPOSED ON RAILROADS.

An Increase in the Amounts to Be Paid this Year to the State.

The taxation of the several railroad corporations having their terminal in New Jersey keeps apace with the growing demands of the State Government. The State board of assessors have just prepared their returns of assessments to the State comptroller. They have raised the grand total to $1,429,205. The State will get of this grand total $1,050,224 for its own use; the other $378,980 goes to the taxing district. The tax is levied this year and collected next. It is a substantial raise over the assessment of last year.

The railroads keep New Jersey from having a direct tax. Last year they were assessed to pay $1,010,530. This was a trifle less than the $1,383,778 it cost to keep the State machinery moving, according to the State comptroller's estimate.

The Pennsylvania railroad has 760.150 miles of railroad. Its aggregate valuation last year, that is assessed in 1890, for taxes collected in 1891, was $60,845,408. This year that valuation is raised to $62,489,233. The increase in State tax is from $304,227 last year to $312,446 this year. The taxing districts get an increase from $88,733 to $93,277. The total tax last year was $392,960; this year it is $405,923. This increase is due to the new depot at Jersey City.

The Central Railroad of New Jersey has 423.374 miles of road. Its aggregate valuation last year was $44,118,453, and the increase this year is not striking because of few changes. The amount this year is $44,799,810. The tax for State use was $223,999, against $220,592 last year. For the use of the taxing districts $76,436, against $76,031. The total tax is fixed at $300,432, an increase of less than $5,000.

The Philadelphia and Reading system has 116 856 miles of road in the State, namely, from the Delaware bridge at Trenton to Bound Brook. Its aggregate valuation is $7,373,159, which is somewhat greater than it was last year. The amount assessed in the former report was $6,381,893. The State gets of this amount $36,865, an increase over $31,909, and the total taxing districts $2,820, an increase over $2,254. The total tax is $39,686. It was $34,164 last year.

The New York, Lake Erie and Western railroad system has only 80.333 miles in the State which is taxable. It is, however, valuable compared with the terminals of other roads. Last year its aggregate valuation, as fixed by the board, was $14,120,769; this year they raised it to $15,317,176. The total tax is $121,319, a significant raise over $114,519 collected last year. The State gets $76,585, and the local taxing districts $44,733—an increase of $6,000 for the State.

The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western railroad system is assessed this year with $39,265,553, and last year it was $38,980,503. The total tax is $268,750, and in 1890 it was $266,482. The State gets $196,327, against $194,902 last year, and the local taxing district gets $72,422, an increase over $43,915 of last year.

The New York, Susquehanna and Western railroad system has $5,739,046 assessed as the whole value of its real estate and personal property—a slight increase over last year. The total tax is $29,430, against $28,372 in 1890. The State gets $28,695; local taxing district $785. This corporation has 127,230 miles of road in the State.

The Lehigh Valley railroad has 187.037 and its aggregate assessment is $17,018,025. The total tax is $125,841, an increase over $111,938 of last year. The State gets $87,552 and the local taxing districts $38,288. The State gets an increase of $6,000.

The smaller unclassified roads whose aggregate mileage reaches to 333.678 are assessed at $17,550,374. There is a large increase noticed here. Last year they were assessed at $16,109,087. The total tax is $137,970, a jump from $105,019 of last year. The State will get $87,751, against $80,545, and the taxing districts $50,218, against $24,474 in 1890. In 1890 the aggregate valuations of all the railroads was $202,106,027; tax for State uses, $1,010,530; for taxing districts, $338,552; total tax, $1,349,082. In 1891—collected in 1892—aggregate valuations, $210,044,945; tax for State uses, $1,050,224; total tax, $1,429,205.

Coroner Hetfield Takes the Oath of Office.

Coroner-elect Morris Hetfield, after finishing his duties as police justice, at Elizabeth, yesterday morning, went from the police headquarters and was sworn into the new office to which he has been honored by the majority vote of the people of the county.

Judge McCormick administered the oath, in the presence of associates Hyer and Wiley. Coroner Hetfield was then congratulated by a number of friends who were in attendance.

—There is no other board of freeholders in the whole State of New Jersey that has such a splendid record, individually or collectively, as the board of freeholders of Union county.—Elizabeth Journal.

Oh, What a Cough!

Will you heed the warning. The signal perhaps of the sure approach of that more terrible disease, Consumption. Ask yourselves if you can afford for the sake of saving 50c., to run the risk and do nothing for it. We know from experience that Shiloh's Cure will cure your cough. It never fails. This explains why more than a Million Bottles were sold the past year. It relieves croup and whooping cough at once. Mothers, do not be without it. For lame back, side or chest, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by J. G. Miller, No. 10 East Front street, Plainfield, N. J.

FUN AT BARNET FAIR.

An Interesting Phase of Country Life in England.

Horse Jockeys Run Things to Suit Their Own Convenience—Fakirs and Sharks After the Unsophisticated Countryman's Shekels.

At Barnet the green slopes on either side the station, and the hill between it and the town, presented the annual indescribable bedlam that reigns during the three days of its September fair. To the right of the road, says the Pall Mall Budget, the pastures were monopolized by the horse-dealers, and here the bulk of the chaffering crowd gathered. A more curious conglomeration of odd characters probably never comes together in this vicinity. All the gipsy horsemen in this end of the kingdom and an assortment of rustics and London sports such as one seldom sees outside of books; costumes that you would think no longer existed save in the prints in the windows of antiquary book dealers; the originals of every caricature of John Bull that ever was drawn and half of one's favorites of Dickens' creation here appeared as much alive as one could wish.

However, there is not much opportunity to study and stare, for it required the best of one's attention to escape being ridden down by the ostlers in their wild and reckless endeavors to get the utmost possible action out of their animals for the admiring eyes of possible purchasers. These rough-and-ready jockeys, riding bare-backed and with halters by way of bridles, seemed to possess charmed lives, being thrown and banged about in the most amazing fashion without seeming to be affected in the slightest degree by it, particularly in regard to their lungs, which for strength and effectiveness were some degrees beyond the unearthly steam whistle contrivances on the merry-go-round across the slope. What with the effort to keep from under the hoofs of the rearing, plunging, frightened horses, and dodging the novel and ferocious expletives indiscriminately thrown about, affairs were anything but dull.

"WILL YER 'AVE 'IM OR WON'T YER 'AVE 'IM?"

For uniqueness, variety and vigor Billingsgate is not in it at all as regards "English as she is spoke" at Barnet fair. For all the scant courtesy that passed between buyer and seller in their rough bartering, everyone seemed to be in the best of good humor and took tumbles and hard knocks and jostling no harder than the wasting of some breath in adjectives. There was not much interest manifested in the show of cattle, it being comparatively small and inferior in quality.

Scattered about were the usual number of fakirs and sharks, who resort to such places to gather their best harvests—gentlemen in loud checks and with hoarse voices, who mount boxes and announce that they are there for the amiable purpose of giving away gratis handfuls of coin and numbers of the best watches to the gaping crowd that is certain to surround them. Not a few of London's artful dodgers were on hand, as the large force of "bobbies" demonstrated. Both ways in the train an interesting little game of three-card monte was kept going, though no one seemed to bite save the evident pals of the sleek customers who dealt the cards.

A few ladies ventured over to have a look at the Welsh ponies, but the majority of their sex, who had been attracted from the town and country side, discreetly lingered in the neighborhood of the gingerbread side of the grounds. While this part of the circus was not as exciting, it was certainly as amusing. While Arry and Darby were disposing of their stock their families were amusing themselves among the booths and fried fish stands, the swings and merry-go-rounds, and while they rode not so furiously they did none the less gallantly. The weather was of the best, and buyers seemed plentiful, and as far as could be seen the fair was, as Bill Nye wrote to America of London Tower, "a success."

Honey in the Goddess' Head.

The St. Louis Republic says: Officer Musgrove, of the capitol police at Austin, Tex., lately ascended to the dome of the granite capitol at that city to inspect the swarm of bees which had settled in the nostrils of the statue of the goddess of liberty. The figure is seventeen feet high and surmounts the dome, which is over 300 feet high. Officer Musgrove says there are probably several barrels of honey in the bronze head of the goddess.

VERY OLD HOUSES.

Two Historical London Landmarks About to Be Demolished.

Many of the most interesting of the older parts of Fleet street have disappeared in the last few years; and now, says London Black and White, the doom has been sealed (by the city commissioners of sewers) of the ancient pair shown in our illustration. Even when the great fire of 1766 was stopped just short of No. 184—the house on the right—they were considered old. They who be learned in these matters aver that this house was almost certainly occupied by Henry Elsing, a baker, in OLD HOUSES IN FLEET STREET, LONDON.

1570, with "The Spread Eagle" for sign. The date of the other, No. 185, is put in the early years of the reign of Henry VIII., and even so far back as 1500. No. 60 was a baker's shop in 1570; but afterwards took to literature, and has ever since been devoted to books or music—or both, as now. The interior is particularly quaint and interesting, the balustrade of the staircase, the heavy oaken beams of the floors and the wainscoting being pretty much as they were three hundred years ago

If Women, who complain of languor, sleeplessness, loss of appetite, and a weak, weary feeling, would throw "tonics," "bitters" and other patent medicines to the dogs and try before each meal a tablespoonful of TUDOR'S Rye Whiskey, they would find no need for patent trash. A. R. TUDOR'S Rye Whiskey is warranted absolutely pure and ten years old. Sold everywhere.

"Seeing is Believing."

And a good lamp

must be simple; when it is not simple it is not good. Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. All metal, tough and seamless, and made in three pieces only, it is absolutely safe and unbreakable. Like Aladdin's of old, it is indeed a "wonderful lamp," for its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light and more cheerful than either.

Look for this stamp—THE ROCHESTER. If the lamp dealer has n't the genuine Rochester, and the style you want, send to us for our new illustrated catalogue, and we will send you a lamp safely by express—your choice of over 2,000 varieties from the Largest Lamp Store in the World.

Mrs. John Sherwood on the Making of Good Dinners.

Difficulties in the Position of the Young Hostess—Limits of the Cooking School—What Are the Prettiest Entrees—Cheerful and Refreshing Table Decorations.

[COPYRIGHT, 1891.]

It is chiefly men of intellect who hold good eating in honor. The head is not capable of a mental operation which disdains good eating, a thing which consists of a long sequence of appreciations, and many severe decisions of the judgment.—Brillat Savarin.

A good dinner and a pretty hostess, for there are terms on which beauty and beef can meet, much to the benefit of both, one wit, several good talkers and as many good listeners, or more of the latter, is said to be a combination which even our greatest statesmen do not despise.

Man wants good dinners. It is woman's province to provide them; but nature and education must make the conscientious diner.

It is to be feared that we are too much in a hurry to be truly conscientious diners. Our men have too many school tasks yet, like politics, money making, science, mental improvement, charities, psychical research, building railroads, steam monitors, colleges, and such like gauds, to devote themselves as they ought to the question of entrees and entremets.

But are we as conscientious as the gentleman in Punch who rebuked the giddy girl who would talk to him during dinner by saying: "Do you remember that you are in the house where they offer the best entrees in London?"

That was a man to cook for! He had his appropriate calm reserve of appreciation for the "supreme de volaille." He knew how to watch and wait for the sweetbreads and green peas. Not thrown away upon him was that last turn which makes the breast of the partridge become a delicate Vandyck brown. How profound and how respectful was he to that immortal art for which the great French cook died, a suicide for a belated turbot.

The young hostess to strike the juste milieu must travel, reflect and go to cooking school. She must buy and read a library of cooking books. And when all is done and said, she must realize that a cookery book is not a dinner. There are some natures which can absorb nothing from a cookery book. As Lady Galway said that she had "put all her wits into Bradshaw's railway guide and had never got them out again," so some amateur cook said that she had tested her recipes with the "cook book in one hand and the stove in the other," yet the wit had stayed away. All young housekeepers must go through this discipline, in a land where cooks are as yet scarce, of trying and failing, of trying and at length succeeding. She must go to "La Bella France" to learn how to make a soup, for instance. That is to say, she must study the best French authorities.

There would be no sense in telling a young American housekeeper to learn to make sauces, and to cook like a French chef, for it is a profession, requiring years of study and great natural taste and aptitude. A French chef commands a higher salary than a secretary of state or than a civil engineer. As well tell a young lady that she could suddenly be inspired with a knowledge of the art of war or of navigation. She would only perhaps learn to do very badly what they in ten years learn to do so well. She would say in her heart: "For my part I am surfeited with cookery. I cried something raw, if you please, for me. Something that has never been touched by hand, except the one that pulled it off the blooming tree or uprooted it from the honest ground. Let me be a Timon,—if you will, and eat green radishes and cabbages, or a Bean Brummel, asphyxiated with the consumption of a green pea, but no ragout, coletette compote creme or any hint of cooking till the remembrance of all that I have seen has faded and the smell of it has passed away!"

Stone broth does not go down with a hungry man, nor bad food however disguised with creamed sauces. A little learning is a dangerous thing, and if she attempts too much she will fail. But she can read and reflect, and get the general outlines of cultivated cookery. As to neat, cultivated cookery being necessarily extravagant, that is a mistake. A great heavy ill-considered dinner is no doubt costly. Almost all American housekeeping is wasteful in the extreme, but the modern varieties, which depend on the skill of the cook, and the arranging of the housekeeper, all these are the triumphs of the present age, and worthy of deep thought and consideration.

Let the young housekeeper remember that the pretty entrees made out of yesterday's roast chicken or turkey will be a great saving as well as a great luxury, and she will learn to make them.

For amongst a busy people like ourselves, from poorest to the richest, dinners are intended to be recreations and recreations of inestimable value. The delightful contrast which they offer to the labors of the day, the pleasant, innocent triumph they afford to the hostess, in which all may partake without jealousy, the holiday air of guests and of the dining room, which should be fresh, well aired, filled with flowers, be made bright with glass and silver—all this refreshes the tired man of affairs and invigorates every creature. As far as possible, the discussion of all disagreeable subjects should be kept from the dinner table.

All that is unpleasant lowers the pulse and retards the digestion. All that is cheerful invigorates the pulse and helps the human being to live a more brave and useful life. No one should bring an unbecoming grumpiness to the dinner table. Be grumpy next day if you choose (when the terrapin may have disagreed), but not at the feast. Bring the best bit of news and gossip (not scandal), the choicest critique of the last novel; the cream of your correspondence; be sympathetic, amiable and agreeable at a feast, else it were better you had stayed away. The last lesson of luxury is the advice to contribute of our very best to the dinners of our friends, while we form our own dinners on the plane of the highest luxury which we can afford and avoid the great "too much." Remember that in all countries the American lavish prodigality of feasting, the expensive garniture of hothouse flowers, is always spoken of as vulgar. How well it will be for us when our splendid array of fish, flesh and fowl shall have reached the benediction of good cookery, when we know how to serve it, not with barbaric magnificence and repletion, but with a delicate sense of fitness.

The first duty of a guest who is asked to one of these dinners is to be punctual. Who wishes to sit next Mr. Many Courses when he has been kept waiting for his dinner?

The hostess who knows how to invite her guests and to seat them afterwards, is a power in the state. She helps to refine, elevate and purify our great American conglomerate.

She has not the Englishman's Bible, the Peerage, to help her seat her guests; she must trust to her own intelligence to do that. Our great American conglomerate repels all idea of rank or the "precedence" idea, which is so well understood in England. Even those more choice intelligences which in older countries are put on glass pedestals are not so elevated here as to excite jealousy.

The highest grade of mediocrity is reached by this republican hostess. It is not always a safe rule at a dinner to trust to that.

Therefore the hostess has to contend with much that is puzzling in the seating of her guests.

But if she says to herself: "I will place those people near each other who are sympathetic," she will govern her festive board with the intelligence of Elizabeth and the generosity of Queen Margharita.

The number of guests invited is another very important item. Of course this depends on the size of the dining-room and the wealth of the giver. Ten is a good number for a small dinner and easily managed. One good waiter, at most two, get on easily. Twenty-four people often sit down at a modern dinner-table and are well served by a butler and two men, although some luxurious dinner givers have a man behind each chair. That, however, in this country, seems to savor of ostentation.

A dinner should be a good basis for a mutual understanding. They say that few great enterprises have been conducted without it. People are sure to like each other much better after dining together. It is better to go home from a dinner remembering how clever everybody was than to go home merely to wonder at the opulence that could compass such a pageant.

A dinner should put every one into his best talking condition. The quips and quirks of excited fancy should come gracefully, for society well arranged brings about the attrition of wits. If one is comfortable and well fed—not gorged—he is in his best condition.

The more civilized the world gets the more difficult it is to amuse it. It is the common complaint of the children of luxury that dinners are dull and society stupid.

How can the reformer make society more amusing and less tiresome?

The danger and trials and difficulties of dinner-giving are manifold.

First, whom shall we ask? Will they come? It is often the fate of a hostess in the busy season to invite forty people before she gets twelve. Having got the twelve she then has perhaps a few days before the dinner to receive the unwelcome news that Jones has a cold, Mrs. Brown has lost a relative and Miss Malcontent has gone to Washington. The dinner has to be reconstructed; deprived of its original intention it becomes a balloon which has lost ballast. It goes drifting about and there is no health in it, and no purpose. This is especially true also of those dinners which are conducted on debt-paying principles.

How many hard-worked rich men in America are bored to death by the gilded and overburdened splendor of their wives' dinners and those to which they are to go. They sit looking at their hands during two or three courses, poor dyspeptics who cannot eat. To relieve them, to bring them into communion with their next neighbor with whom they have nothing in common, what shall one do?

And everybody should go to a dinner intending to be agreeable.

"Eat at a dinner, some will be unblessed,
However good the viands, and well dressed,
They always come to table with a scowl,
Squint with a face of verjuice, o'er each dish,
Fault the poor flesh, and quarrel with the fish,
Curse cook, and wife, and, loathing, eat and growl."

Such men should never be asked twice, yet such were Dr. Johnson, and later on Abraham Hayward, invited out every night of their lives. It is a poor requital for hospitality to allow any personal ill-temper to interfere with the pleasure of the feast. Some hostesses send around the champagne early to unloosen the tongues, and this has generally a good effect if the party be dull. Excessive heat in a room is the most benumbing of all overweights. Let the hostess have plenty of oxygen to begin with.

Now, for a little informal dinner of eight, we might suggest that the hostess writes:

DEAR MRS. SULLIVAN:—Will you and Mr. Sullivan dine with us on Thursday at half past seven to meet Mr. and Mrs. Evarts quite informally? Ever yours truly,
MARY MONTGOMERY.

This accepted, which it should be in the first person cordially, as it is written, let us see what we would have for dinner:

Sherry. Soup—Sorrel (a l' essence de veau).
Lobsters, saute a la Bonneyfoy, Chablis.
Veal Cutlets, a la Zingara.
Fried Potatoes. Champagne.
Roast Red Head Ducks. Currant Jelly.
Claret. Curled Celery in glasses. Olives.
Cheese. Salad.
Frozen Pudding.
Grapes.
Coffee. Liquers.

Or, if you please, a brown soup, a whitefish or bass, boiled, a saddle of mutton, a pair of prairie chickens and salad.

A plate of broiled Mushrooms.
A sorbet of Maraschino.
Cheese, Ice Cream, Fruits.

It is not a bad lookout, is it?

Arrest of the Murderers of the Kester Brothers.

DISCOVERED BY AN ACCIDENT.

One of the Men's Wives, in Jealous Rage, Reveals the Story.

Great Rejoicing Over the Capture Among Farmers Who Had Feared for Their Lives—The Murder Was a Particularly Atrocious One—Killed the Inoffensive Old Men With Clubs to Obtain Their Money.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 12.—Henry Higgins and Joseph Eveland, together with their wives, were arrested yesterday afternoon, charged with the murder of the two old farmers named Kester, which occurred in 1886. The prisoners were lodged in jail. They were visited by reporters and others, but absolutely refused to talk of the murder or their arrest.

The arrests are considered as a good piece of detective work. There is great rejoicing over the arrests among farmers, who have long dreaded that they might meet a fate similar to the Kesters as long as the murderers were at large. All of the prisoners have bad reputations.

The murdered men were bachelor brothers, living in Sugar Loaf township, Luzerne County, and the crime was committed Oct. 15, 1886.

They worked a small farm, and were reported to be well-to-do. They seldom left their home, and the supposition was that they kept their money in the house.

The murderers made their way to the house during the night. It was raining very hard. The murderers broke in the back door. A desperate struggle then ensued.

The brothers fought for their lives, but they were finally overpowered. The house was ransacked from top to bottom, and whatever money was in the place the murderers got.

A neighboring farmer who had some business to transact with the Kesters called the next day. He ran away from the sight that met his gaze. The murderers had used clubs in their work.

The whole neighborhood was aroused. A posse scoured the mountains and valley for the murderers, but no trace of them could be found. The County Commissioners offered $1,000 reward and the relatives of the victims offered $1,000 more. Detectives took a hand in the case, but all were unsuccessful.

A year ago the Pinkerton men were put to work, and their labors have been rewarded. A woman told the story of the crime. She quarreled with one of the murderers, whose mistress she was, and subsequently fell into a trap laid by the detectives.

Remembering the "Martyred" Anarchists

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.—Cooper Union Hall was packed last night with Anarchists, who met to commemorate the execution of Parsons, Engel and others who were hanged for complicity in the Haymarket explosion at Chicago in 1878. Red flags and banners bearing inscriptions in English and German were prominently displayed. The memorial address was delivered in German by Robert Steiner, editor of the Chicago "Arbeiter Zeitung." A collection was taken up in behalf of the widows of the executed anarchists.

Cut His Throat With Broken Glass.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 12.—John C. Scott, a young medical student from Galveston, Texas, committed suicide in the German Hospital yesterday by cutting his throat with a broken piece of glass, while in a fit of temporary insanity. He went to the hospital for treatment. He fought desperately with one of the physicians who attempted to bind up his wounds, overturning all the furniture in the room and covering it with his blood.

Jail Birds Escape.

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 12.—At 1 o'clock in the morning the prisoners in the Morrow County Jail, at Mount Gilead, picked the lock and overpowering the sheriff made a break for liberty. Every prisoner escaped and none has so far been retaken. Among the number were the Rev. J. Gano, a wife murderer, and two burglars, who are thought to be dangerous crooks.

Pennsylvania's Official Vote.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 12.—The official vote of Pennsylvania is as follows: Auditor-General—Gregg, Rep., 411,548; Wright, Dem., 354,167; Hague, Pro., 18,150. State Treasurer—Morrison, Rep., 409,994; Tilden, Dem., 356,197; Drayton, Pro., 18,070. For Constitutional Convention, 172,771; against, 416,542.

Senate Investigation Over.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 12. — Yesterday afternoon a vote was taken on Senator Gobin's resolution, that the Senate is without jurisdiction in the cases of Auditor-General McCamant and State Treasurer Boyer, and it was agreed to by a strict party vote—Yeas, 28; nays, 19. The Senate then adjourned sine die.

Fortune for a Brick Inspector.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 12.—Mrs. Mary Ann Pitcher, the wife of Mr. Philip P. Pitcher, inspector of brick at a Belt Line shaft in this city, has just come into a fortune of $300,000 through the death of her father, Mr. Nathan Pumphrey, a well-known truck farmer of Anne Arundel County.

ANOTHER SUIT AGAINST HOEY.

Sandford Asks that the Mortgages on the Hollywood Cottages be Set Aside.

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 12.—Another suit was begun yesterday by Henry Sanford, president of the Adams Express Company, against John Hoey. In this case his wife, Josephine, and his son, Frederick Hoey, are also named as defendants. It is on a rule to show cause why an injunction should not be granted by the United States Circuit Court against Hoey, preventing him from collecting the dividends on the 10,000 shares of Southern Express Company stock that he holds, and from disposing of them and other securities he now holds.

The rule asks that the court decree that this stock has been the property of the Adams Express Company since Oct. 6, 1887, when it came into the possession of John Hoey, and that the settlement between the defendant and the company in December, 1888, be set aside. It also asks that all the mortgages on the Hollywood cottages, which were executed since the beginning of the suit here, be set aside, as well as other mortgages and assignments, and that they be revived and continued as liens against Hoey.

It further asks that Josephine Hoey be debarred from all dower rights in these mortgaged premises in which she made joint execution, and that the leases now held by Fred. C. Hoey be declared void, because they were made to defraud the company, and that Hoey be made to return to Adams Express Company borrowed money and securities. The court is also asked that Mrs. Josephine Hoey be enjoined from transferring any property.

Judge Green has issued an order that Hoey transfer no property, nor shall his wife.

FOUR KILLED.

Disastrous Wreck On the Illinois Central Near Jackson, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 12.—On the Illinois Central, 12 miles north of Jackson, at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, a south-bound passenger train and one north-bound came together in a valley, both running down hill at the rate of 40 miles an hour. Both engines were reversed, but without effect.

The engines were crushed to pieces. A smoking car was telescoped and freight cars were piled one on another.

Four men were instantly killed, one fatally wounded and several others injured.

A number of other passengers received cuts and bruises. Engineer Staley, of the passenger train, leaped from his engine.

The accident was caused by Engineer Hillsman of the freight train pulling out of Oakfield on the passenger train's time.

The Engineer Was Killed.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Nov. 12.—Train 8, a fast express, jumped the track at Adrian, between Hornellsville and Elmira, at 12:50 yesterday afternoon. Engineer James Stickney was killed, and three or four passengers were slightly injured. The cause of the accident is unknown.

The Sisters of Ruth.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Nov. 12.—A new and novel political organization is to be formed in Harrisburg by a number of prominent ladies of the Democratic belief, characterized by sincere affection for Mrs. Cleveland, great respect for Grover Cleveland and unbounded admiration for Baby Ruth. The society is to call it "The Sisters of Ruth," and its object will be to install that little lady in the White House nursery.

A Flag Defender Honored.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., Nov. 12.—Miss Emma Connor, the school teacher of Clark Township, near Ladoga, who had a flag torn down from her school-house by three men who had a grudge against her, and who put it back and defied the men to attempt to remove it again, was given a handsome silk flag in the Young Men's Christian Association building in this city last night. Many prominent men were present.

Eloped With a Former Lover.

WOODBURY, N. J., Nov. 12.—The wife of Frank Van Horn, of this place, has eloped with a former lover, Frank Howard of Philadelphia, who is a married man. She left her husband, telling him that she would never return. She is 28 years old and very pretty, and has been stage struck for a long time.

Has Changed His Belief.

BOSTON, Nov. 12.—Rev. Chas. Follen Lee, for many years connected with the Universalist Church, has withdrawn from the denomination and has been confirmed a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church. It is understood that he will be a candidate for holy orders in the Episcopal Church. Mr. Lee is a native of New York.

GALLANT RESCUERS

Stirring Incidents of the Storm in Great Britain.

THE BIENVENUE'S CREW SAVED

Taken Off the Wreck After Many Futile Attempts by the Life Savers.

The Twenty-Seven Men Entirely Exhausted by Their Struggle—Many Lives Lost and Tremendous Destruction Wrought—Indignation at the Apathy of a Life Saving Crew.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—The great storm, which threatens more disaster even than the one of three weeks ago, continues to-day, and from all parts of the country come reports of wrecks and casualties.

No braver struggle for life has ever been witnessed on this coast than that which resulted last night in the rescue of the members of the crew of the British ship Bienvenue of Glasgow, which was wrecked at Sandgate. Ever since the terrible situation of the crew became known the Hythe and Sandgate lifeboats had been struggling to reach the doomed vessel through the dangerous breakers, which beat with a fury that seemed to make the existence even of a lifeboat impossible.

While the crew clung to the masts the people on shore tried to make their encouraging cheers heard above the roar of the storm. About half-past four in the afternoon the Bienvenue began to break up, but the masts, with the unfortunates clinging in the rigging, still held together. About this time the multitude on the shore were thrilled by the spectacle of a seaman's daring and desperate strike for salvation for himself and his fellow-survivors.

The sailor, a brave, sturdy fellow, looking every inch a British seaman, fastened a line around his waist, and leaped into the waters that beat with fearful foam about the wreck. Cheer upon cheer went up from the watching thousands. The sailor struck out boldly for the shore. He was evidently a splendid swimmer, and for a few moments it seemed that the powerful sweep of his limbs would carry him through the boiling waves. But suddenly, a pursuing breaker burst upon him and he was buried from sight.

Breathless with anxiety, the crowd on shore and the remnant on the wreck awaited the man's appearance. Even the storm seemed to hush. Then came an agonized cry from hundreds of throats as the sailor appeared again, limp and lifeless, tossed on the crest and in the hollow of the waves. He was dead, and his fate seemed to foreshadow the doom of his late companions. Not long afterward the corpse and that of another bold swimmer from the wreck, was carried ashore.

The storm abated somewhat as darkness grew, and another attempt was made to launch the Sandgate lifeboat. Scores of volunteers assisted in the launching, and, amid shouts from thousands, that must have sent a hopeful echo across the stretch of foam to the weary hearts and numbed limbs on the wreck, the lifeboat started. It seemed doubtful for a while whether the task could be accomplished, but at length, after a tremendous struggle, the brave life-savers brought their boat up to the rigging of the Bienvenue, and rescued every one that remained. The poor fellows were almost unable to help themselves. They had clung mechanically, for hours to their perilous positions, and they were utterly exhausted.

It was 9:15 p. m. when the lifeboat touched the wreck, and the work of taking in the poor wretches was as perilous as that of getting to them. The reception on shore will be remembered for many a long day. Everybody rushed to cheer and shake the rescuers by the hand, and most generous attention was devoted to the victims of the storm. These were taken to Folkestone. Ten minutes after the Sandgate crew had succeeded in saving the Bienvenue people, the lower lifeboat arrived.

The bark T. P. Pfluger, from San Francisco for Bremen, was wrecked at Hastings. Her crew of seventeen and five passengers remained in the rigging five hours, while the life-savers sent rocket after rocket, with line attached, to the rescue. Several rockets fell short, but at length a line reached the vessel. Thousands were assembled on shore, their sympathies more aroused by seeing a woman's form among the shipwrecked. A tremendous cheer went up when it was seen that the line was fastened. The crew behaved nobly, and the woman was the first to be sent on the perilous journey to safety. Nearly half dead she was hauled ashore. Then came two boys, and after them the men, the captain coming last. He was given an ovation.

Two of the members of the Hythe lifesaving crew were drowned in the accident to that boat, while attempting to reach the Bienvenue early in the evening, others being rescued by the spectators. It appears that artillery was also used in the attempt to throw a line to that vessel. Chainshot was discharged from cannon at a safe height, a cord being attached to the shot, with the hope that the cord would be carried over and fall upon the wreck.

The number rescued from the Bienvenue is 27. The lost are Captain Meldill, of Liverpool; two apprentices, the steward and a seaman. The sea swept as high as the mizzen-top, so the struggle to hold on may be imagined. The Bienvenue was bound from London to Sydney.

At Dungeness, on the same dangerous shore, five vessels were stranded, one a foreign ship. The Dungeness lifeboat, in making an effort to reach the vessel, was overturned and five of the crew were drowned. Two men from the stranded ships lost their lives in trying to swim to the shore.

The schooner John Roberts of Portmadoc, Wales, went ashore in the afternoon near Brighton. Rockets failed to carry lines to the vessel. The crew were in the rigging and the vessel seemed about to break up. The Shoreham lifeboat did not engage a tug for the rescue, but was drawn to the scene by horses on the road, reaching the spot just five minutes after the vessel broke to pieces. The spectators were so angry at what they considered a lack of energy that might have proved fatal, that they made a hostile demonstration against the crew. Meantime the shipwrecked mariners had leaped into the sea and battled their way to the shore, with the assistance of volunteers.

CHAMPION LIAR IN JAIL.

Joe Mulhattan Locked Up on a Charge of Larceny in Pittsburg.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 12.—Joseph Mulhattan, well known the country over as "Orange Blossom," the writer of some of the most startling and marvelously untrue stories ever published, is behind the bars at Central Police Station, this city, charged with larceny.

Patrick O'Toole, a young railroad man, who met Mulhattan for the first time Tuesday night, makes the charge. O'Toole and Mulhattan met in a Grant street saloon and soon became the best of friends. They remained together until too late for O'Toole to catch his train. O'Toole readily accepted Mulhattan's invitation to share his room and bed.

Yesterday morning when O'Toole awoke Mulhattan was missing, also a roll of money from his pockets. O'Toole complained to the police and Mulhattan was soon under arrest but denies taking any money from his friend. The exact amount missing, however, was found in Mulhattan's possession. Before being locked up Mulhattan appealed to the inspector to be released and said: "I am the only 'Orange Blossom,' the greatest liar in the world."

"I do not think your reputation will aid you much now," replied the officer, as he turned the key in Muhattan's cell.

About two months ago Mulhattan was released from a Chicago inebriate asylum. He has been in Pittsburg about one week.

ALMY IS ABBOTT.

Examination of His Person Said to Have Established This.

MANCHESTER, N. H., Nov. 12.—As the result of an examination by Drs. Conn of Concord and Perkins of this city, of the person of Frank C. Almy, the Hanover murderer, it is positively asserted that the man is no other than George H. Abbott. The physicians found the scars which were left by wounds inflicted by Sheriff Berry when he shot Abbot, a few years ago, while the latter was evading arrest.

It is claimed that Almy deliberately broke his leg on the occasion of his recent trip to Woodsville. One of the officers who accompanied him is quoted as saying that he saw him place his sound foot against the foot of the injured leg and deliberately place so much pressure on it that he broke the splint and fractured the leg anew.

The officers are so afraid of Abbott that they have prevailed upon Attorney-General Barnard to request that a guard be placed over him night and day, beginning to-night, until his removal next Tuesday to Plymouth for trial.

Abbott is in prime physical condition, aside from his legs, and his mind is as active and sound as his body. He talks freely about the murder, but no inkling escapes him that he is anything or anybody but Frank C. Almy.

An Inhuman Murderer.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 12.—A special from Sylban's Mills, W. Va., says: While drinking together, two desperadoes named Newton Hobbs and Henry Beaver quarrelled over an insult offered by the latter to the former's daughter. Beaver attacked Hobbs with a butcher knife and Hobbs drew his revolver and shot his adversary through the heart. Hobbs compelled Beaver's family to cook and sleep in the room where the dead body lay 36 hours without being touched. Hobbs was arrested.

REVOLT SPREADING

Three More Garrisons Have Joined the Rebels.

THE DICTATOR'S PROMPT ACTION

He Sends Gunboats, Monitors and Troops to the Scene of the Outbreak.

The Governor of Rio Grande do Sul Calls Upon Fonseca for Aid—The Whole Province Occupied by the Insurgents—All Telegrams Suppressed in Rio Janeiro and the Residents of that City Kept in Ignorance of Events.

VALPARAISO, Chili, Nov. 12.—It is reported here that a number of members of the Brazilian Congress which Dictator Fonseca recently dissolved have sought an asylum in the different foreign legations in Rio Janeiro.

Uruguay has become alarmed at the state of affairs in Brazil and has massed troops along the frontier line of that country.

A dispatch from Buenos Ayres states that on the night of Nov. 9, a revolt was begun in the State of Rio Grande do Sul, and that it spread rapidly. At last accounts the greater part of the State was occupied by rebels.

General Fernandez and Santa Anna are said to be at the head of the revolutionists, and their ranks are reported to be receiving constant accessions.

The garrison at Yuguaron, it is said, have joined the insurgents, and the artillery has been placed at the disposal of the two generals who are in command.

The Dictator's Governor in Rio Grande do Sul, Castilo, deemed the revolt so serious that he asked the central government for reinforcements, representing his position as precarious.

In compliance with his request Dictator Fonseca at once sent four gunboats, three monitors and two transports, loaded with troops, to the scene of the uprising. The troops will be landed at the ports of Rio Grande do Sul, Pelotas and Sao Jose do Norte, at the mouth of the Bay of Patos.

Following upon the announcement of the garrison at Yuguaron going over to the insurgents comes word that two other garrisons have also joined the rebel forces in Rio Grande do Sul.

While all this is taking place the residents of Rio Janeiro seem to be kept in perfect ignorance of these stirring events. They believe that everything is peaceful in the Republic and that the discontent against Fonseca is not worth noticing.

Their ignorance is owing to the fact that the government is suppressing all telegrams that describe the true situation of affairs in the State of Rio Grande do Sul.

The chiefs of the revolution are said to be Visconde Pelotas, Baron Jijuk and Generals Astropillo and Fravares. Their object seems to be to form a national party in opposition to the Dictator. This party is to be made up of both liberals and conservatives.

FONSECA'S DETERMINATION.

He Will Fight Desperately and Sweep All Obstacles from His Path.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—It is stated that Fonseca would have little difficulty in establishing the new order of things were it not for the fact that he is a sick man. Some reports have it that the disease from which he is suffering is cancer, which, if true, would necessarily prevent him from taking the field in person should a resort to arms be necessary.

That he will take vigorous measures to suppress these latest revolts against his authority is not doubted by those who are acquainted with the personal characteristics of the man. He in no way lacks determination, and to gain his ends he will fight desperately to sweep all obstacles from his path.

The naval force of Brazil comprises 5,790 officers and men. There are five naval arsenals, one each at Rio Janeiro, Para, Pernambuco, Bahia and Ladario de Matto Grosso.

Will Hang Just the Same.

MONTPELIER, Vt., Nov. 12.—Sylvester H. Bell, the Fairfax wife murder, was brought before the Supreme Court yesterday on a writ of habeas corpus, because of an error in sentence by Judge Rowell at the September, 1890, term of the Franklin County Court. Judge Rowell sentenced him to six months' solitary confinement before execution, instead of three, as provided by law. Judge Taft of the Supreme Court decided that the sentence might be erroneous, but was not void or inoperative, and Bell will hang the first Friday in January, 1892.

Indian Admitted to the Bar.

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 12.—Hiram Chase, a full-blooded Indian of the Omaha tribe, was admitted to practice in the Federal Court yesterday. He was born and brought up in this State near Pender. He was educated at the Indian schools in the East and graduated last year from the law school of the University of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chase is the first Indian ever admitted to the practice of law in Nebraska.

COULDN'T STOP THE CAR.

The Brake Didn't Work, and It Went Into the River.

EASTON, Pa., Nov. 12.—About 10 p. m. two passengers upon an electric car had an experience which they are not likely to forget. In consequence of a slippery track and the failure of the brakes to work properly, it was found impossible to stop the car at the top of College Hill, and it was soon beyond the control of the motor-man.

Down the hill it plunged for fully a quarter of a mile, gaining headway in its progress, until at a curve it jumped the track and, at terrific speed, crashed through the iron railing and over the side of the Bushkill bridge, falling into the water 30 feet below. The car was a total wreck.

George Schug, the motor-man, remained at his post and sustained a fracture of the leg. The conductor had jumped off at the top of the hill and escaped without injury. Miss Sallie Mack and Prof. Edler, the latter the organist of Christ Lutheran Church, were badly bruised by the fall, but no bones were broken.

The accident was due to the lack of sand to enable the wheels to grip without sliding.

Coming Eclipse of the Moon.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 12.—A total eclipse of the moon will be observable from all parts of the United States Sunday evening, and will last an hour and a half. Inhabitants of the Eastern and Middle States will be especially favored by this eclipse. The moon at the time will be larger and fuller than any other time of the year. This eclipse will be the first of its kind to appear since 1874, and the next time it will be observable will be in 1909.

The Petition Was Dismissed.

BOSTON, Nov. 12.—The petition of the Mutual One Year Benefit Order for a writ of mandamus against Insurance Commissioner George S. Merrill was dismissed by Justice Holmes in the Supreme Court yesterday. The petition was brought by the Order to compel the Commissioner to affix his signature to an order on the State Treasurer for the sum of $40,000, in the hands of the latter as a part of the reserve fund of the Order. The Judge decides that the Commissioner's authority in the matter is discretionary.

Taking a Long Nap.

CORTLAND, N. Y., Nov. 12.—Miss Arnold, of Blodgett's Mills, has been in a deep sleep since Sunday, and all efforts to arouse her are futile. She has partaken of no nourishment since Sunday. The local physicians are greatly puzzled over the case and are at loss to account for it. Miss Arnold has symptoms of heart disease.

Struck by a Cyclone.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 12.—The new town of Kensington, 20 miles north of this city, was visited by a cyclone and heavy rain storm Tuesday night. A number of buildings in course of erection were wrecked.

FOURTH WARD.

For Councilman—W. F. Bartlett.
For Justice of the Peace—John King.
For Constable—Aaron Mattox.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—Bids for the erection of a building in New Market, are advertised for in another column.

—Anyone not provided with tickets for the harp concert can pay at the door of the Casino. Do not miss this musical feast, this evening.

—John A. Coleman, who will be remembered for his clever grotesque dancing with Thatcher's Minstrels last season, is with "Tuxedo" at Music Hall to-night.

—Joe English has been persuaded to stay at Reform Hall for the balance of the week and Sunday. He had another big house last night, and secured 27 signers.

—The electric-lamp will soon be the headlight used by wheelmen. This lamp will be connected with a storage battery beneath the axle of the front wheel, and will give light for ten hours.

—A meeting of special prayer for young men will be held in the Y. M. C. A. rooms this evening at 8 o'clock. Active members of the association, and all interested in young men, are urged to be present.

—"Tuxedo" comes to Music Hall, this evening, direct from a most successful four weeks' run at the Park Theater, New York. The New York press speaks very highly of the novelty and excellence of the performance.

—One of the prettiest of stage pictures is the minstrel scene in the second act of "Tuxedo", which comes to Music Hall this evening. It represents the lawn in front of Tuxedo Club-House, at Tuxedo Park, by moonlight.

—Rosanna Pullen, a female tramp, was sent to jail for 10 days by judge Codington last evening. Pat Cahill was fined $5, and John Pinny $15, for intoxication. An old man, a vagrant, was given one hour to get out of town.

—William Ciegler, the man who was injured by the cars at Grant avenue, yesterday noon, is getting along as well as could be expected, at the hospital. The staff physicians have removed the fragments of broken bone from his shattered elbow.

—Between the hours of six and seven, Monday evening, before the night watchman began his rounds, thieves entered the back grounds of the residence of Charles C. Cokefair and stripped the clothes lines of a valuable assortment of lingerie.

—This week's issue of The Wheel, the leading bicycling organ, does the creditable thing to the Hon. George Kyte, by acknowledging that it was in error in printing the Sayre letter, as the latter was "solely for political purposes". The retraction is made on information furnished by a member of the Plainfield Bicycle Club.—Elizabeth Journal.

A YOUNG WIFE CUTS HER THROAT.

In the Next Room Lay Her Little Baby Soundly Sleeping.

County physician Westcott of Scotch Plains was called on to attend, in his official capacity, a most distressing case, yesterday.

When Joseph Bensl returned Tuesday night at 10 o'clock to his home, 448 Broadway, Elizabeth, he saw laying on the floor in a pool of blood the dead body of his young wife. Her throat was cut from ear to ear. Bensl staggered to the wall and called for help. The lifeless body of the young wife was picked up, and under it was found a bloody razor, with which the deed had been committed.

The suicide was 21 years of age, and had been married a little over a year. In a room adjoining the one in which the young woman took her life, lay her little baby, thirteen days old, soundly sleeping. Since the birth of the child the mother had been a great sufferer. Her life had been a happy one, as her young husband was a hard-working employe at the Singer factory, and was soon to build a house. His prospects were of the bright st. Dr. Westcott gave a permit for the burial of the body. The suicide had calmly sat in a chair while she drew the razor across her throat, severing the jugular vein.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

The Hon. George Huy, of Great Fall, is visiting Mrs. S. A. Green of Park avenue.

Gospel services will be held at the First Baptist mission chapel, 34 East Third street, this evening at 7:45.

The steamer "Majestic", on which William Spangenberg of this city sailed enroute for Africa, met with such severe storms that it could not land at Queenstown but kept on direct to Liverpool.

"The Story that Was Killed" is the title of a tale of newspaper life contributed by Walter Irving Clarke of this city to the "Christmas Annual" of the New York Journalist now in course of preparation.

At the seventh annual meeting of the Unitarian conference of the Middle States and Canada which was convened yesterday morning in the new Lenox Avenue Unitarian church, 121st street and Lenox avenue, New York, the subject "Form and Organization—How Far They Are Necessary and Helpful to a Liberal Church?" were discussed by the Rev. Hobart Clark, of this city, the Rev. Edward Hale, and others.

The Rev. John Carey, the venerable colored clergyman whom everybody in Plainfield knew and respected, has gone to his rest. He passed away at the ripe age of 79 years, at his late residence, 92 Manning avenue, at 9 o'clock last night. Death was sudden. He complained in the morning of feeling ill, and Dr. J. W. Snowball, of Central avenue and Fifth street, was summoned. The illness was not thought to be serious, but in the evening took a fatal turn, and in spite of medical skill the good old preacher breathed his last.

Aaron M. Powell, of East Sixth street, editor of The Philanthropist, was the only representative from America at the recent triennial congress of the British, Continental and General Federation for the Abolition of State Regulation of Vice, in Brussels, Belgium. Mr. Powell was one of the chief speakers at the congress, and was chairman at several of its sessions. He was elected American representative on the executive committee of the federation. In the current issue of The Philanthropist Mr. Powell gives an exhaustive and interesting review of the proceedings.

All members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of this city will sincerely grieve to learn that their dear friend and sister, Mrs. Sarah J. C. Downs, of Ocean Grove, widow of the late Rev. Charles S. Downs, and president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of State, died, Tuesday night, at the home of her daughter, Mrs E. O. Quimby, at East Orange, of peritonitis. She went there about two weeks ago, just after the State convention at Salem, and was taken ill soon after. The funeral will take place at the Halsey Street M. E. church, tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. Homan Declines.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—I wish to thank the delegates to the citizens meeting, held Tuesday evening, for the nomination on their ticket in the third ward for the office of councilman.

While thanking them for the honor so bestowed, I must take the early opportunity of declining all such offices, feeling and knowing that my own business occupies all my time.

I hereby decline all such offices.

JAMES P. HOMAN.

Nov. 12, 1891.

The Result of Merit.

When anything stands a test of fifty years among a discriminating people like the Americans, it is pretty good evidence that there is merit somewhere. The value of a medicine is best proved by its continued use from year to year by the same persons and families, as well as by a steady increasing sale. Few, if any, medicines have met with such continued success and popularity as has marked the introduction and progress of BRANDRETH'S PILLS, which, after a trial of over fifty years, are conceded to be the safest and most effective purgative and blood purifier introduced to the public.

That this is the result of merit, and that BRANDRETH'S PILLS actually perform all that is claimed for them, is conclusively proved by the fact that those who regard them with the greatest favor are those who have used them the longest.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold in every drug and medicine store, either plain or sugar coated.

ANNEKE JANS AGAIN.

Some of the Heirs to the Great Estate in This City.

Many people may not be aware that there are some of the heirs to the great Anneke Jans Bogardus estate in this city. Anneke Jans Provost was a wealthy Hollander who resided in New York, and in 1790 leased to the corporation of Trinity church 36 acres of land, on part of which that church now stands, for the term of 99 years, at the end of which time it was to revert to his estate.

Twenty years or more ago lawyers cognizant of the facts and possibilities of the case began to hunt up the heirs of Bogardus, and make preparations for endeavoring to secure to them this property or its money value, which is estimated at about $200,000,000. A few years ago a meeting of the claimants was held in Indianapolis, but at that time no actual steps could be taken because the 99 years' lease had not yet expired. It is now proposed to hold another meeting of the heirs in Trenton in the near future, at which an effort will be made to put the claim to a legal test.

DIXON'S ICE-CREAM STORE CLOSED.

Business Has Been Poor and the Mortgagee Did Not Relish It.

George A. Dixon, the ice-cream manufacturer at 69 Market street, Newark, closed his doors yesterday. His liabilities are $6,000 and the stock and fixtures constitute his assets. He had a store in this city a few years ago that was run by a relative named Morrison. Lack of business capacity on the part of the latter resulted in the closing of the Plainfield store. The Newark Dixon is a nephew of Dixon, the ice-cream man of New York and Brooklyn, who was drowned some years ago.

The Newark business was started in 1874 by George's father, William Dixon, in a store on Broad street, opposite Military Park. A large business was done all through New Jersey and even beyond its borders. Five or six years ago Mr. Dixon was stricked with paralysis, and his wife took charge of the business. The name of the firm was then changed to M. Dixon & Co. In the beginning of this year the firm leased the store at 69 and 71 Market street and fitted it up handsomely as an ice-cream saloon and restaurant. Mrs. Dixon died suddenly before the removal in May. The son, George A. Dixon, succeeded to the control of the firm.

Soon after that Henry J. Canfield, of New York, foreclosed a mortgage of two years' standing, amounting to $4,056. He continued George A. Dixon in charge. The business kept running behind all the time and Canfield decided yesterday to close it.

There is $300 due for rent to the owner of the building, but he is protected by the improvements made on the store. George Dixon's father, William, is still alive, but he is in feeble health.

"Lots of Fun", Says Gen. Drake.

Gen. J. Madison Drake, of Elizabeth, has another libel suit on his hands.

He is publisher of the Elizabeth Daily Leader and sometimes is pretty severe in his criticisms of the board of aldermen. Lately he has jabbed his caustic pen into the fire committee of the council, of which alderman Flynn is a member.

Flynn is enraged, and as he is a candidate for re-nomination to-night and claims that the attacks are holding him up to the ridicule of his constituents, he is going, it is said, to have Gen. Drake arrested to-day on a charge of criminal libel. Editor Drake does not mind a libel suit as he has already had a dozen or so which only cost him $150 in fines. This he thinks cheap enough considering the fun and free advertising he got out of them.

Why Not Let Him Die?

(From The Paterson Guardian.)

A curious contest is in progress between the authorities of Union county and a man named Blazier, who is awaiting trial on a charge of murder. Since his commitment the prisoner has become hopelessly consumptive, and when, upon arraignment, he pleaded not guilty to the indictment, no time could be fixed for his trial on account of the man's feeble condition. He is now in the hospital, and every effort is being made to patch him up for judical purposes, but Blazier appears indifferent and evidently does not want to be hanged. He refuses to improve, and the doctors are nonplused.

Great Farming at Netherwood.

175½ bushels of ears, or 102 7-16 bushels of shelled corn, to the acre, is the yield in D. Hand's field at Netherwood. The rows are just 4 feet apart each way, and there are 35 hills in each shock, which makes 78 shocks in one acre, each of which produced 2½ bushels of ears. An average shock was selected and shelled. It yielded 42 quarts of good hard corn, and the total was the enormous yield stated above, besides an immense lot of pumpkins raised on the same ground.

No Central Whist Tournament This Year

It is very probable that the central New Jersey whist tournament, which has been of so much interest to the whist fraternity, will this year be abandoned. The Elizabeth athletic club have attempted to get the clubs, including the Plainfield Crescent League, together for the purpose of organizing, but the other clubs have not responded. A tournament between the Elizabeth athletic club and the New Jersey athletic club will be begun in a few days.

NO NEW TRIAL FOR JENNIE.

The Misguided Girl Must Go to Prison With Her Paramour.

In the Supreme Court, Tuesday, argument was made in the case of Samuel Beekman and Jennie Wiley, who were convicted of the killing of Beekman's child by ill-treatment. The defendants' counsel had carried the case up on exceptions and for a writ of error, on the grounds that Senator Marsh, who had prosecuted the case, could not legally fill the position of prosecutor.

The court dismissed the writ of certiorari, in spite of all counsel's efforts. Mr. Marsh argued the case for the dismissal of the writ, and won. Beekman and Jennie will therefore be re-sentenced Saturday morning.

He Stumped It in Ohio, and Will Now Speak Here.

T. T. C. Crain, city chamberlain of New York, a most finished and eloquent speaker, will talk to young men, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., in the Trinity Reformed church, next Sunday afternoon at 4:15. The following testimonial from Governor Campbell of Ohio, concerning Mr. Crain's ability as a speaker, will be interesting:

STATE OF OHIO EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
COLUMBUS, NOV. 5, 1891.

MY DEAR SIR:—I wish to embrace this early opportunity to write and thank you for the effective aid rendered by you upon the stump during the late campaign. Although our efforts were not crowned with success, we are nevertheless, just as grateful to you as we would be had the result been different.

JAMES E. CAMPBELL.

You should keep Salvation Oil on hand; it will cure all aches and pains. Price only 25 cents.

Humboldt, in his Cosmos, thought he showed up the world. Suppose he had lived to know Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. But he didn't, alas!

Found the Dead Man's Hat.

The hat of the dead man who was found in Spring Lake, on John I. Holly's farm, some weeks ago, has just been recovered. For the past few days the water in the lake has been lowered for the purpose of making repairs to the dam. The hat was found in the mud at the bottom of the lake, forty feet from the bridge where the corpse was hidden.

I WAS so much troubled with catarrh it seriously affected my voice. One bottle of Ely's Cream Balm did the work. My voice is fully restored.—S. F. Liepenet, A. M., pastor of the Olivet Baptist Church, Philadelphia, Pa.

Donation Party to Salvation Lasses.

A very pleasant testimonial of the esteem in which captain McIver and lieutenant Rowland, of the Salvation Army, are held, was given Tuesday evening, when the friends of the officers gave them a donation surprise party at the barracks. The gifts were very generous, and included coal, flour, and other supplies, to last the earnest young army workers through the winter.

—A special service of song will be held at the First Presbyterian church Sunday evening.

Reputable dealers throughout the length, breadth and depth of our glorious land fortunately keep the genuine Hires's Root beer in stock. Did you ever try it? It is easy to make, and ever so delicious—and it is such a safe drink.

—For the first time in the career of those two well-known black-face comedians, Geo. Thatcher and Hughey Dougherty, they appear in white-face in the first act of "Tuxedo", at Music Hall, to-night.

Sick Headache.

I have used Dr. Deane's Dyspepsia Pills for Headache, and since I have taken them I have been perfectly free from it. I can cheerfully and conscientiously recommend them to any and all who suffer from the same. MISS M E. LEES,
Stenographer and Typewriter,
Room 92, Evening Post Building, N. Y.

Funeral of the Mine Victims.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 12.—The funerals of the 11 victims of Sunday's mine disaster took place at Nanticoke yesterday. The whole town was in mourning, the mines and mills having shut down and business of all kinds being generally suspended. Religious services were held in all churches. Thousands of persons followed the funeral procession to the cemeteries.

NEW JERSEY JOTTINGS.

The third annual convention of New Jersey funeral directors began yesterday at Trenton.

George A. Dixon, restaurant keeper in Newark, made an assignment yesterday. His liabilities are stated at $6,000.

A brick laden barge sunk in the main channel of the Maurice River at Millville yesterday. Navigation is completely closed.

The president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the State of New Jersey, Mrs. S. J. C. Downs, is dead in East Orange.

William Carson, a longshoreman, was acquitted yesterday in the Hudson County Court of Oyer and Terminer of a charge of murdering his wife on May 14 last.

Doubtful.

"Um—yes, they're in society, but they're not really fashionable. They are too red and healthy."—Chicago Tribune.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

Big Mortgage Filed.

BOSTON, Nov. 12.—A mortgage of $6,000,000, covering the property of the Boston Cordage Company, the Standard Cordage Company and other cordage manufactories, was filed yesterday in the office of the Suffolk County Registry of Deeds. This is one proceeding in the trust process by which all the concerns are put under one management. The mortgage is given by the Security Corporation of New Jersey to the Manhattan Trust Company of New York.

WHAT WAS THE MATTER?

Read, and See for Yourself.

A popular society lady fainted at one of her receptions. What was the matter? The answer is only too plain. Women have delicate and high-strung nerves, and the many duties of life are too much strain and tension. The result is at first nervousness, then tired, languid feelings, finally ending in sleeplessness, utter weakness, shattered nerves and nervous prostration.

Beware of the first symptoms. If you become nervous, have palpitation, strange faint feelings, sinking at pit of stomach, weak and tired feelings, use at once Dr. Greene's Nervura, the great strengthener of nerves, brain and body It will give you refreshing sleep, make your nerves strong, invigorate your blood, regulate your bowels. This means perfect health! It is the greatest and best of remedies. Purely vegetable and harmless. Druggists sell it—$1.

 Dr. Greene's Nervura is a wonderful remedy for nervous prostration, and those terrible tired, weak feelings that make life a burden, almost too great to bear. I feel that I cannot say enough in its praise for what it has done for me. It gives one the most restful sleep, and in fact does all and more than all it claims to do. I wish every poor, tired woman on the face of the earth could be induced to try it for three days; they would then understand its value, and life would not seem so wearisome and undesirable. ETTA E. HAVEN,
41 Negers street, "Webster, Mass."

N. B. Dr. Greene, the successful specialist in curing all forms of nervous and chronic diseases, 35 W. 14th St., New York, can be consulted, free, personally, or by letter. Call or write him about your case, or send for symptom blank to fill out, and a letter fully explaining your disease, giving advice, etc., will be returned free. 9 15 1d ttha

TALES ABOUT TOWN.

GLEANINGS FROM THE PAGES OF A PRESS REPORTER'S NOTE-BOOK.

Pertinent Paragraphs About Matters of Public Interest—Breezy Little Stories of Happenings in Plainfield—Things Quaint, Prosaic, and Otherwise.

The condition of North and Park avenues, yesterday, was wretched, as is the case after every rainfall. The surface of the roadways was a river of liquid mud, and every equine footfall sent great spatters of the chocolate-colored fluid against the garments of unfortunate foot-passengers on the sidewalks. People who wanted to cross the street had to waste considerable time searching for a fording-place, and there was much grumbling because the ferry-boats were not running. Street commissioner Robert A. Meeker was for the time being spoken of as pilot-master, and the people wondered why he had not seen to it that the ferries were open for the day.

Mr. Meeker is a very well-meaning and energetic young man, and has done some highly satisfactory work since his appointment to the office of street commissioner, and his recent repairs on both of the thoroughfares mentioned are very much appreciated. When the mud has dried up, North and Park avenues are in good condition, and afford a hard and smooth rolling surface. But I am told by competent critics that there is no excuse for such a distressing condition as prevails on rainy days. All through New England the streets are macadamized just as Plainfield's are, with the exception that stone alone is used, making a solid, hard, level, and perfect roadbed, and one that drinks up the rain and remains dry and clean, instead of permitting the marsh-like ooze to gather on its surface. In Plainfield the mistake is made of "binding" the stone with sand and clay, when just as good a binding could be secured by a judicious use of the right proportions of the various sizes of crushed stone. It does seem a useless waste of labor to mix in with the stone a mass of sand and clay that will only be squeezed to the surface again in the form of paste at every rain and then scooped up by the laborers and carted away to the dumps.

The propensity of some of the "hired help" of the town to apply, with charming frequency, to the head of the household, for a day off for a much-needed rest, is one of the disagreeable features of housekeeping. One venerable colored man, of easy-going habits, stayed away so long, from his employer's, recently, that he suddenly found himself out of a job. The prospects of nothing to do, and winter coming on, did not alarm him. When told that he was discharged, he merely grinned serenely, twirled his hat, and remarked "It's a fine day, boss". It was a fine day. It was one of those lazy Indian summer mornings when even a young man's fancy turns to thoughts of idleness. The old darkey was not proof against the wiles of the delightful weather.

He suddenly remembered that there was a picnic gathering, exclusively for members of his race, at Florida Grove. He was fond of fishing, and his eyes sparkled at the thought of the prospective sport. Besides, all the dusky belles of the vicinity would be there, and the gray-wooled sinner did love the company of gay and winsome damsels.

The fact that he had not a cent in his pocket did not for one moment daunt his cheerful spirits. He was fertile in his invention, his heart was giddy, and his mind ingenious.

With a look of truthful innocence in his eyes, and a most woe-begone expression on his grief-distorted features, he applied to a well-known business man of philantropic tendencies, for whom he had done odd bits of work.

"Boss,"—he said—"I'se in a heap ob trouble. My wife died las' night, an' I'se been so devoted to her bedside endurin' her sickness dat I'se neglected my work, an' lost my job."

"You poor fellow!"—murmured the soft-hearted merchant, compassionately.

"Yes, boss;"—blubbered the fraudulent widower—"an' 'cause all de money's gone for de doctor's bills I don't fer to see how I'se gwine t' git de two dollar."

"What two dollars?"—asked the man of business.

"Why, boss, y' see de undertaker knows I'se out o' work, an' he ses he won't go ahead wid de frooneral onless I guv him de two dollar fust t' bind de job."

The listener's sympathies were too deeply aroused to permit him to appreciate the vast humor of such a yarn, and he readily produced a banknote. The bereaved negro loudly bewailed the necessity of receiving aid from his benefactor, and took the money with reluctance in his face and alacrity in his heart.

It is presumed that he was similarly successful in other applications, for at the picnic at Florida Grove he lavished greenbacks right and left, from a plethoric wallet, among an admiring crowd.

When the old man's wife heard of her husband's bit of fiction she was righteously indignant.

"I'll teach Abs'l'm!"—she cried, wrathfully.—"I'll teach Abs'l'm who's dead an' who's alive. When he's sick wid de rhumatiz dey ain't nuffin too good f'r 'im, but I hev t' spen' all my time nussin' his wurvless carcass. Dat's all de t'anks I gets! Wants two dollar fur my froonral, duz he? Huh!—I'll teach 'im whever des any 'gility lef in de ole 'ooman or not. Specs he'll want more'n two dollar fur stickin' plaster an' poultices 'fore I get froo wiv him. You heah me!"

"Abs'l'm" received his punishment meekly, and stayed indoors nearly two weeks to nurse his bruised and battered bones. He has since professed penitence, and become his bland and chipper self again, and Dinah is duly thankful over his contrite heart, and prays that heaven may overlook his little transgression.

Those husbands who are separated from their wives so often during the year, may take a lesson from an incident in the life of a late resident of the borough who recently passed away. The deceased was 58 years of age. During his married life of 30 years he and his wife had never been parted for a single night, and had never once been disturbed by the cares of "moving". The result was that no roof-tree in Plainfield sheltered two more loving hearts or shielded two more happy lives.

The cheapness of the rate at which the Plainfield Water Supply company agrees to furnish that indispensible gaseous mixture, H_2O, is viewed with alarm by water-works men all over the country. They fear that the rate will be given widespread quotation, to the great injury of their business.

The Water Supply people say that the rate at which they offer water—25 cents for each 1,000 gallons—is equivalent to 1 cent a barrel, and they argue that the most industrious hand-pumper in town won't work so cheap as that.

The highest water-rate the Paragrapher has yet heard of in Jersey is that paid by two Plainfield young men during a recent business stay in Newark. People were dying all around them, from drinking the waters of the polluted Passaic, and to save their own lives they paid a milkman 10 cents a gallon for pure spring water brought to them fresh every morning.

While on the water question it may not be out of the way to comment on the action of the borough of North Plainfield in the matter.

Some time ago a Plainfield contractor who was anxious to get a water-works foothold in the borough so that he could the more easily secure the Plainfield franchise, made the borough a most liberal offer. He promised a complete fire-hydrant service absolutely free, free public drinking fountains, and many other advantages. When he had told them of all the generous things he was going to do for the borough, the council merely said, in a dissatisfied way: "Is that the best you can do!" Without a word the contractor gathered up his papers and left the council chamber. He felt that his magnanimity was being wasted on people too stupid to appreciate or even know a good thing when they had it. He was a reputable man, a man of his word, and had meant business. The greedy councilmen over-reached themselves, and drove away a juicy plum.

To-day the borough finds itself glad to sign a contract for fire-hydrant service that will cost it $1,050 a year.

NATHANIEL FAIRFIELD.

The Anniversary of a Great Event.

Sixty years ago to-day a railway train was propelled in this State for the first time by the power of steam. The anniversary of this achievement is being celebrated with appropriate ceremonies at Bordentown by the Pennsylvania Railroad company, which is this afternoon dedicating a monument erected to mark the first piece of track laid between New York city and Philadelphia. Both were comparatively small cities at that time, New York being, then as now, the metropolis, with a population of 202,589, and Philadelphia second with 80,458 persons. The year, 1831, was marked by a great increase in railroad construction. Stephenson's "Rocket" had electrified the world by its wonderful achievement in 1830, and the men of brains and capital in this country were not slow to grasp and apply the new idea. The Stephenson locomotive was not the first to make use of steam in propulsion over iron tracks, but it was the first to accomplish anything in the way of providing its own steam, and to draw a load of passengers at an excellent rate of speed. In that year, and as a result of Stephenson's efforts, twenty-three miles of railroad were in operation, in this country, and in the following year seventy-two miles were added. To-day the railway mileage of the United States is over 150,000. It is not necessary to describe the marvellous growth of the railroad, and the position it occupies as a factor in modern life. There are men living to-day who remember when the events which will be celebrated at Bordentown to-day were mere experiments in the development of an institution which is to-day the wonder and the marvel of the Nineteenth century. It is to the credit of this State—comments the Newark Advertiser—that one of the first railroad charters granted in this country was conferred by the State of New Jersey for the erection of a railroad within its borders.

SMOKE IS ITS VICTIM.

A Device to Consume Smoke and Save Fuel on Engines.

It Is the Invention of an Old Locomotive Engineer and Promises to Be Successful—How the Results Are Attained.

A noteworthy invention is the smoke consumer patented by A. R. Cavner and placed in practical operation by a Chicago railway, says the Tribune of that city.

The prime objects secured by the Cavner device are greater economy in the consumption of fuel, the entire abolition of the smoke nuisance, the reduction of the back pressure on pistons to the lowest minimum, reducing the vibration on flues, and making the locomotive available for an incandescent electric-lighting system.

That portion of the locomotive known as the extension front, extending from the flue sheet to the cast front door, is divided into two compartments by a light vertical partition crossing entirely across the front just forward of the exhaust pipe, thus confining all the heated gases, exhaust steam, etc., in the compartment next to the flue sheet, and having direct communication to the fire

box. No change is made in this compartment except that the tips on the nozzle of the exhaust pipe are taken out. The exhaust opening is left full open to the area of opening in the saddle casting, the stack and saddle are taken off, and the stack opening increased to twenty inches in diameter. There is placed over the exhaust and lifting pipe, twelve inches at the bottom and end, tapering to fifteen at the top and forty inches long, a sheet-iron pipe. This pipe, twenty inches in diameter, sets over that resting on top of the extension front. Over this sets the ordinary dome casting. This casting is perforated with 2,000 seven-sixteenths inch holes extending half around the front side of the casing. On the inside of the twenty-inch pipe there is coiled fifty-two feet of two-inch brass pipe.

The pump or injector forces the water through the coil of pipe from the top down through the center and out at the side of the exterior front through the check into the boiler. This water passing from the injector to the through brass pipes surrounded with the exhaust steam and hot gases, takes up the units of heat that would be otherwise wasted and the water goes into the boiler above boiling point, or about 220 degrees of heat.

The forward compartment of the extension front is used as a receptacle for the mechanism by which the draught is secured and power furnished to run the dynamo. In this compartment is located a pressure blower in such position as to admit of free access to the flue sheet. The pressure blower is connected by direct friction to a small sixteen-hand power rotary engine, and is also connected direct by an air pipe extending from the front end of the locomotive to the ash pan. The ash pan and dumpers having asbestos joints and shutting firmly make the ash pan air tight. The air from the fan, drawn down through the perforations, is heated to a high temperature by exhaust steam and heated gases. The result is by this method a fire is fanned by a constant blast of pure heat oxygen of seven-ounce pressure and this air is made hot by the heat that would be otherwise wasted. A portion of this hot air is conducted in pipes from the main air pipe through the ash pan, up through the fuel and is forced into the flame from the back of the fire-box toward the flue-sheet. Circling the fire-box door are innumerable small holes or air jets. This hot oxygen uniting with carbon forms a gas, completes the combustion, and prevents all smoke whether the engine is working or shut off, whether there is a light or heavy fire, and prevents gases from passing out the fire-box door. By means of this air pipe the fire-box is converted into a gas retort, consuming those elements of heat and carbonic oxide gas that would otherwise pass off in smoke.

Danger of Indiscriminate Drugging.

A contributor to the Medical Journal, New York, relates the following case of antipyrine poisoning, as it seems to him quite unique and indicates the recklessness of some of our less conscientious druggists: The patient, a woman of about thirty years of age, went to a drug store and, complaining of a headache, asked the clerk for something to cure what he pronounced the grip. He sold her a powder and told her to take half of it on her return home and, after waiting a half hour, to take the remainder. In about fifteen minutes after taking the first dose she became weak and fell on the sofa in a comatose condition. Her mouth, eyes and nose were cyanotic, her pulse could not be felt and her heart seemed to have ceased beating; in fact for a short time she appeared dead. When she did come to her prostration was intense and an eruption of white blotches resembling hives appeared on her body, only they were much larger, one blotch extending down the thigh to the knee. The after effects persisted for two months, during which time she suffered much.

A Diminutive Infant.

There is a baby in Chester, Pa., whose diminutive size may be inferred from the fact that its arms are about the thickness of an ordinary lead pencil. Nevertheless, it is thriving and might in time become president of the United States were it not of the wrong sex.

"They're a bright lot of fellows," said the salesman. "We get our best ideas from them."

Now whom do you suppose he meant? You could never guess. I'll give you a little pointer as the riddle is so hard; the salesman presides over the necktie department of our most fashionable haberdashery. But even with that tip you won't be able to solve the problem. I'll tell you; he referred to the dudes. Fancy getting an idea from a dude! It is like asking alms from Lazarus, one would say. But the salesman thought differently.

"Those fellows are not the brainless idiots they're supposed to be," he continued. "Perhaps it's the fault of those who apply the term wrongly; and yet I'll bet that if you'd seen the young fellow who was in here a minute ago you'd have unhesitatingly pronounced him a dude of the first water."

"I did see him," said I; "and I'd have been willing to lay odds that if an idea struck him it would fracture his skull; that is if it hit him anywhere in that region."

"That's where you're mistaken," replied the salesman. "That young man has been all over the world, and though I don't suppose he knows much about the forms of government or the industrial conditions existing in various parts of Europe, he has a vast fund of information on the subject which most interested him. He can tell you down to the smallest detail how the fashionable men of every European capital dress. When he or any other man of the class talks to me, I listen with both ears, and many an idea embodied in the goods you see in the window has come from such a conversation. Such a man knows not only what is correct in dress, but he knows the reason which underlies the style, and there always is a reason if one can get down to it. No; don't cherish the idea that your true man of fashion is an idiot, he's an authority on one subject at least."

"But the fellow who just went out of the store was over-dressed. How do you account for that?"

"He wasn't if you'll pardon the contradiction. He had a certain air of weakness and effeminacy which made you think so. It gave his clothes an undue prominence which not even his care is able to avoid. But that's his misfortune, not his fault. It is due to the fact that his mother was given over to frivolity, and his father to the amassing of the immense fortune which his son has now the more agreeable and less wearing task of spending."

The salesman was right; the howling swell has more sense than he is credited with. His brains have been maligned by the paragraphers because the use to which the brains were put seemed ridiculous. The follies of the fashionable young man have been exaggerated, but nobody ever exaggerated the care which he bestows upon dress. It takes a fine, discriminating mind to follow the course of fashion. Take, for instance, the matter of boutonnieres. For a considerable time—as time goes in such matters—the boutonniere has been growing larger. The change is especially notable this fall, perhaps because coats are cut with larger lapels. But on the whole the growth of the boutonniere has been very gradual. Think of the brain work required of the man who must always know just how many violets or sprays of the lily of the valley he must wear. He perceives the tendency to increase the size of the bouquet. He obeys that mysterious dictum, but he must interpret it carefully. He must not fall behind! He must not get conspicuously in advance. If the average man had to remember, every day, whether he should wear 79 or 80 violets, whether thirteen sprays of lily of the valley or only an even dozen was the correct thing, he would soon be on the verge of paresis.

It is in the studying of flowers to a lady that a gentleman must exercise the most guarded taste. And he must, of course, consult not only his own, but hers. It is a delicate compliment to a lady to find out her favorite flowers and send them to her at the proper time. The custom is ever increasing. Speaking not for those who are familiar with this courtesy, but for those who are just beginning to feel the importance of such matters, I will say, do not send bouquets or baskets of flowers made up of many different flowers carefully arranged. Send a simple bunch tied with a ribbon, or, better, a box of loose flowers. Ladies pride themselves on their own taste in the arrangement of them, and prefer it to a florist's. If you do not know her preference send lilies of the valley, violets or large roses. When invited to a dinner or a reception, or to a box of the theater, if you are unable to be present you may send flowers.

Don't send too many. There's a great deal of nonsense in print about extravagance in flowers on the part of howling swells of this metropolis. Don't attempt to imitate something which does not exist. Ten dollars is enough to pay for flowers for such occasions as I have spoken of, or for those you will send when you have invited a lady to some social gathering or place of entertainment. The richest men in the city do not spend over twenty-five dollars in such gifts. I don't know whether it is necessary to tell you not to bring flowers but to send them. They should always arrive just in time; never too late or too early.

If you are engaged it is the proper thing to send flowers regularly. Don't rush into extravagance and order your florist to send them to her every day. Make it every other day, and have him select a few very fine posies rather than a larger number at the expense of the quality. If he says he can't do the proper thing for ten dollars, kill him; or, better, get out of paying the bill. Some very nice fellows in New York have thought that in such emergencies, twice a week was often enough to send flowers. Don't try to attend to it yourself. Let your florist do it regularly if you really desire to increase the solidity of the bond. It's money in his pocket and he'll remember it; but it's money out of yours, and you'll forget it on slight provocation.

Suppose we step out of the circle of society and consider the drama for a moment. Perhaps the reader is tempted to show his appreciation of special talent or personal attractiveness on the stage by sending a floral offering to be hoisted over the footlights, if the rules of the theater permit, or to enter by way of the stage door, if that is the order. To any young man who is moved to waste his patrimony in this manner I would say, in a general way, don't. But there are exceuses, and in case they seem to you valid, don't be frightened by the apparent magnificence of the offerings you have seen made by others. They do not cost half as much as you think. If you pay more than $20 for such a purpose, you are wasting your money. Probably you are in any case; but let it pass. I assure you that the great Patti herself would not consider a sacrifice of the value of $20 to be any slight upon her fame.

Send the flowers in a box if you think the propriety of that course will be appreciated; and if you are pretty certain it won't, if the gift will gain in value by being seen of men, tip the wink to your florist and tell him to make the most magnificent thing he can devise, but to let you off easy on the bill. If he has any soul he will get up an impressive mass at a cost of not more than a pair of ten spots. The audience won't know the difference, and it's a hundred to one that the recipient won't either.

To stimulate the imagination of the young man who would like to give a token of his regard and a good "ad." at the same time, I will mention two such offerings which were held to be notable even in New York. One was the celebrated balloon of roses presented by Howell Osborne to Fay Templeton in memory of her triumphs in "Evangeline." The other was New York's last tribute to Carmencita; a basket covered with white and yellow roses, and bearing an enormous C for a handle. When the graceful daughter of Spain essayed to lift the basket by the handle a concealed trap opened in the cover and two doves, harnessed with white and yellow ribbons, flew out.

I can't help saying a word more to correct the popular error about the costliness of flowers. The expense of bouquets at weddings has been thought to figure seriously in the problem whether marriage is becoming unpopular. Let's see how the facts stand. The bill may be something like this: Boutonnieres for six ushers, two white roses or one very handsome rose, with a spray of lily of the valley, $1 each, total, $6; superior quality of the same thing for best man. $1.25; bridesmaids, four, at $10 to $15 apiece, say $50; bridal bouquet, $50; "dem'd total," as Mantilini would say, $107.25. To a man of any means this should seem like a very small addition to the terrors of matrimony.

ALBERT EDWARD TYRRELL.

Made a Place for Herself.

Miss Grace Bates, of California, a granddaughter of Judson, one of the richest of the Pacific coast millionaires, was unfortunate enough a few years ago to lose by bad investments the large property which had come to her as her portion of the family estate. Brought up in luxury, Miss Bates had apparently no way of earning a livelihood. The idea occurred to her to turn her attention to decorative art. She had always had a good idea of form and color and consequently she reasoned that as a florist's designer she might be tolerably certain of a reasonable degree of success. Accordingly she applied to Mrs. Leland Stanford for permission to decorate her dining-room table on a certain grand occasion. So successful was the first attempt that Miss Bates has since found all that she could do in the line of trimming houses for grand entertainments.

WAR SHIPS FOR VALPARAISO.

There Will Be Nine of Them—Admiral Gherardi Will Command.

A Concentration That Will Amount to a Naval Demonstration—The Selection of Gherardi Regarded as Significant—He is the Principal Diplomat Among Officers of the Navy.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—It is quite evident that the President and Secretary Blaine do not propose to let Chili long remain in ignorance of the fact that the United States has made substantial progress in the building of a navy. The news leaked out yesterday that there is to be a change in the assignments of a number of vessels, which will result in the concentration of such a fleet of war ships in the harbor of Valparaiso as to amount to a naval demonstration.

Orders have been sent to Rear Admiral Gherardi, now on board his flagship, the Philadelphia, at St. Thomas, to proceed at once to Valparaiso and assume command of the South Pacific station. Rear-Admiral Brown, now in command of that station, will be detached and placed on waiting orders. Acting Rear Admiral John G. Walker will retain his flagship, the Chicago, and relieve Admiral Gherardi in command of the North Atlantic station.

This fleet, however, will be cut down from the imposing proportions of the White Squadron to the Chicago and the old Kearsarge. Rear-Admiral A. E. K. Benham will be sent on board the Newark to take command of the South Atlantic station, with headquarters at Rio de Janeiro. The Atlanta, Concord and Bennington are all to sail on Sunday or Monday for Chilian waters. The Charleston has already been ordered to return from the Asiatic station to the South Pacific.

The order will result in placing under the command of Admiral Gherardi at Valparaiso a fleet composed of the Philadelphia (flagship), San Francisco, Charleston, Boston, Baltimore (now already at Valparaiso), Atlanta, Yorktown, Concord and Bennington, while the Newark will be within comparatively easy call at Rio. This concentration of warships will bring together a formidable array of men.

The Philadelphia carries twelve guns in her main battery, the Baltimore ten, the San Francisco twelve, the Charleston eight, the Boston eight, the Atlanta eight, the Yorktown six, the Concord six, the Bennington six. These guns are all new six and eight inch rifled steel breech loaders, and each ship carries a powerful second battery of rapid firing and machine guns. Each ship's company will average 300 or more men.

Officials of both State and Navy departments deprecate placing any warlike meaning upon this demonstration, and insist that there is no special significance in the concentration of a powerful fleet in South American waters. The selection of Admiral Gherardi to command the South Pacific squadron is sure to be regarded as significant. Gherardi is known as the principal diplomat among the officers of the navy, and it will be remembered that he, in a sense, superseded Minister Douglass in the futile negotiations with Hayti for the possession of Mole St. Nicholas as a coaling station.

Pennsylvania Farmers' Alliance.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Nov. 13.—The State Farmers' Alliance Convention yesterday adopted resolutions endorsing the Ocala platform, demanding government supervision of railroad and telegraph lines, the election of President, Vice-President and United States Senators by direct vote of the people, making the issuing of free passes a criminal offence, compelling oleomargarine to be sold for what it really is, prohibition of alien ownership of land, demanding equal taxation on all kinds of property, prohibiting the dealing in stocks and grains on futures, to prevent the adulteration of food products. Adjourned to meet in Williamsport next year.

Captain and Boat Missing.

NORWALK, Conn., Nov. 13.—Captain Greenwood, of the steam barge Hebe, of New York city, whose vessel sank at Westport Harbor two weeks ago, and who was placed under bonds to appear for trial before the United States Commissioner, charged with violating the law relating to the employment of licensed engineers and pilots, and for running his barge in forbidden waters, did not appear when his name was called for trial. Both captain and boat are missing, their whereabouts being unknown.

Kidnapped Girl Home Again.

SCRANTON, Pa., Nov. 13.—Sixteen years ago Christiana Rentchler was kidnapped from this place by Anna Drummond, an old herb doctor. The child was taken to California, and not knowing where her home had been settled down there and married Charles Dehring. A Scranton miner chanced to meet her and she learned of her home and is now here.

The Explosion Was Accidental.

LITTLE HOPE OF CAPTURE.

The St. Paul Train Robbers Will Doubtless Escape—$10,000 Taken.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Nov. 13.—But little hope is entertained of catching the men who so daringly held up the express from Chicago, near the West Junction station, on the St. Paul railroad, early yesterday morning. The men separated after dividing the booty.

The robbery was one of the most clever of recent years.

The train had been out of the Junction (twenty-three miles south of this place) about half a mile, when the fireman, Edward Averill, who was putting some coal into the furnace, was startled to hear a noise behind him. He turned around and found two heavily masked men clambering over the engine tender.

Both levelled their double barrelled muskets at the fireman and engineer, "Bill" McKay, with the injunction:

"Don't move an inch till we tell you to or we will blow the tops of your heads off."

Engineer McKay was directed to run the train to within a point about one mile from Western Union Junction. Here the engineer was commanded to stop.

The door of the express car, which was the car immediately to the rear of the tender, is made of thick, stout wood and was securely fastened. The robbers had prepared for this and had provided a dynamite bomb, which was hurled against the door with telling effect.

The whole end of the car was wrecked, and it is a wonder that the messengers escaped with their lives. The robbers then removed the safes and took all the packages they thought likely to contain money. Then the train was allowed to go ahead. The passengers were not molested.

It was at first thought that the loss would be very great, but now it is learned that the two safes thrown from the train were not opened. They were provided with combination locks, and one was a through safe for Milwaukee and the other for Minneapolis. They were picked up by a freight train and carried toward Chicago, until a passenger train was met, to which they were transferred and brought to this city. The only plunder the robbers secured was contained in what is known as the messenger's private safe, of which he carried the key.

In this he deposits the money packages picked up at stations along the road and at times has a few with him when he leaves Chicago. There are often times when this safe come through to Milwaukee empty, as the midnight train only stops three times between the two cities. There was a light fall of snow at Western Union Junction in the night, in the light covering of which was discovered the tracks of six men leading away from the scene of the robbery. Two were going toward Racine, two towards Milwaukee and two towards Chicago. This shows the robbers separated after completing their job and dividing the booty they secured.

It is authoratively stated that the amount of money stolen will figure $10,000.

Sam Small Pummelled.

ATLANTA, Ga., Nov. 13.—Sam Small, the noted evangelist, was attacked yesterday and severely beaten by Tom Minor, an Atlanta saloon-keeper. The liquor man's fists were wielded with great force and the sensational preacher came out of the encounter with a split lip and a badly bruised nose. Last Sunday the reverend gentleman delivered an address to a large crowd at the Prohibition Hall in Atlanta, and after attacking the character of several whiskey dealers he charged Tom Minor with having deserted his family, leaving them to starve.

Comstock at Work in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 12.—Anthony Comstock of New York city, the agent for the Society for the Suppression of Vice, yesterday arrested Albert Reid Calhoun, a young student at the College of Pharmacy, on the charge of sending medicine for unlawful purposes through the United States mails. Calhoun has been doing business as manager of the Papau Medicine Company. He did not deny his guilt and was held in $1,500 bail for his appearance at the next term of the United States Court.

Work Suspended for Lack of Money.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Nov. 12.—Work has been suspended on the government breakwater here for lack of money. The workmen have received no pay since Sept. 30, and are clamoring for their wages. Major Stickney, the engineer in charge of the work, says that his requisition is lying in the Treasury Department unattended to. He says there is considerable of the appropriation for the Buffalo harbor left for use and does not understand why it is not forwarded.

Yellow Fever Scare.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 13.—The steamship Alliance, of the United States and Brazil steamship Company, arrived at her dock in Brooklyn yesterday. During the voyage she lost her physician and three of her crew, who died from what some of the sailors believed was yellow fever. The ship was allowed to pass quarantine, and the sailor who nursed the sick man went ashore. There is considerable fear that the fever may secure a foothold here.

TRIED TO KILL HIM

A Wife Who Wanted to be Rid of Her Husband

POISONED HIM BY DEGREES.

She Had His Life Insured and Wanted to Marry Again.

The Drugs Obtained from a Woman in New York, Who Also Appears to be in the Plot—She Confessed to the Crime When She Thought She Was Dying—A Farmer Implicated.

TROY, N. Y., Nov. 13.—The police here have just begun an investigation of a remarkable case. In 1885 Charles Fietz, an employe in Gurley's Mathematical Instrument Works, married Christina Janeson, a Dane, who was employed as a domestic at Sinsheimer & Glock's Hotel Decho. Her reputation was not of the best, and it did not improve materially after her marriage.

Fietz and his wife resided at 209 Congress street, and for a long time the neighborhood has gossiped about them, and some went so far as to warn Fietz to keep a close watch on his wife. About a year ago Fietz and the woman quarrelled, and it is said that she then threatened to "have him under the ground before the snow fell."

About three months ago Fietz took ill. His health, always before of the best, began to fail him, and in less than a month he lost twenty pounds in weight. His heart and kidneys troubled him, and his system seemed to be broken up. He was weak, and exertion tired him exceedingly. No suspicion of the real nature of his ailment dawned upon him.

About a month ago Mrs. Fietz was attacked with typhoid fever and was removed to the hospital. While his wife continued ill Fietz began to improve and was regaining his health. He visited Mrs. Fietz daily. She gradually grew worse and the doctors told her that her case was hopeless. Then she called her husband to her and made an astonishing confession.

She said that she had caused his life to be insured for $2,000, and proposed when he died to get this money and marry George Hidley, a farmer living near Wynantskill, from whom she had taken milk and farm products. Hidley is a widower. The woman he married about a year ago died recently.

Investigation disclosed the fact that Mrs. Fietz was in correspondence with a woman in New York city, from whom it is supposed she obtained the poison that she administered to her husband.

Letters that passed between Mrs. Fietz and that woman, who signs herself Hennetta Monkeith, are in the possession of the authorities, having been found in a hand bag belonging to Mrs. Fietz. The following is a verbatim copy of a letter written by Mrs. Fietz and addressed to "Hennetta Monkeith, P. O. New York city:"

TROY, N. Y., Sept. 8, 1891.

DEAR MRS. MONKEITH: I am very disappointed not to hear from you this morning, and I suppose you are very busy. I hope you got my letter that I wrote you last week. I hope you will come to Troy by next Sunday and I will pay your fare. If you only would come. I have got lots of things to tell you. I want you to come as soon as possible to finish up the things—you know—with him.

His dangerous day is Monday and Thursday. This is the day he is around the machines. George, he wants to go away. He wants to go with him, and of course, if he goes, I am afraid I will lose money, and of course, you know yourself I can't go or do anything of the kind until the other thing is over with him. Of course, I don't blame him a bit that he doesn't want to stay home any longer. Of course I see very well what his people are looking for.

Of course I don't want to say anything to him about it, and I want you to fix him what you told me, so as he cannot help himself. If I was only single to-morrow everything would be all right, and I hope you will tend to it. I hope you will come here and finish it. So quick as finished I will pay you what I told you.

Now, will you please answer me the same day you get my letter? I am very anxious to hear from you. When will you be here, and when can I expect anything going on? I wish they were all over. Yours respectfully,

MRS. FIETZ.

Hidley admits that he was on friendly terms with Mrs. Fietz; that it was his custom to take breakfast at her house, and that he owes her a little money; but he indignantly denies that he has any knowledge of a conspiracy to kill Fietz, or that he knew that his life was insured.

Railroad Monument Dedicated.

BORDENTOWN, N. J., Nov. 13.—A large meeting of railroad men was held here yesterday on the occasion of the dedication of the "John Bull" railroad monument, about a mile above this place. It was the 60th anniversary of the running of the first train of cars by a locomotive in New Jersey.

SOUGHT DEATH FOUR TIMES.

Viola Greylock's Identity Revealed—A Mania for Suicide.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 13.—Miss Viola Greylock, who attempted suicide by taking a dose of laudanum in New York on Monday, and was kept on a tramp for forty-eight hours to ward off death at Bellevue Hospital, is none other than Miss Annie Miller, alias Clara Greylock, who was taken to the German Hospital on Sept. 17, suffering from a like cause. On that occasion she gave the name of Greylock, although subsequently admitting that the name was assumed. She maintained a rigid silence when questioned as to her antecedents, just as she has done in New York, and it was only by the most searching inquiry that her true identity came to light. Her mind is undoubtedly unbalanced.

Beyond a doubt Viola Greylock is really Miss Anna Miller of Hobart, Orange County, N. Y. If she is Miss Miller, as her friends in Philadelphia have every reason to believe, this makes her fourth attempt at suicide. Twice has she attempted to take her life in Philadelphia, and in each case laudunum has been her choice. Her last attempt was in the early part of September, when she was taken to the German Hospital, and there gave the name of Greylock.

She was born in New York. Her father died when quite young, and her mother, being in reduced circumstances, placed her in an asylum at Cooperstown, N. Y., and nothing has ever been heard of her since. It is not known whether she is living or dead.

When about 10 years old Anna was adopted by a farmer named Taylor, living at Hobart, N. Y. It was while living with the Taylors that she first attempted to take her life. She was then confined in an asylum for a time, but appearing to be perfectly rational she was discharged.

She has always been an exceedingly sensitive girl, and, not liking the idea of being dependent on others, she determined to earn her own living. Consequently she came to Philadelphia, attempted suicide again, and was sent back to her home at Hobart. Here she remained for some time, but returned to Philadelphia, and sewed for Miss Ross, a dressmaker at No. 720 North Twentieth street.

She made her third attempt at suicide on the 17th of September last, and it was then that she gave the name of Greylock. Dr. Andrews examined her at the German Hospital, and pronounced her insane. While negotiations were being made to have her placed in Kirkbride's Asylum Miss Ross visited the Hospital and took her away. She was afterward placed in the Presbyterian Hospital, where, being a young lady of refinement, she became quite popular with the young doctors. She made her escape from there about a month ago, and disappeared entirely.

Pennsylvania and the Fair.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 13.—The question of opening the World's Fair on Sunday was brought up at the meeting of the World's Fair Commission yesterday. Resolutions of several religious bodies were presented against the Sunday opening of the Fair and led to a general discussion of the question. The question was finally referred to the Executive Committee. Thirty-seven plans for the proposed Pennsylvania building were submitted. They are on exhibition at the State Library. Mayor Merritt, of Reading, was elected to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Jas. Boliver, of Pittsburg, as a member of the Commission.

Chilian Cabinet Resigns.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—According to a dispatch received here from Santiago de Chili, the Cabinet appointed by the Junta have tendered their resignations. A mixed Cabinet is to be formed in order to carry out a non-political programme. The resignation of the Cabinet is said to be due to the fact that the Liberal Deputies failed to elect Councillors of State in accordance with an agreement previously entered into with the Ministers.

School Board Fight Ended.

LANCASTER, Pa., Nov. 13.—John E. Potter & Co., of Philadelphia, sued the Manheim School Board for $30,000 damages for breach of contract. The Board adopted their geographies and subsequently without notice replaced them with another publication. The arbitrators have awarded Potter & Co. $50 damages.

Against the Lottery.

NEW YORK, Nov. 13.—A grand demonstration was held in Chickering Hall last evening to show sympathy for and help the anti-lottery movement in Louisiana. The hall was packed to the doors and prominent men of all sects, parties and occupations occupied seats on the stage, many of whom delivered addresses. Bishop Potter presided.

Thankful for Their Deliverance.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—In the weather-beaten parish church at Folkestone, yesterday, a service of thanks was held, for the Divine mercy in the terrible experience of the previous day. The survivors of the Bienvenue and of the lifeboat crews were present, and the church was thronged with sea-going people.

A Strange Case.

READING, Pa., Nov. 13.—Bitten in May last by a dog, 12-year-old Webster Snyder, of No. 612 Buttonwood street, this city, seems at this late day to be dying, not of hydrophobia, but of paralysis of the nerves, due to a fresh breaking out of one of his wounds that had healed. It is a very rare case.

More Factories to be Closed.

YONKERS, N. Y., Nov. 13.—The closing of one of the great Smith carpet factories here last Saturday is it is said, to be followed by the shutting down of the other factories owned by the company next Saturday. Should this be done upward of 1,000 employes will be thrown out of work and much suffering ensue, as many of the company's employes are practically destitute.

TOWN OF SANTA ANNA TAKEN.

The Populace Favorable to the Insurgents, So No Blood Was Shed.

Three Other Towns Loyal to Fonseca to be Attacked—Great Dissatisfaction in the Army and Navy—A Strict Censorship Exercised Over the Telegraph—Germans Siding With the Dictator.

VALPARAISO, Chili, Nov. 13.—Latest advices from the State of Rio Grande do Sul in Brazil say that the revolt against Dictator Fonseca continues to spread. The insurgents' ranks are increasing in size hourly and the rebels show great boldness.

One band fully armed attacked and captured the town of Santa Anna, on the River Sino, north of the capital, Porto Alegre. They were led by Gen. Fernandez. A number of prisoners were taken.

Very little resistance was made to the rebels, and, as a consequence, no one was killed or wounded in the capture of the place. This would indicate that Santa Anna, which has a population of about 2,500, was at heart friendly to the revolutionists.

Notwithstanding the report that the garrison of Yugaraon had gone over to the insurgents, it is now stated that the town itself remains faithful to the cause of Fonseca.

Yugaraon, Santa Victoria and Porto Alegre are said to be the only towns that support the dictatorship. All the others in Rio Grande do Sul are said to have espoused the side of the rebels.

The revolutionists are reported to have raised large bodies of volunteer troops. Included in their forces are five regiments of infantry and one of cavalry, which deserted Fonseca as soon as the revolt was proclaimed.

The plans of the insurgents are not yet fully understood, but it is said they will lose no time in attacking the towns of Yugaraon, Santa Victoria and Porto Alegre, which remain true to the Dictator. Their object seems to be to gain possession of these places before the arrival of the gunboats, monitors and transports which Fonseca has sent to Rio Grande do Sul to quell the insurrection.

Rio Grande do Sul is the stronghold of the adherents of Gaspar Silveira Martins, former President of that State, who was exiled at the time of the dethronement of Dom Pedro, and who was afterward permitted to return to Brazil.

They are known as Gasparists. Martins is regarded by them as chief of the Liberal party in Brazil. The 80,000 Germans in the State are said to be among the warmest partisans of Fonseca. A goodly portion of them served in the German army.

There are some 6,000 Brazilian soldiers in Rio Grande do Sul. They form nearly one-half of the government forces. The spirit of discontent has often manifested itself in their ranks.

Report Confirmed at Washington.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—A cablegram has been received at the State Department from Brazil confirming the dispatch received by the Brazilian Minister here. Mr. Blaine's dispatch also states that Rio Grande do Sul and two smaller provinces have seceded and are under the protection of military who are in sympathy with the revolutionists.

ILLEGITIMATE THOMAS WINS.

A Decision Rendered in the Famous Monaghan Will Case.

NEW YORK, Nov. 13. — The contest over the estate of old Thos. Monaghan, was settled yesterday afternoon by Surrogate Ransom, who decided in favor of the illegitimate son. The Surrogate said it was evident to him that the name of William was the one intended for the legitimate son.

Thomas Monaghan, the testator, left quite a considerable property. In the will which was recently offered for probate almost the entire amount was left to "his beloved son Thomas."

Monaghan had a son by his first wife, who was generally known as William, and who went West a great many years ago, where he settled in business. Monaghan, after the death of his first wife, lived with a woman of the name of Ann Murphy, by whom he had a son who was christened Thomas.

When the will was submitted for probate the Western son came East and entered a claim, alleging that he had been christened Thomas, but had subsequently changed his name to William. He declared that it was the testater's object to make him his heir. Suit was accordingly brought before Surrogate Ransom.

Says We Are Going to Settle.

ROME, Nov. 13.—The "Italia" says it understands that the United States government has recognized the responsibility of the Federal government for a breach of international law in the New Orleans lynching affair, and that the only question that now remains to be settled is the amount of the indemnity to be paid by the United States government to the friends of the Italian citizens who lost their lives through the violence of the New Orleans mob.

Death of Don Piatt.

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 13.—Don Piatt, the well-known editor, died at his home, Mac-O-Chee, yesterday. He was 72 years of age and had been ill for some time. His latest literary work was the editing of "Belford's Magazine." He was a man of genial manners and possessed an attractive personality. Few men have enjoyed so clear an insight into National politics as Don Piatt, and he was one of the features of Washington life during a quarter of a century.

PERSECUTED MINISTERS.

Rum Element in a Maine Town That Did What it Pleased.

LINCOLN, Me., Nov. 13.—The recent raid upon the liquor dealers here and their conviction at Oldtown furnish the sequel to a remarkable story of the undisturbed doings of a certain element in this town.

This element had sufficient power and recklessness last summer to turn a pastor of the Congregational Church from his boarding place because he preached temperance sermons.

It pelted him with rotten eggs and stones while going home from church; it set dogs upon him in the streets of the village, and this in the daytime; it thrust a bottle of rum under his nose in the street and demanded that he drink.

It also egged the Methodist minister on the street and threatened his life, yet no one interfered.

An Indian girl was filled with liquor and left, half naked, at the church door one evening just as the people were coming out, with a blazing torch not far away to light up the scene.

On another occasion a mixture of whiskey and sweet wine was taken by a liquor dealer's son to school. The schoolhouse has a belfry, and there in school hours several scholars were found playing cards and one stupefied by drink.

Dr. Patten, one of the clergymen who was persecuted, and who is now at the Bangor Theological Seminary, says that the use of liquor among the men sadly broke in upon the social mingling of young people, and scarcely a young man could be found at such gatherings.

On one occasion, when several were drunk on the street and making disgraceful exhibitions, Mr. Patten called on several citizens to have them removed. None would assist, however, saying that they would be injured in their business.

The state of affairs in Lincoln is due to the building of the Canadian Pacific road. Lincoln allowed liquor to be sold to the gangs of workmen, and the young men of the town thus became familiar with it.

Dead from the Fall.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 13.—Henry Dallmeyer, who last Friday was seized with one of his nocturnal vagaries, in which he imagined that his house was burning down and jumped from a window to the sidewalk 20 feet below, died during the night from the effect of injuries received by the fall. Mr. Dallmeyer was 66 years of age; had amassed a fortune in the tobacco business in which he had been engaged since 1848. He was a director of the Third National Bank and of the German Insurance Company of Pittsburg; he was also a Mason of high degree.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—The borough council is to meet to-night.

—Complaints have been made to the police against boys who steal toys from in front of the stores. Arrests will be made.

—Joseph Sullivan, of West Third street, was seized with an epileptic fit in the entrance to Music Hall last evening. He was assisted to his home.

—The Woman's Home Missionary society held its regular meeting for sewing, this afternoon, at 2 o'clock, in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue church.

—The electric dynamo at the Crescent rink has been sold to the Scott press works. The front of the rink is being transformed into stores and flats.

—James McGee and the Rev. Dr. Yerkes took part in the meeting at Reform Hall last night. Joe English was at his best. Go hear him this evening.

—The United Tea and Coffee Growers' association claim that by trading with them Plainfield people will save from 10 to 25 per cent. on their purchases.

—There will be good chorus and solo singing at the Y. M. C. A. meeting for men to be held in the Trinity Reformed church next Sunday afternoon at 4:15.

—The subject for this evening's meeting in the Crescent Avenue chapel, is "How to receive God's messengers." Ps. CXVIII: 26. The Rev. C. K. Newell will conduct the meeting.

—The locomotive of the Easton express due here at 4:39 yesterday afternoon had its wooden boiler-jacket afire, and had to have the hose turned on it. It blazed fiercely quite a while.

—Winfield Scott Post, No. 74, G. A. R., will hold their fourth grand bazar at Reform Hall during the week commencing November 30, the features of which will be fully advertised in THE PRESS.

—Louise Rice, who played "Lillie Sawyett" in "Tuxedo" last evening, became severely ill just after the performance last evening, and fainted on the way to the City hotel. She was a trifle better to-day, and was taken to New York.

—Alice Drake was adjudged guilty of disorderly conduct, by judge Codington, this morning. Sentence was suspended on promise of good behavior. Mrs. Drake's husband was the complainant. The couple are married, but live apart from one another.

—Because of the performances of the "Four Leaf Clover" in the parish building of the Church of Holy Cross, next Tuesday evening, and of the swell amateurs at the Casino, next Thursday evening, the managers of Music Hall have decided not to present any attraction during next week so as not to interfere with the success of those events.

Happy and content is a home with "The Rochester;" a lamp with the light of the morning. Call on Rochester Lamp Co., 48 Park Place, N. Y.

An Excellent Church Concert.

A very interesting concert was given at the Dunellen M. E. church last evening, when the following programme was rendered in a most excellent manner:

PART FIRST.

Instrumental, Rondeau from "Linda di Chamounix."
Miss Emma Nelson and Miss Irene Day.
Chorus—"The Fairies."
Double Quartette—"He that Hath a Pleasant Face."
Mrs. Edward Taylor, Miss Emma Apgar, Miss Imogene Smith, Miss Earnie Giles, Messrs. Charles Apgar, L. T. Titsworth, Thomas Milliken, W. C. Kinsey.
Chorus—"Hail, Smiling Morn."
Recitation—"How Tom Saved the Train."
Miss Louise Apgar.
Chorus—"Stars of the Summer Night."
Solo—"The Beauteous Song."
W. C. Kinsey.
Chorus—"The House that Jack Built."

PART SECOND.

Instrumental March—"Salut a Pesth."
Miss Emma Nelson and Miss Irene Day.
Female Chorus—"O Calm and Lovely the Evening Bells."
Solo—"Dear Heart."
Miss Jessie Haynes.
Chorus—"Out on the Waters."
Trio—"A Little Farm well Tilled."
Messrs. Apgar, Kinsey and Milliken.
Recitation—"Different Ways of Saying Yes."
Miss Louise Apgar.
Chorus—"Night."
Quartette—"Boatman's Good Night."
Misses L. Apgar and E. Giles, and Messrs. C. Apgar and W. C. Kinsey.
Chorus—"Hunting Glee."

The instrumental music furnished by the Misses Nelson and Day was admirably executed, as were also the recitations by Miss Louise Apgar.

The solo entitled "Dear Hearts", rendered by Miss Jessie Haynes, was very pleasing to the audience, and was greatly applauded.

The chorus consisted of 40 voices from Dunellen and New Market.

About 500 people attended the concert, which was a decided success. The profits will be used by the Ladies' Aid society of the church.

Harp Recital at the Casino.

The audience at the harp recital in the Casino last evening was very appreciative, but not as large as it would have been on a night of no counter-attraction. John Cheshire, the distinguished harpist, wrought delightful music from the strings. "The Mandoline" was especially soft and sweet; and the Irish airs, whether rollicking or romantic, whose notes resounded in response to his twangings, were full of lively spirit and rich melody. The snatches of Scotch songs were highly enjoyable, and the "Fantasia il Trovatore" was a charming rendition. Mr. Cheshire appeared to best advantage in his solo work. A violin would better have taken the place of the piano in the duets, though Mrs. Cheshire at the piano was received with all due gallantry.

The Mendelssohn quartette sang a number of favorite airs, such as "Spin, Spin", "Bugle Song", "Oft in the Stilly Night", and "They Kissed: I Saw Them Do It", in pleasing harmony. Mr. Dennison's solo "Where the Lindens Bloom" and Mr. Metcalf's "God Guard Thee, Love", were much enjoyed. The last quartette, "King Witlaf's Drinking Horn", was excellent.

The proceeds of the concert are for the benefit of the industrial training department of the Boys' club.

Neither Dishonest Nor a Wife-Deserter

William Peel, formerly a milkman on the Johnston stock farm at Netherwood, requests THE PRESS to contradict the cruel stories concerning him that have been set afloat by the publication of an article in The Courier of Nov. 5. Mr. Peel says that he left the farm solely because of a personal disagreement between himself and manager Wheeler. He exhibits a recommendation given to him by Mr. Wheeler Nov. 1, and says he worked for Mr. Johnston six years, and that his accounts are all perfectly correct. He denies in toto the charges of dishonesty and wife-desertion made against him, and threatens to bring suit against the parties who started the falsehoods about him. He says he has been out of town only two days, visiting a sister in Philadelphia, and that he and his wife and family are living happily together on North avenue. Every injurious statement made against him he denounces as a malicious fabrication.

Captured the Thief.

The farmers of Scotch Plains have for months been losing much produce. Last night they captured the thief, for whom they had been watching. He is an Italian named Loza Munsa. Farmer Thys, who arrested him, brought him to Plainfield this morning, and justice Nash sent him in charge of constable Mattox, to Elizabeth, to await the action of the grand jury. One farmer has lost 20 bushels of shelled corn, another 200 cabbages, through Munsa's operations. He is said to have retailed the stolen produce about the country.

They Are Bound to Bond the City.

The Fourteen Rich Men who stopped all competition in water supply rates by throwing the Plainfield Aqueduct company's franchise into the Supreme Court, have raised their hands again and stopped the building of sewers except by bonding the city, by throwing the Plainfield Sewerage company's franchise into the same court. Judge VanSyckle granted the writ some days ago.

Sick Headache.

I have used Dr. Deane's Dyspepsia Pills for Headache, and since I have taken them I have been perfectly free from it. I can cheerfully and conscientiously recommend them to any and all who suffer from the same. MISS M. E. LEES,
Stenographer and Typewriter,
Room 93, Evening Post Building, N. Y.

Flower Carries the City.

The paper that calls itself the "News", prints the following table which it says is the "official figures of the county board of canvassers":

	Kyte, R.	Flower, D.	Osborn, P.
Plainfield—
1st ward	157	207	18
2d ward	130	245	9
3d ward, 1st dist.	83	218	15
3d ward, 2d dist.	134	136	11
4th ward	146	107	10

The above shows that Mr. Flower carried every ward in the city by a handsome majority, excepting the fourth. Even the third ward that has always been good for a Republican majority of about 150, gives almost as many the other way according to the "News'" official table. The ward, however, is divided into two districts it seems since last heard from.

The grand total for Mr. Kyte in this city is, therefore, according to above, 650, while Mr. Flower's is 913. Thus showing a Democratic majority in Plainfield of 263. But as the correct official table was published in THE PRESS some days ago showing Mr. Kyte's sweeping victory in this city as well as throughout the district, nobody would be misled by the News' figures even if read.

Professor Burnham and the Bicycle Club.

The friends of Professor Burnham are legion, and his return to Plainfield as an instructor in gymnastics, will be good news. He will start the clubs swinging on Saturday night at the Bicycle clubhouse, as the "boys" have secured him for that purpose.

Although we speak of the "boys", we must not forget the dignity of the club, and of cycling, as supported by a mayor, an ex-mayor, members of the council, judges, lawyers, physicians and the patriarch.

It is intended also, to establish a class in gymnastics for ladies, and there is no doubt that many will avail themselves of the opportunity to secure grace to the form and roses to the cheek. This class will met at the bicycle club house on Saturday afternoons.

A Wedding.

The following personal appeared in the Mount Vernon, N. Y., Daily Bulletin of Nov. 7:

"George B. Provoost and Miss Florence M. Seaman were married Wednesday evening at the residence of the bride's parents, 24 South Eleventh avenue. Miss Ella Seaman was bridesmaid, and Joseph Provoost acted as best man. The Rev. C. H. Dodd officiated. The couple started on a wedding trip to Mauch Chunk, Pa."

Mr. Provoost was a former resident of Dunellen, and his newly-made bride is the daughter of John Seaman, who a few years ago was interested in the livery business on Park avenue, near Sixth street, Plainfield.

A Women's Bicycle Club.

The many young women bicycle riders of this city have organized a club among themselves which is probably the first of its kind in the world. They will adopt a distinguishing badge but not a full uniform.

Miss Julia E. Bulkley is president; Miss Lilian Fritts, captain; Miss May Kirkner, first lieutenant; and Miss Belle Butler, secretary and treasurer. Miss Yates has been requested to prepare a constitution and by-laws.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Bass, jr., are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Bass of West Eighth street.

R. M. Mahaffee and family, of the borough, have removed to 19 Green street, Newark.

George A. Newman of Orange will describe a trip to Japan, at the Y. M. C. A. rooms, next Thursday evening at eight o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas R. Crosley will celebrate their silver wedding anniversary at their home, 62 Duer street, Friday evening, Nov. 27.

James Lancey and family of Putnam avenue, will spend the winter in East Orange. He has leased a pleasant home at 18 Clinton street.

Miss Collishaw, one of New York's prominent mission workers, gave a very interesting talk to the King's Daughters assembled in the Park Avenue Baptist church last evening. This noon she was entertained at luncheon by Miss Mabel Woodruff. The Whatsoever circle, Trinity church, were present to meet her.

Married.

A pretty wedding took place at the residence of Mrs. John Allen, Annandale, Wednesday. The happy couple were S. C. Sigler, of Hackettstown, and Miss Maggie Allen, lately of Plainfield. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John M. Allen of Dingmans Ferry, Pa., brother of the bride. After the ceremony the bridal party proceeded to the dining room and partook of a sumptuous repast. The bride received many useful and handsome presents. Mr. and Mrs. Sigler will make their home in Wilkesbarre, Pa.

—Now that Clinton has suffered severely by fire she has decided to buy a fire-engine.

—The Plainfield cornet band will head the procession to welcome Governor Abbett to Westfield to-night.

—The public schools will be closed Nov. 20, to enable the teachers to attend the annual Institute for Union county at Elizabeth.

A Disappointed Crowd.

There was n't even standing room in Music Hall, last evening. Before the performance commenced the box office had to refuse the sale of any more admissions and scores were unable to get in. But this was not due to the play itself.

"Tuxedo" is not worth making any fuss about. There is not a star among the women of the company, and of the men, apart from John Coleman, who is an artist in his line, and the quartette, which is the finest in the country—nothing can be said in their favor beyond what can be said of dozens like them.

Mr. Thatcher and Mr. Marble had a number of friends in the audience who were all disappointed that the former had not better chances to show what he can do, and that the latter has not made a better play.

A Special Programme of Music.

The following is the order of music for the special praise service to be held at the First Presbyterian church Sunday evening:

First Symphony.....Alex Guilmont
Hallelujah!.....William Rees
Resurrection.....Shelly
The Shadows of the Evening Hour,
Barri—Shelly
My Redeemer and My God.....Dudley Buck
Jerusalem Thou City Blest.....Pinsuti
Overture—Oberon.....Weber

—At last a decent sidewalk is being laid in front of the new Sebring building on North avenue. The public will be very grateful for it.

—Mr. Cleaves, who is clearing building sites for J. T. Vail on the mountain back of Sebring's mills, shot a fine silver fox on Mr. Vail's land, yesterday.

—Mary R. Loomis and husband have conveyed to John B. Mills, land on the west side of Westervelt avenue; the date of deed is October 31, 1881; and the consideration, $100.

Thanks to the introduction of Salvation Oil, our young bicyclers need not fear a fall. 25 cents.

The Newark to Go South.

BOSTON, Nov. 13.—The cruiser Newark will leave the Navy Yard here Saturday. Her exact destination is unknown, but it is quite certain that she is intended for service off the coast of South America. The vessel will probably proceed from here to New York and thence South.

Train Wrecker Sentenced.

GREENSBURG, Pa., Nov. 13.—Ellsworth Luce, the West Newton train wrecker, was found guilty in the criminal court here yesterday, and was sentenced to the penitentiary for a term of eight years and four months.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

"A GOD SEND is Ely's Cream Balm. I had catarrh for three years. Two or three times a week my nose would bleed. I thought the sores would never heal. Your Balm has cured me."—Mrs. M. A. Jackson, Portsmouth, N. H.

I WAS so much troubled with catarrh it seriously affected my voice. One bottle of Ely's Cream Balm did the work. My voice is fully restored.—H. F. Lieganer, A. M., pastor of the Olivet Baptist Church, Philadelphia, Pa.

She Showed Up.

"You have no humor in your make-up," said the husband to the wife. "If you would look at the funny side of life once in awhile your trials would be less burdensome."

"You think so?"

"I know it."

"And I have no sense of the ridiculous?"

"Not a particle."

"I guess that's so, or I should never have married as I did."—Philadelphia Press.

Miseries of Suburban Life.

Mrs. Suburb—You are very late to-night. Supper was ready two hours ago.

Mr. Suburb—Yes. I missed the 5:17 train and had to take the 5:19.

Mrs. S.—But that is only two minutes.

Mr. S.—Yes, my dear, but the 5:17 comes straight through, and the 5:19 stops at 173 stations before it gets here.—Good News.

Love's Young Dream.

Gilhooly—You were in love with the beautiful Miss Jones before she married old Goldbug, weren't you?

Gus De Smith—Don't talk about her. My love for her lies buried in my bosom.

Gilhooly—Well, you might as well resurrect your buried love, for they are going to plant old Goldbug. He died of apoplexy last night.—Texas Siftings.

Appropriate.

A countryman and his bride applied at the box-office for tickets.

"Orchestra chairs, parquette or family circle?" asked the ticket seller.

"Which'll it be, Marier?" said the groom.

"Well," she replied, with a blush, "bein' as how we're married now, perhaps we had better buy the family circle."—Texas Siftings.

Some Relief.

Prospective Purchaser—But suppose some man down in the next township dams the stream and makes it overflow my land. What relief will there be for me?

Owner of Farm—Um—well, if he dams the stream you can serve him the same way, can't you?—Chicago Tribune.

IT IS NOT

A LIE.

A. R. TUDOR'S Rye Whiskey is warranted absolutely pure and ten years old, and the statement is unqualifiedly true. Read the following affidavit:

HENRY SNYDER, Jr., of the City, County and State of New York, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he has been the General Manager of the A. R. TUDOR CO. from its inception, and he knows of his own knowledge that no neutral spirits, flavoring extracts, or foreign ingredients of any kind have ever been used or contained in the Whiskey bottled under the label and trade mark of A. R. TUDOR. He further solemnly swears that he has personally superintended the withdrawal of the A. R. TUDOR CO.'s Whiskey from the U. S. Bonded Warehouse, and that the U. S. Government stamps on the barrels thereof have, in no instance, borne date later than the year 1881.

SOME FALSEHOODS ANSWERED.

A PAPER THAT WILL NOT FIGHT FAIR, EXPOSED.

Evidence From Its Own Mouth That the Big 6 Has Reduced the Tax Rate—No System of Sewerage Can be Put in Plainfield Except it be Approved by the State Board of Health, According to the State Laws—The Little Joker of it all is (as the Mayor and Others are Already on Record) the City Should Bond Itself to Build Its Sewers.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—May I crave space in your columns to answer the misrepresentations of a correspondent in the Courier who hides himself behind a false name and strikes at his betters behind their backs like a coward. As he is not man enough—or else ashamed—to sign his true name, he is not worthy of a honest man's attention, so I shall address my answers to the editor who permits the false statements a place in his columns:

FALSEHOOD NO 1—TAXATION.

The Courier says: "The Big 6 have increased the burden of taxation". That this is not true, is proven by the files of Mr. Runyon's own paper. It was the levy for our splendid county roads that made the total rate for 1890 higher than that of 1889. The rate for the city was lower as the following from the CENTRAL TIMES shows:

	Rate 1889.	1890.
Library	4½	4
City	46	44
Poor	8½	8
Fire	18	18
School	40	40
	117	114

There's a decrease shown by your own paper, Mr. Runyon, during the first year of the Big 6; and as to this, the second, year of the Big 6, I need only quote the following head lines from the Central Times of August 17, 1891, to show how untruthful you are:

LOWERING THE TAX RATE.

THE COMMON COUNCIL FIXES IT AT $2.22.—LAST YEAR IT WAS $2.24.

NO. 2—HYDRANTS.

The proposition submitted by Mr. Pope's company was $15 per hydrant, which after once erected cost comparatively nothing to maintain. The franchise given by the Big 6 calls for 140,000 gallons of water to be used every twenty-four hours for $25 per hydrant. Mr. Pope's company previous to the granting of the franchise at $25 per hydrant, positively declined to enter into a contract with the city for less than $60 per hydrant to furnish what Mr. Low binds his company to do in his franchise.

NO 3—CAREY.

The records of our city court will explain how competent are our present police, and they also will explain how the good morals and safety of our citizens have been protected under the excellent supervision of Chief Grant and the entire force. Your charge that the efficiency of our police force is destroyed, is an uncalled for insult to officers Grant, Lynch, McCue, Kiely, Cooney, and all the rest.

NO 4—PUBLIC MONEYS.

I would like to ask you, Mr. Runyon, if it was not Mr. Pope who forced the city into the lawsuits?—starting with the Israel Lewis suit to break a franchise granted by the council of 1889, and not granted by the Big 6, as has been stated. This suit has been decided against Mr. Pope. You also charge that money has been recklessly spent upon the streets. This, you must know, is positively false, for the records will show where every dollar has been spent, and the work will speak for itself. The only reason I can see for your making this statement, unless you intentionally intend to deceive the public, is, that you belong to that circle that seem to think, that if the street money is not all spent within a radius from ¼ to ½ a mile from the station, that it is thrown away.

On my assuming the office of chairman of the street committee of 1890, I made a general survey of all the streets in the city. I found them in a horrible, and in some places, absolutely impassable, state. Being aware that people living in the outlying districts were tax-payers, and that they were justly entitled to have their streets put in a respectable condition, the committee so ordered them done. Time and again while such work was going on, gentlemen who belonged to the circle mentioned above, would come to me and say: "Smith, why are you spending our money in this manner? The streets you are working on do not need any improvements." My answer to them was: "Their money has been spent for your comforts in passed years, and they should have some benefits now."

I here state, and the records will bear me out, that there has been twice as much accomplished for the money spent in the years 1890 and 1891, as in the last ten years.

You also speak of the "ups and downs" in the grades. I would like to have you point out in any of the work that has been done in the past two years, a single foot that has not been laid according to the established grade. The "ups and downs" that do occur are caused by the utter disregard of established grades by the street committees previous to Jan. 1, 1890, and it will cost the city many thousands of dollars to undo the work done by them. I will cite as cases in point—Eighth street to the southwest corner of Central avenue; Madison avenue from Fifth street to Ninth, and Central avenue from Seventh street to Randolph road. After showers miniature lakes could be seen all along these lines. I would like to state in this connection that there has not been one dollar spent since Jan. 1, 1890, for sand. If records had been kept by former street committes, I think the tax-payers of Plainfield would see that they had been very heavily sanded, all of which was taken from the lot corner of Plainfield and Sherman avenues, at $1 per load, and charged to the city.

NO. 5—SEWERAGE.

This is the all important question to this city. The water committee are accused of indecent haste. I know that they worked over this subject for months and months; plans were studied closely and submitted to experts at their own expense, and were submitted to all of the council time and again; a special meeting was called and the public invited to inspect the plans and specifications, all of which are still on file at the city clerk's office. They have also been submitted to the State Board of Health, and, Mr. Runyon, you surely know that no system of sewerage can be put in to the city of Plainfield, or any other city in this state, without the approval of the State Board of Health. The laws require this, and you know it. I do not think that the Big 6 or Mr. Low's company can influence the honorable gentlemen composing the State Board of Health to sanction a system of sewerage for the city of Plainfield that does not protect the health of the citizens.

THE LITTLE JOKER.

His honor, the mayor, stated in his first veto message on the sewer question, that he thought surely it was necessary for a small portion of Plainfield, but that the city should build it. Here comes the Little Joker. Tax the masses for the benefit of the few. In granting the franchise to Mr. Low, you will see (if you will take the trouble to read it,) that the Big 6 has this Little Joker in view, and had the contract so drawn that the tax payers would not be bound to pay one cent for what they did not enjoy.

NO 6. SALOONS.

Mr. Runyon, can you cite one instance where a license has been granted to a person that had not fully complied with the law? When we as councilmen took the oath of office, we swore to look after the city's interest, to abide by its laws, and see that they were carried out. The saloon keepers, as long as they comply with the law, are justly entitled to protection, for they contribute a large proportion towards defraying the expenses of the city, and under our oaths we are not allowed to discriminate against them in favor of other citizens. You speak of the one-hour extension. Will you be kind enough to explain through your paper the arbitrary manner in which that hour was taken away from them in the year 1889, and the license fee raised to $700, yet nothing was given them for it.

I say, justice to all!

Now, Mr. Runyon, a word of advice from a layman is well to heed sometimes. You are young at the business and I would say to you that it has long been established that a newspaper intentionally publishing articles from day to day with the sole purpose of deceiving the people has never succeeded. The people are not fools.

SEYMOUR G. SMITH.

IN THE CAUSE OF TEMPERANCE.

Mrs. S. J. C. Downs Devoted Almost Twenty Years to the Work.

In the death of Mrs. Sarah J. C. Downs, president of the State W. C. T. U., the Woman's Christian Temperance Union loses one of its most active and best workers. Mrs. Downs was born in Philadelphia December 19, 1822, her maiden name being Sarah Jane Corson. She obtained a good education and the early years of her life were spent in and near Philadelphia.

On May 16, 1860, she was married to the Rev. Charles S. Downs, of Philadelphia, who was afterward connected with the Newark Conference of the Methodist church. Mr. Downs died August 7, 1870, aged fifty-seven years. In 1870 Mrs. Downs moved to Ocean Grove, which place she has since made her home. In 1873 she became interested in the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance union. She threw her whole soul into the cause and soon became recognized as one of the leaders in the State. In 1880 she was elected president of the State union, succeeding Mrs. Mary R. Denman, and she has ever since held that position. She is also State organizer of the union.

She has made addresses on behalf of the work in almost every city, town and hamlet in the State, giving her time almost wholly to the cause, accomplishing great good in spite of her advanced years. She took part every year in the camp-meetings at Ocean Grove and was well known outside of her temperance work. She was visiting her daughter in East Orange when attacked with peritonitis, which carried her off most unexpectedly. Her funeral took place from the Halsey Street M. E. church, Newark, at 1 o'clock this afternoon.

Oh, What a Cough!

Will you heed the warning. The signal perhaps of the sure approach of that more terrible disease, Consumption. Ask yourselves if you can afford for the sake of saving 50c., to run the risk and do nothing for it. We know from experience that Shiloh's Cure will cure your cough. It never fails. This explains why more than a Million Bottles were sold the past year. It relieves croup and whooping cough at once. Mothers, do not be without it. For lame back, side or chest, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by J. G. Miller, No. 10 East Front street, Plainfield, N. J.

THINGS THEATRICAL.

[FROM THE PRESS' OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—The further this theatrical season progresses the worse things seem to become. Every week brings news of another failure, often two or three. Some of the companies are fortunate in saving enough out of the wreck to bring them home. Others are stranded without a penny and Fate lays a heavy hand upon them. The reason for this woeful condition of affairs is that in too many cases the managers of these enterprises are financiers with unlimited self-confidence and assurance, but very little money. The salary day of the luckless thespian may be postponed from time to time, but it requires money to pay railroad fares. And there's the rub when business is bad. Even in this city there is a worm i' the bud of managerial hopes. Crowded houses are the rule everywhere, but somehow the box-office receipts don't qualify appearances. A quondam manager friend of mine, who is looking over my shoulder as I write, suggests in a jubilant stage whisper that the lithograph ticket is very popular with New York theater-goers just now. Quien Sabe?

The Lillian Russell Opera company in "La Cigale" at the Garden theater is probably doing the best business, outside of Bernhardt. The opera is superbly mounted. Miss Russell, by some process known only to herself, has once more attained the graceful outlines of her girlish beauty; she sings better than ever, and for the first time in her life has demonstrated that she can act. The rest of the company, with the possible exception of Streitmann, are also good.

Sidney Drew, of Dixey's company, is to go starring soon in a new play, by Archie Gordon, author of Stuart Robson's clever comedy, "Is Marriage a Failure"? Mr. Drew will be backed financially by his mother and will open his season at her Arch Street theater, Philadelphia.

Thomas Q Seabrooke is to put on a new version of "The Cadi" at the Union Square, some time this week. The alterations have been made by Clay Green, with Bill Nye's consent. So far as New York is concerned the change is hardly necessary, as business has been uniformly good—so good in fact that J. M. Hill has extended the comedy's time four weeks.

Frederick Paulding reappeared here Monday night at the Windsor theater in his superb production of "The Struggle Of Life". His success was even more marked than during his recent engagement at the Standard. The cast and every feature of the production are identical with the original presentation. The company plays at the New Bedford avenue theatre, Brooklyn, next week.

Sentiment has no place in the business of theatricals. Hoyt's "A Trip To Chinatown" was given at the Madison Square, Monday night, and the lingering memories of "Hazel Kirke" and "Elaine" were soon dispelled by the rollicking fun and entertaining specialties of this clever farce.

The attendance at the American Institute fair, which will be open until the 28th inst., at the exhibition hall on Third avenue, shows beyond all argument that the American Institute has a successful and appreciated exhibition. The family parties who visit the fair, the ladies who drop in between ten in the morning and early candle light, and the visitors who often spend a whole day and evening at the fair, all know that the character of the exhibition and the value of its exhibits, give the Institute a high place in the list of New York's places of amusement. What the Institute has been doing for fifty-nine years it is now doing for its sixtieth exhibition, and those who neglect to go there will have something to regret when this year's exhibition shall have closed.

A Scourge of Diphtheria at Chatham.

The four churches at Chatham, the parochial school connected with the Catholic church, and the one public school in the town, are all closed indefinitely because of the prevalence of diphtheria.

So far there have been out four deaths, but Dr. Swayne, who alone has seventeen cases on hand, says that the total of sick people reaches forty.

The origin of the disease is credited to sewage in a mill pond. A capitalist named DeForrest recently built a number of new houses on New England avenue in Summit. To fit them as far as possible with city conveniences, Mr. DeForrest led sewer pipes into them, and the waste is carried through a private drain from Summit to within about a mile of the depot at Chatham. There the sewage has been emptied into a mill pond which overflows into the Passaic River.

Owing to the dry season, the stream that feeds the pond has become low in the basin, and the water is inactive and stagnant. The sewage lies deposited on the shores of the pond, emitting noxious vapors into the atmosphere. The authorities of Chatham have called the attention of Mr. DeForrest and the purchasers of his property to the sanitary dangers of his sewage, and he and they have agreed to take steps to close up the private sewer and connect their properties with some other outlet.

The physicians all agree that the contagion is confined to the poorer parts of the town, and that in the localities where something like proper attention is given to the rules of health there are no cases.

Reputable dealers throughout the length, breadth and depth of our glorious land fortunately keep the genuine Hire's Root beer in stock. Did you ever try it? It is easy to make, and ever so delicious—and it is such a safe drink.

UNFORTUNATE JERSEYMEN

Will Have to Do Without Their Beer and Whiskey for Some Time.

The annual meeting of the New Jersey Athletic club, of which a number of Plainfielders are members, was held at Bergen Point on Wednesday evening, the election resulting as follows: President, John Newman; vice-president, E. B. Ely; secretary, J. D. Boyd; trustees for three years, C. E. Annett and A. W. Booth. Mr. Annett succeeded himself, Mr. Booth being elected in place of Michael Stringer. One of the most effective workers for the election of president Newman was Charles K. Moore of the Plainfield Crescent League.

The thirsty members of the club, who held a caucus about two weeks ago and passed an amendment permitting liquor to be sold on the club premises, received a set-back, it being decided that the caucus in question was an illegal meeting. The objection was based on purely technical grounds, the amendment not having been submitted to the board of trustees, as provided for in the by-laws.

The liquor party will make another attempt to introduce beer and whiskey into the club house at the next meeeting. It is a peculiar situation. The liquor party is in the majority, as was proven in the election for two trustees, which was a hot fight. Annett, the liquor candidate, received 84 votes to 49 for Allah Benny, a temperance advocate, while Booth, who likes his beer, smothered Dr. Boynton, his blue-ribbon opponent by 88 to 43. The trouble is that the balloting on the liquor question is open, and a large number of members who are steady patrons of the Bayonne saloons and would dearly love to have their toddy and ale at the club house are afraid to stand up in meeting to show their little weaknesses and vote for the amendment.

The Treasurer's report showed the receipts to have been $35,551 and expenditures $34,631. During the year 128 members were elected, 116 re-signed, 3 died and 82 were dropped, leaving a membership of 427.

It was decided that lady members be hereafter entitled to the privileges of the club without paying dues.

President-elect Newman was not present and the meeting adjourned for two weeks. If Mr. Newman accepts the office it will create a vacancy in the board of trustees, which will be filled at the meeting.

Westfield Wins the Opening.

The opening game in The Sun tournament of section 2, New Jersey district, A. A. B. U., took place on Montgomery's alleys, Jersey City, last night. The result was as follows:

America B. C.—Heitzen, 174; Lafoy, 147; Diffenbach, 187; Hoffman, 148; Manners, 143. Total, 799.

Westfield A. C.—Young, 123; Horter, 192; Marsh, 174; Love, 139; Denman, 189. Total, 817.

The next game will be on the evening of next Friday at Roseville between the team of that place and the Crescent League of this city.

WONDERFUL CHILDREN.

Italian Rivals of the Once Famous Siamese Twins.

The twins of Lacona, rivals of the famous Siamese pair, says the New York Recorder, are known as the Tocci brothers, and were born in Lacona, Italy, on July 4, 1875. They have one body, one pair of legs, four arms and two heads.

One head is of fair complexion, resembling the mother, and speaks Italian and French. The other head is of dark complexion, like the father, and speaks German and English. The twins are in charge of Frank Uffner, who exhibited the late Lucia Zarete, the Mexican midget.

The Tocci brothers usually eat with both mouths, although one can provide nourishment enough for the entire organism.

True to Her Sex.

Ranchero—I can tell you we see some mighty curious sights out west. Before I left a woman was arrested for poisoning her husband and several small children. She was tried, convicted and sentenced to be hanged. She mounted the scaffold with a firm step. Before the black cap was drawn over her head, the sheriff asked her if there was any last word—

Listener—Well?

Ranchero—She hadn't finished when I moved away.—Life.

And a good lamp
must be simple; when it is not simple it is not good. Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. All metal, tough and seamless, and made in three pieces only, it is absolutely safe and unbreakable. Like Aladdin's of old, it is indeed a "wonderful lamp," for its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light and more cheerful than either.
Look for this stamp—THE ROCHESTER. If the lamp dealer has n't the genuine Rochester, and the style you want, send to us for our new illustrated catalogue, and we will send you a lamp safely by express, your choice of over 2,000 varieties from the Largest Lamp Store in the World.

Also, He Does Not Get It—Some Experiences Which Show That a Simple Life in the Country Unfits a Man for Contact with the World.

[COPYRIGHT, 1891.]

Even a brief sojourn in the country unfits a man for metropolitan life. The broken thread is tied with difficulty and the knot must show. There are the trades people—as we say when we are writing novels of English high society. Those whom I paid when I left have a queer notion that we meet again on a cash basis. Those whom I didn't pay—well, have a notion that we shall not meet at all for the present.

My summer in Grimesville has made a rustic of me. People seem to have forgotten me. Perhaps it is my sun-browned skin; or the suit of clothes which a Grimesville tailor whittled out for me with his jackknife. Even the bunko men whom I got to know quite well through my connection with the daily press show a disposition to scrape acquaintance with me all over again.

My nose is not the blase and cosmopolitan organ it once was. I cannot now walk by a street excavation without emotion. All our streets are ripped open this fall, exposing a multitude of pipes, all of which leak. These thoroughfares are graveyards where a thousand corporations have buried their dishonor, and when the remains are laid bare the wayfaring man, though a fool, may scent corruption. The city man doesn't mind it; he can sit down by an open window and eat his dinner, and wind up, perhaps, with a piece of Camembert cheese which he really doesn't need, under the circumstances. But sewer gas is, after all, an acquired taste, and one rapidly loses his appreciation of it. I started up Broadway the other evening with an excellent appetite for my dinner. I walked four blocks and lost the appetite. If I'd had the dinner with me at the time I should probably have lost that too.

And my nerve isn't what it was. I rode up Sixth avenue yesterday afternoon on the front platform of a horse car. The driver had a friend at his elbow and an enemy inside. The friend's name was Bill, and the enemy's name was whisky.

"Bill," said the driver, "I'm glad them bustles has gone out o' fashion."

"Why?" asked Bill.

"Cause I can drive so much nearer to a woman without hittin' her. Hi there; don't be gettin' under the horses' feet!"

Before we had driven two blocks, both Bill and I were convinced that there was something in what he had said. It was too exciting for us.

"WHY?" ASKED BILL.

"Chimmy," said Bill, "let me off. I'll take another ride with you, when I ain't so bloomin' sober."

He steered straight for a saloon. As for me, I went into a drug store and ordered six fingers of Jamaica ginger. And this reminds me of something even more serious than the loss of my indifference to human life. While in the country I acquired the habit of drinking water. Perhaps it would be more accurate to say that the habit returned upon me, and was strengthened. For I was always a water drinker. I was brought up in New England, and was always accustomed to see water upon our table at home. All the members of my family drank it freely. The spectacle of such indulgence cannot but have its effect upon a growing boy. Before I left my father's house I had become a confirmed water drinker; and last summer in Grimesville, where we had a well of our own, the old appetite came back.

It is a sad sight to see a man with such a weakness turned loose upon the cafes and restaurants of New York. The waiters are all foreigners. They are so confoundedly foreign that they cannot understand half that is said to them, even by people from their own country. They have never heard of water as a beverage. Some of them have been out when it rained, but they do not carry bathing to excess. Their ideas of a customer are of three kinds: If he is a German he will drink beer; if he is a Frenchman he will drink wine; if he is an American—bah! let him drink what he can get.

I had to dine down-town on Thursday, and, having discovered fifty cents in a remote corner of my clothing, I decided to try the cheap table d'hote at that restaurant which the boys call the Fried Monkey. All the waiters seemed quite anxious to have the honor of serving me. They put on a delusive appearance of activity. Fifteen of them pulled out chairs for me, and the one I selected was so eager to be doing something that he pushed his chair back again before I could get into it. Then he pulled out another which he did not want and remained holding it until after I had taken the first unassisted. The process of evolution has not yet produced a creature who can make so many motions and accomplish so little as a New York imported waiter.

When I was seated my waiter betook himself to some distant apartment whence he returned with a long piece of that tough and sour bread which never gets the credit that is due it in the health board's statistics of mortality. I said: "Bring me a glass of water."

He did not hear me. He had escaped. By and by he came back with a peculiar expression on his face. He looked as if he might be gargling his throat. From what followed I was led to believe that he had simply got his mouth full of the English language and was anxious to be rid of it. He said: "Will you have red or white wine?"

"Neither," I replied. "I want a glass of water."

He disappeared, and after a little while returned with a plate of soup. I said: "Where is that water?"

He looked at the table, and then glanced down with solicitude at the floor, as if he thought I complained that it was wet. But his alarm was unnecessary; there wasn't any water on the floor and hadn't been any there for a long time. Then a perfunctory smile appeared upon his countenance. Evidently monsieur was joking; an American joke, ha, ha. He vanished, and on his next appearance presented me with half a lobster which, from its diminutive size, had evidently been slaughtered in violation of the statute. However, the crime was outlawed by that time, as anybody could discover by tasting the lobster. I said: "I have got a thirst on me a mile high. Why in—"

HE DIDN'T WANT WINE.

But he had vanished at the mention of thirst. By and by, he came back bringing a large glass of beer. I hate beer. I am an American, and I swear by the old oaken bucket. On this occasion I swore by that and everything else I could think of. Perhaps, in my haste, I gave this person from foreign parts an overdose of our language. He became utterly confused and finally he fled. When he returned he had a pint of red wine in one hand and a pint of white wine in the other. I said: "Where is the proprietor?"

"He ees not een," gasped the waiter. "He ees out further."

He waved his hand in the direction of a small room which was between the dining hall and the street. The two rooms were separated by only little screen doors. I remembered seeing a fat man at a desk in the outer apartments. Doubtless he was the proprietor. I remembered, also, that there was a messenger call box behind the desk, and this suggested an idea. However, I resolved to make one last assault upon the waiter's understanding. My thirst was by this time simply maddening. Nothing in this world can so shrivel a man's palate as an unsuccessful attempt to get drink. Some of the thirstiest men I have ever known lived in Maine.

At that moment I was in such a condition that the hinges of my mouth creaked. Nevertheless I opened it with deliberation and uttered the sounds which stand for water in five different languages. One of them was a Central African word which I picked up in conversation with a missionary. I included it, in a spirit of fairness, to give the waiter every chance. A gleam of something which in another might have been called intelligence flashed in his eyes. He went, and got me a finger bowl.

"Intolerable id'ot," said I, "will you ring for a messenger?"

In ten minutes the boy came.

"Johnny," said I, "go tell the proprietor that I want some water."

The boy went to the swinging doors and pulled one of them open.

"Hi, dare, old man," he yelled, "dere's a gillie in here what wants some water."

"Himmel!" cried the fat man, in alarm. "Ring for an ambulance!"

Then the boy came back and collected twenty cents. I did not blame him; he had done the best he could. I arose and sought the nearest drug store, where, after some argument, they consented to give me water without a physician's prescription. HOWARD FIELDING.

Breaking of the Great Pumps Caused the Mine to Fill Rapidly.

Only One Way of Egress Left to the Men, and That Was Through the Raging Waters—Hundreds of Yards Through a Seething Torrent—Some Full Exhausted, But Were Saved By Comrades.

SCRANTON, Pa., Nov. 14.—The truly wonderful escape of fifty miners from being drowned in the Leggett's Creek Mine of the Delaware & Hudson Canal Company about 2 o'clock in the afternoon is the great topic of discussion. The great pump broke, and the mine began to fill with water from a current of Leggett's Creek.

The rumor was quickly spread among the miners that the creek had burst into the mine, and that they must hurry or that all would be drowned. The fifty miners and laborers, who had been busy at their perilous task of finding and cleaning the coal, quickly dropped their tools when they heard the rumor, and rushed to the foot of the shaft to make their escape.

The shaft filled rapidly with water and a veritable river flowed in from the old workings. When the men arrived at the usual place of exit they found all escape by that means impossible.

Terror seized all and a panic struck the miners, when Daniel Evans addressed the men and told them that their only hope of escape was to face the water toward the Von Storch slope over a mile away through the dark, uncertain subterranean caverns of the mines.

Evans, leading the fifty men, stepped ahead and marched into the water. Bravely the men forced their way toward the incoming stream. They waded into it, but as they went further and further toward their objective point they found the water grow deeper at every step.

Soon it reached their shoulders, but on they kept, with only the light of hope to guide them on. Soon they reached a spot where the waters were within six inches of the roof, and the weight of the water and the small channel for air made breathing difficult. The lamps of half the men, though worn on upon their hats, went out, and many of the unfortunates were left to grope about in the dark.

The water rose until it covered their lips and stopped up their ears. They gasped as they were forced to swallow mouthfuls of the poisonous sulphur water. They were compelled to throw their heads back, and even then the splash of water would enter their eyes or force its way into their nostrils.

Their long boots, filled to the tops with water, held them like lead, but they bravely strove to reach the slope, hundreds of yards distant. On they pressed, encouraged by the broken voice of their leader. Death was behind them, and their only hope lay before. David Williams, in groping through the dark, struck his head against a pillar and fell back in a faint.

Thomas Moran seized him and raised his head above the water. There was no time for delay and he was shoved along. John Jones, a weak old man, grew short of breath and gave up all hope of getting out. His companions, scarcely able themselves to battle with the waters went to his relief.

"Go on, boys," he said. "Leave me here. Let me not be the cause of the death of you all." But they would not. A dozen hands lifted him above the water. A brave effort was made and soon they found themselves on rising ground, their shoulders again above the water, and in a short time they were out on dry land.

It is thought that no deaths will result. Williams's injuries are not considered dangerous. Eleven of the men are prostrated from the shock, but will soon be about their perilous work again.

THE REVOLT SUCCESSFUL.

Report that the Government Troops Have Been Defeated in Brazil.

VALPARAISO, Chili, Nov. 14.—News has been received here to the effect that the revolt against Fonseca in the State of Rio Grande do Sul has been so far completely successful. In a fight in which 5,000 men of all arms were engaged it is reported that the government troops, under Gen. Isadoro Gonzales, were defeated and the insurgent cavalry started on a move toward the north.

Fatal Colliery Explosion.

A CLEVER SCHEME.

Arrested Forger Lumbard and His Mode of Operation.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Nov. 14.—William Lumbard, who is in custody here, had laid a plan to defraud several banks in the State out of sums varying in amounts from $3,000 to $5,000.

He claimed to be cashier of the Wheatland, Cal., bank. His method was to forge checks upon the Wheatland Bank, which he intended to deposit in the banks of this State as follows: Cattaraugus, $3,500; Poland, $3,500; New Berlin, $2,500; Attica, $3,500.

Letters were then written to local banks, stating that William Lumbard had transferred his account in one of the specified banks to this city.

When Lumbard arrived here he registered at the best hotel in the city. He presented a draft at the Susquehanna Valley Bank which was sent to Cattaraugus and returned. The police were put upon his track and shadowed him. Answers to telegrams sent in every direction proved the man to be a fraud.

In his satchel when arrested was a book containing a list of every bank in the country. He is evidently an old crook, as he refused to be photographed, and the police twisted his wrists with nippers until the blood came before he would open his eyes. His right name is believed to be Charles M. Morton.

DENIES THE CHARGE.

Admiral Brown Cables that He Gave No Information to Balmaceda.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The charge made by Chilians that Admiral Brown, the commander of the United States naval force in Chilian waters, had furnished information to Balmaceda about the landing of the Congressionalist forces to attack Valparaiso before the capture of that city by them, caused Secretary Tracy to send to Admiral Brown at Acapulco on Tuesday last a cable dispatch in which the Admiral was asked if he had furnished any such information.

The Admiral was also requested to state whether he had any Chilian refugees on board.

A reply to the dispatch received from the Admiral, who is still at Acapulco, denies that he furnished any information of the kind alluded to and states that the intention of the insurgents to land was known in Valparaiso before the landing was effected. He also states that there are no refugees on board his ship.

WILL SHE SEIZE HAWAII?

The Charleston Said to Have Gone to Honolulu for that Purpose.

SHANGHAI, Nov. 14.—A special correspondent who was sent to Canna with instructions to investigate the matters which have been causing so much uneasiness in diplomatic circles throughout Europe and the United States is now in this city, and from a high authority has been placed in possession of the fact that the United States cruiser Charleston has left these waters for Honolulu, the capital of the kingdom of Hawaii, and it is asserted here in quarters likely to know the truth or falsity of a report of this nature that the commander of the Charleston, George C. Remey, has received instruction from the United States government to seize the Hawaiian Islands should certain eventualities occur.

In addition, the correspondent has reason to believe that these facts have been cabled to the British Foreign Office and that there has been, in consequence, an exchange of dispatches between the British Admiralty and the Admiral in command of the British fleets in Chinese waters.

The Mount McGregor Cottage.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—An effort will be made at the approaching Congress to preserve intact for future generations the cottage known as the Drexel Cottage, on Mount McGregor, where Gen. Grant died. The Grand Army of the Republic will propose to Congress that the cottage and 250 acres of land which surround it, including the summer hotel, shall be purchased by the government and converted into a soldiers' sanitarium.

ROBERT RAY AGAIN

Was Hamilton Murdered and Thrown Into the River?

JEALOUSY THE ALLEGED CAUSE.

Story of a Merchant Which Sheds New Light on the Celebrated Case.

The Settlers in the Vicinity of Jackson's Lake All Believe that Hamilton Was Foully Dealt With—Only Fifteen Inches of Water Where He is Said to Have Been Drowned—Suspicious Circumstances.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Nov. 14.—Ralph Worthington, who, last September, accompanied by two sons of Andrew Carnegie, the millionaire of this city, went to Wyoming on a hunting expedition, tells a startling story in regard to the circumstances surrounding the death of Robert Ray Hamilton. Ralph Worthington is a director in the George Worthington Company, which owns the largest hardware establishment in Cleveland.

The party spent several days at Jackson's Lake, near the place where Hamilton lost his life. They visited Hamilton's residence and held several conversations with Sargent, who was the friend and employe of the dead man. Mr. Worthington also talked with the settlers living near the lake and Mormons of the Rexburg settlement.

Sargent's story of Hamilton's death and that told by some of the settlers, who declare that Hamilton was murdered through jealousy and his body thrown into the river, do not agree, and there are certain peculiar facts which would seem to warrant a fuller investigation than has yet been made, Mr. Worthington says. He declares that the reporter for a New York newspaper, who made an investigation recently, failed to reach the facts of the case. Sargent's story of the drowning as told to Mr. Worthington was as follows:

Hamilton left his lodge one day in August, 1890, to hunt antelopes on the plains 15 miles away. He shot an antelope and started home, with the carcass hung over his saddle. Night overtook him at the lower end of Jackson's Lake. Instead of camping out for the night he continued on his way and was drowned while crossing Snake River.

Mr. Worthington and his party visited the exact spot where Sargent said Hamilton was drowned. The ford was 150 feet wide and only 15 inches deep, and for 50 feet on either side of the ford the water did not reach to their horses' bellies.

It is difficult to understand how a man could drown there. The published account of the disinterment of Hamilton's body last September said that his spurs bore shreds of water grass. Mr. Worthington says that the bottom of Snake River is made up of round, white cobblestones and no water grass grows there.

The guides and hunters told Mr. Worthington that they did not believe Hamilton would have tried to find his way home after dark, as no living man could follow the faint trail after sundown, and they and the Mormons insisted that he was foully dealt with.

Worthington says that Sargent was very anxious to know what the people East think of the case, saying he had heard rumors that he (Sargent) was responsible for Hamilton's death. Sargent has a beautiful and attractive wife and two children and is still living in Hamilton's house. He is a peculiarly intelligent and refined man, says Mr. Worthington, and it is difficult to imagine why he should continue to live in that wild region.

Jackson's Lake is a paradise for hunters and fishermen, and it can be imagined a man like Hamilton, feeling keenly the disgrace that had been put on him, and longing for a place to hide himself, would chose it for a residence, but why Sargent should remain there is a mystery.

Has Almy Confessed?

PLYMOUTH, N. H., Nov. 14.—Notices have been sent to the special jurymen drawn for the purpose of trying George Abbott, alias Frank C. Almy, that they will not be needed. It was intended to try the murderer next week. The notices to the jurymen mean that the trial has been postponed or that Almy has pleaded guilty to murder and leaves to the court whether it shall be in the first or second degree. This can be done under New Hampshire's statutes.

THEIR PLANS WERE LAID

The Anarchistic Meeting Was to Have Been a Second Haymarket Affair.

CHICAGO, Nov. 14.—According to the story of Chief of Police McLaughray, the Anarchists who were arrested Thursday night had been scheming for some time to bring about a repetition of the Haymarket affair of 1886.

The Chief says: "We have known for some time that the Reds were plotting trouble, and we have had Secret service men detailed to watch them.

"These detectives discovered that at the meeting arrangements were to be made for a big mass meeting at Battery D, at which New York Anarchists were to be present and the local Anarchists were to turn out in full force. Incendiary speeches were to be made and trouble with the police to be deliberately invited.

"Then bombs were to be thrown, and the result would have been a repetition of the Haymarket affair, only the Reds would have tried to make a better showing than they did on the other occasion.

"The meetings that have been held lately have been leading up to this, but we were prepared for the outbreak and proposed to nip it in the bud.

"There will be no repetition of the scenes of 1886, I can promise you."

Not Anarchists at All.

CHICAGO, Nov. 14.—There is now proof that the police, instead of breaking up a band of plotters, scarcely and yanked to the station the stockholders and editorial force of the "Arbeiter Zeitung," a Socialistic newspaper, which has no affiliation with the Anarchists. There is also good proof that the men were armed with revolvers were not Anarchists, but men who were strangers to everybody in the saloon.

A FIGHT FOR TERRITORY.

An Important Suit Between the Governors of Iowa and Illinois.

CARTHAGE, Ill., Nov. 14.—An important suit has been brought in the United States Court by agreement of Governor Boies of Iowa and Governor Fifer of Illinois.

The suit is entitled "The State of Iowa vs. the State of Illinois," and its object is to ascertain the proper jurisdiction over a strip of territory up and down the Mississippi River between the two States.

This suit is brought by the State of Iowa in the form of a petition setting up the facts that there is a conflict of jurisdiction between Illinois and Iowa over said strip, Iowa claiming that the boundary line of said State is in the middle of the Mississippi River, irrespective of the channel, while the State of Illinois claims jurisdiction to the middle of the navigable channel, making a difference of 712 feet at a point on the Mississippi River where the Keokuk and Hamilton bridge crosses the river.

The suit grows out of a long standing legal war between Hancock County and the Keokuk and Hamilton Bridge Company in regard to taxes.

PESTILENCE IN RUSSIA.

Influenza Making Terrible Havoc Among the Famished Peasants.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 14.—Fearful stories are reported from Southern Russia of the ravages of the virulent influenza now raging there. The people are so weakened by famine that they fall easy victims to the disease, and in some of the country districts, where starvation is most general, the wretched peasantry court infection and death. Hundreds of victims are perishing daily in Odessa and other centres, and the doctors are not numerous enough to deal with a third of the patients summoning their aid.

In the villages the dead lie in many houses unburied, and with no one to bury them, until some official comes along on a belated tour of discovery, and has the corpses put into a common trench. Even the priests are shunning the pestilence, and many persons die without religious ministrations.

The Stolen Money Found.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 14.—The $450 for the theft of which from a brewery firm Collector Henry Myers was imprisoned for three months a year ago were found under a stone by some boys, where the bills were hidden, as Myers contends, by three highwaymen who robbed him. The brewers and prosecuting attorney hold that Myers himself hid the money there, expecting to get it when released from prison.

HOW IT WAS DONE

Deacon Thomas Chace and His Opium Smuggling.

HE HAD AN INNOCENT FACE

And His Winning Ways Admirably Fitted Him for Putting Out the Stuff.

Strong Evidence Against the Deacon—His Son Also Implicated—The Syndicate Whose Agent Chace is Not Yet Exposed—He Continues His Protestations of Innocence, and Says It is a Conspiracy.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—Deacon Thomas E. Chace, of Providence, who is accused of smuggling opium into this country from Canada, languishes in Ludlow street jail, being unable to obtain Bail. His case is attracting great interest.

Mr. Chace is very well known in Providence, where he has been in business all his life. His family is one of the oldest in the State and the whole town would be ready to testify to his good character if called upon. He was a partner of ex-Mayor Clark in the dye business until four years ago, when Mr. Clark died and the business was closed out. Mr. Chace realized largely on his investment in the dye works and retired with a snug fortune. It was at this time, it is said, that Mr. Chace became identified with the opium smuggling syndicate as an active agent. He has a wife, a son and two daughters who are all grown up and move in the best society.

The Treasury agents now think they know just how the smuggling was done.

The headquarters of the smuggling syndicate is in Montreal. There are four Canadians in it who have a large factory at Victoria, where the crude opium—imported from China—is refined into the product used for smoking. Several grades are made to suit the Chinese and the "white" trade. The finest grade is sold in Montreal for $8 a pound. The duty on this is $12 a pound, and the duty on the other grades is a little lower. The syndicate by getting the opium here without paying the duty has been able to undersell the regular market and to make on the average 100 per cent profit.

When Mr. Chace joined the syndicate, it is said, his innocent face and ways marked him as just the man to place the opium on the market, and agencies were established in Boston, Chicago, St. Louis and this city. The syndicate has hitherto fought shy of large sales here, because the Custom House officials have been watching closely for smuggled goods.

Mr. Chace, the Treasury agents say, has been traveling between these places disposing of the opium to the "safe" trade. He has always conducted his business personally with those who desire to buy the drug. The syndicate recently was very successful in getting a large amount of opium over the border and Mr. Chace came here with 100 pounds to sell. He had made arrangements to dispose of it in one package for $1,200. He wanted $1,500 but could not get it.

The man who had agreed to take the opium told about the smuggling to Chief Agent Wilbur. The story made a great stir in the Custom House. It was the information that the inspectors had been seeking for months, and the plans were laid that led to the arrest.

Evidence is also accumulating that Chace's son is incriminated in the smuggling.

Mr. Chace continues to protest his innocence. Yesterday he said: "There is nothing in this charge against me, and I will be discharged when the facts are heard. I am not a smuggler and my family has been disgraced. My reputation, which had been without stain for 60 years, is gone. I am poor and cannot give bail. This thing is a conspiracy."

NEW YORK NEWS IN BRIEF.

The Tilden estate is said to owe Westchester County $300,000 for taxes, with interest thereon for 18 months. The county will force a settlement.

FOUND IN HIS TRUNK.

A Counterfeiting Outfit That May Make Trouble for a Pair.

BROCTON, Mass., Nov. 14.—The arrest of Mrs. Boulivette, on a criminal charge, her accuser being Dr. Ira Richmond, who has been her partner in business, is expected to develop some sensational features.

They established the partnership in Paterson, N. J., some sixteen months ago, and the two carried on business in Brooklyn, N. Y., up to last June, when they came to Brocton.

Business became dull here, and the doctor a few days ago went to Brooklyn, where he engaged apartments and then sent for Mrs. Boulivette to come and bring all their goods.

This she refused to do, and on the return of Dr. Richmond she declined to give up his trunks unless he paid her $1,500 that she had advanced him in their business. Richmond then had her arrested, and he is detained as a witness.

The police, acting upon a number of stories they had heard of the practices of the pair, opened Dr. Richmond's trunks.

In one of them was found a counterfeiting outfit consisting of 26 moulds used in making $20 and $10 gold and $1 silver pieces; a forge, bellows, heater, iron flask, packages of composition, two large and four small crucibles, four bars of metal and several boxes of iron, zinc, tin and other metals.

The doctor disclaims all knowledge of these articles, and declares that Mrs. Boulivette put them in his trunk to injure him.

He claims to be a physician of 25 years' standing, and a graduate of the New York Medical College.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—Look for the lunar eclipse to-night.

—New Market is oh-ing for electric lights.

—Joe English secured 16 pledge-signers last night.

—Look in VanEmburgh & White's show window this evening.

—The Elizabeth Republicans have renominated Rankin for mayor.

—Important changes appear in the Central railroad time-table published to-day.

—Ensigns Dunham and Hunter will lead a jubilee meeting of the Salvation Army to-night.

—Services will be held at the German church, North Plainfield, Wednesday evening at 7:45.

—The admirable management of Hotel del Coronado is one of the reasons for the great popularity of that famous resort.

—VanEmburgh & White say that they have received two hundred more of those fine lamps and will sell them at the same price as the others were sold at—ninety-nine cents.

—The Hackettstown Gazette asserts that its town can turn out as good a team of five men at ten-pin bowling as there is in the State. There's a chance for a challenge from the Crescents.

—A novel Sunday evening service will be held in the Congregational church to-morrow, at half-past 7. The topic will be "The Contributions of Missions to Science and Human Well-Being". Papers will be presented on the contributions of missions to geography, archæology, ethnology, and to human well-being through commerce, literature, national regeneration and individual lives.

—The Art Amateur for the current month has an unusually rich array of illustrative material. Of the numerous color-plates, one of Helen Maguire's inimitable studies of kittenhood is admirable; and a bold treatment of waterlilies, by Maude Stumm, is remarkable for its vigor and breadth of treatment. In the department of "The House" are several first-rate papers, one on "A Young Lady's Bedroom", illustrated, being beautiful as well as practicable.

—"The Thanksgiving Dinner" is described and discussed authoritatively by Mrs. Barrington in November Table Talk. This competent authority on cooking tells just the kind of a dinner to give and how to prepare it. The housekeeper's inquiry department is replete with information concerning the culinary art. Mrs. Barrington tells how to utilize the pumpkin and its near relatives; Mrs. Forney discourses toilets, and a Spanish lady writes about Spanish recipes. There are several other articles of interest in the number.

THE MALE CASE ENDED.

It Now Remains Only for the Vice-Chancellor to Give His Decision.

The opposing counsel occupied eight hours of the vice-chancellor's time, yesterday, in argument over the famous Job Male will contest.

The case now is closed, and it only remains for the court to give a decision. This may not be rendered in many weeks. The point raised by corporation counsel Marsh is a new one in this State, and a most difficult and important one to settle. The court will therefore be very deliberate in reaching a conclusion.

CRESCENTS FOUGHT HARD.

And Had Brett Bowled as Well as VanEmburgh, Plainfield Would Have Won.

The crack bowlers who style themselves the Ivanhoes scored another victory over the Plainfield Crescents last night. In a previous game they won by 91 points. Last night this margin was cut down to 62.

The game was quite exciting, as a study of the score by frames will show. The teams ran very close together, the Crescents leading half of the time. The score was tied, in the sixth frame, and almost tied again in the eighth. VanEmburgh was high man of the evening, even running ahead of king bowler Seilken of the visitors. The score:

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Mayor Gilbert has accepted an invitation to take part in the Joe English meeting at Reform Hall to-morrow evening.

Funeral services over the remains of the late James Farley, hackman, who died, at the age of 37 years, yesterday, will be held at his late residence, 138 West Front street, to-morrow afternoon at 1:30, and at St. Mary's church at 2.

United States Senator John R. McPherson is a true friend to the soldier. Many a soldier's widow is grateful to him for his interest in their behalf in adjustment of their claims for pension, and in the securement of an early settlement of the same.

Miss Alice Azeez, a very engaging young woman whose native home is Beyrout, will lecture, in her native costume, in the W. C. T. U. rooms, next Monday evening at 8, on "Syria, and the Customs and Manners of the Mohammedans". After the lecture she will exhibit oriental curiosities.

The letter of acceptance of Theodore F. Miller, as a candidate for the office of councilman from the Third ward, in place of J. P. Homan, declined, was filed to-day with those of the other candidates for office on the Citizens' ticket. In times past, Mr. Miller has been before the people of his ward for their suffrages, and ought this time to be elected. He is in every way worthy of their vote.

A charming afternoon tea and conversazione was given at the home of Mrs. Helwig, East Front street, yesterday afternoon. Among the guests were Mrs. Chas. Corwin, W. Corwin, Miss Martha Borum, Miss Augustine Lissignolo, Miss Bertha Schucher of Westfield, Miss Juliet Murray, Miss Trotty Smith, Miss Louise Beguelin, Miss Leila Howard, Miss Margaret Simpson and Miss Leila Cruikshank.

More Hose for the Borough.

The borough council of North Plainfield decided last night to buy 800 feet more of hose, which will make the number of feet available 2,000. Councilman Hegeman protested that the funds were too low to warrant the purchase. Councilman Sebring advocated running in debt for it. Mr. Hegeman was opposed to jeopardizing the credit of the borough. His vote was the only one against the purchase. Councilman Powell voted with Mr Sebring. Mayor Place was the only other member of the council present. After settling the hose question the council went into executive session.

Commuters Delayed.

The locomotive drawing train No. 36 was disabled just after leaving the North avenue station this morning, by breaking the rods on both sides of the engine. Most of the passengers walked back to the station, which was only three blocks back, and took the next train.

—Hear Mr. Crain at the Y. M. C. A. meeting to-morrow afternoon at 4:15.

Oh, What a Cough!

—Will you heed the warning. The signal perhaps of the sure approach of that more terrible disease, Consumption. Ask yourselves if you can afford for the sake of saving 50c, to run the risk and do nothing for it. We know from experience that Shiloh's Cure will cure your cough. It never fails. This explains why more than a Million Bottles were sold the past year. It relieves croup and whooping cough at once. Mothers, do not be without it. For lame back, side or chest, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by J. G. Miller, No. 10 East Front street, Plainfield, N. J.

THE SOUTH RIVER MURDER MYSTERY.

[SPECIAL DISPATCH TO THE PRESS.]

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Nov. 14.—Detectives have established beyond all doubt that the two-year-old child of Patrick Bagley was murdered at South River some weeks ago. The body was disinterred near the hut this morning at South River where the Bagley family lived. The body was badly decomposed. The whereabouts of Patrick Bagley and his wife are unknown, but detectives are on their track.

NORTH PLAINFIELD'S PROPHETIC MAYOR.

His Doctrine Was Sound, His Wisdom Good: 'Tis Bound Brook Is at Fault.

"Thursday's World"—says the Bound Brook Democrat—"paid us quite a complimentary tribute in regard to our form of government, and it is not far from being right! Tax bills have come, and with them some sour faces of borough advocates. The doctrine of mayor Place from North Plainfield has been proved false. Taxes have considerably increased, and our roads are in the same old condition. The surveying of our streets has so far been a farce. Now, gentlemen, who is to blame for this? the people who voted for, or those who voted against the borough? The Taxpayers' ticket at the time of the election met with defeat and why? Because the cattle were driven in to vote! Now, the same cattle will have to pay higher rent for their stalls and now they kick—of course! The people in Westfield (which has no woolen mill) have rejected a form of borough government, because they can do better without it! All we ask our citizens is, Where is the grand improvement which was promised to us by the eloquent speaker from North Plainfield? Is high taxation the only thing in this direction that can be shown? Alas!"

Paderewski.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—For the benefit of the musical people of Plainfield, I wish to say a few words in regard to the above pianist. For one hour and a-half, Thursday afternoon, I listened to the greatest piano playing of the present time. His execution is perfect. His runs are as smooth as velvet and as clear as crystal, even in the finest pianissimo. The tremendous power displayed by him brings forth orchestral effects seldom heard on the piano. Through his entire playing can be discerned Leschetizky's wonderful pedal effects.

In fact, in Paderewski can be found all of the qualities of a truly great pianist—genius, talent technique, and power.

His first concert takes place Tuesday evening, November 17, with Damrosch's orchestra. Hear him, and I'll guarantee that you will agree with me in calling him the greatest pianist ever heard in this country.

Painful Accident to a Commuter.

W. L. Titsworth, of 39 East Fifth street, was painfully injured on a Jersey Central ferry boat last evening. While waiting for the gates to open, in the Communipaw slip, his foot got under the heavy wooden bar that projects from the slip over the deck, and when a swell raised the boat the foot was submitted to a fearful pressure. Luckily none of the bones were crushed, but the flesh was ground to a pulp, and the injury will cripple the sufferer some time.

The Business Outlook.

Edsall reports that there is every prospect of a large increase in trade in Plainfield this winter. Already he has been obliged to put on extra help in order to meet the increasing demand, and will soon put on more.

Every year the citizens of Plainfield are more content to do their shopping at home. This certainly speaks well for the home merchants.

Good Nominations.

The Democrats of Elizabeth have made the following nominations: For mayor, Frederick L. Heidritter; for councilman-at-large, Patrick J. Ryan; for chosen freeholders, John J. Donohue, Charles H. Moore, John S. Sauer, Wm. H. Trehan. These are excellent nominations, and as the Democrats have at least 1,000 majority in the city, the candidates should be elected by handsome majorities.

Water-Works Injunction.

A writ has been served on the Plainfield Water-works company announcing that an injunction has been applied for by Attorney-General Stockton, to restrain the company from doing business, because of its failure to pay the license-tax of $250 for 1890. The writ is returnable at Trenton, Nov. 24.

A Lively Sight at Ripleyville.

Westfield was in gala attire yesterday, the occasion being the visit to Westfield of Governor Abbett, for the purpose of presenting to Empire Engine company the silver trumpet lately won by it at the Holy Trinity church fair. The event was was one of the most brilliant in the town's history. At the fair, which closed last Friday evening, after a four days' run, more than $1,000 was cleared for the benefit of the energetic little church that held it. A total sum of $524 40 was voted by the firemen's friends, on the trumpet to be awarded to the most popular fire company in town. Empire Engine company received 2,667 votes, being the greatest number cast for any one of the three contesting companies.

The Governor was met at the station last evening, on his arrival, by the entire fire department in full uniform, and by a reception committee consisting of the Rev. Father J. P. Smith, Geo. W. Peek, C. B. Peddle, and L. G. Cohen, jr. These, led by the Plainfield Cornet band, escorted the Governor to Arcanum Hall, where the presentation took place. At the same time the "Star of the West", the cannon made famous by its connection with the vessel of the same name fired on at the opening of the Civil War, thundered forth welcome to the Governor in a salute of thirteen guns. Illuminations and decorations marked the route of the procession from the station to the hall.

Dr. Chauncey B. Ripley, an honored resident of the town, and one of the best and most widely-known citizens of New Jersey, presided and in an able speech presented the Governor to the large audience assembled.

Governor Abbett then presented the trumpet to the engine company with apt words.

Immediately after the exercises, in Etta Hall, there was served a banquet, of which Governor Abbett and hundreds of other invited guests partook.

A Feast for the Eyes, a Delight for Those Who Drive.

People who pass along Somerset street are afforded a feast for the eyes in the magnificent assortment of carriages that is exhibited by L. M. French in his elegant repository. Through the glass front of the ground story is seen a most complete stock of vehicles for fall and winter use, and the temptation to go in and buy is almost resistless. There are so many fine things that it is hard to choose just what one likes best. Mr. French is doing a big business, as he cannot help doing with such a completely-stocked emporium.

"A GOD-SEND is Ely's Cream Balm. I had catarrh for three years. Two or three times a week my nose would bleed. I thought the sores would never heal. Your Balm has cured me."—Mrs. M. A. Jackson, Portsmouth, N. H.

I was so much troubled with catarrh it seriously affected my voice. One bottle of Ely's Cream Balm did the work. My voice is fully restored.—H. F. Lloyder, A. M., pastor of the Olivet Baptist Church, Philadelphia, Pa.

—Cash is what tells. Do you intend spending any of yours for shoe leather? If you do, go direct to Sherwin's. That's the way he does business. $2 and $2 50 will buy shoes that will surprise you.

—Services for the coming week at the First Baptist church are as follows, each at 8 p. m.: Monday, the Bible normal class; Wednesday, the regular church prayer meeting; Friday, prayer meeting of the Young People's league.

—A dispatch came from Elizabeth to Plainfield late last night asking the police to arrest two suspicious characters who refused to leave the choose of a freight train. Policemen Fredericksen, Kiely and Mattox captured the fellows, one of whom was a veritable giant. This morning officer Decker of Elizabeth interviewed the men, thinking that they were culprits "wanted" for assaulting railroad men. As they were not the persons he was looking for, they were released.

Judge Aldrich of the Massachusetts Supreme Court refused to review the proceedings of the secretary of immigration in the cases of the imported German musicians at Boston and they will have to go back to Germany.

The Report Denied.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—An authoritative denial is made at the Navy Department of the published statement that Admiral Gherardi has been ordered to Chili, and to relieve Admiral Brown of the command of the Pacific Station. It is said that Admiral Gherardi is under orders to cruise in the West Indies, where he will be joined by the Concord; that the Atlanta is to go to Rio, and that no other orders to vessels have been issued.

COMBINE VERSUS COMBINE.

THE BOSSES OF ELIZABETH AND PLAINFIELD AGAINST THE BIG 6.

Some Extracts From a New York Paper's Interviews That Throw Much Light on the Rise and Progress of Certain Councilmanic Deals.

So celebrated has become the fight between the Big 6 of Plainfield's council and the Republican bosses of Elizabeth and Plainfield, that the New York World avails this morning devotes over a column to the matter. From it are reprinted the following extracts:

The city of Plainfield is on the verge of one of the liveliest political conflicts in its history.

The famous "Big Six", who have been doing pretty much as they pleased in the common council for the past two years, and their opponents, the Republicans, have both nominated candidates for councilmen in all the wards and for the city at large. The issue is the "Big Six".

The Republicans have thrown down the gauntlet, and the "Big Six" are determined to fight the battle out on that line. The election will be held Tuesday, Dec. 1.

The issue of the campaign was developed two years ago. The city is conceded to be nominally Republican by about 400 majority. In 1889 the council stood seven Republicans and four Democrats. Then came a split in the Republican ranks. "Uncle Dan" Roberts, one of the Republicans, aspired to be president of the council, it is said, and his fellow-Republicans refused to confer on him that honor. It was no-to-g before he and S. G. Smith joined hands with the four Democrats and with the majority thus gained proceeded to run the council.

That was how the "Big Six" came into existence. All their work was done in concert, and when they decided on a certain measure they quietly introduced it into the council and passed it without discussion.

At the time that Roberts and Smith deserted their Republican colleagues in the council, alderman Moffett, one of the Democrats, was elected president of that body, and Joseph B. Coward, a Republican, was elected city clerk. Coward still holds his position. Roberts's enemies claim that he secured Coward's election because he was under some obligation to the latter, while it is openly asserted on the other side that Coward was appointed through a deal with postmaster Elias R. Pope, who is now one of the leaders of the opposition to the "Big Six".

The street railway franchise question came up about a year ago. The opponents to the "Big Six" went into the courts after the franchise was granted and obtained an injunction. The matter is still pending. Then came the water and sewerage questions. The opposition continued vigorous. When the water contract was awarded there was a great outcry. The Plainfield Water Supply company, which had an old charter, wanted the contract. They did n't get it, however, and they took the matter into the courts. Mayor Gilbert, a Republican, vetoed the measure, but it is still unsettled.

Postmaster Pope was seen at his office in the post-office yesterday afternoon.

"Yes;"—he said in reply to the reporter's inquiries—"the issue of the campaign is so far the 'Big Six'. They have done as they pleased in the council, and in my opinion the people are up in arms against them. There will be other issues, but it is hard to say just now what they are, though it is certain that the water and sewerage questions will be important factors. I think the combine will be defeated. They have transacted the business of the city regardless of the views of their fellow-members in the council and have forced the issue by their high-handed methods."

Councilman Spangenberg, the leader of the "Big Six", was seen at his office in New York.

"We are willing", he said, "to stand on the issue the Republicans have made. We have a combine, but it was formed in the interests of the city and to destroy the influence of the old 'ring' which had been running the city.

"Two years ago I had no idea of accepting a public office. One morning I was waiting in the Plainfield station for a train when H. E. Bowen, a Republican, who lives in the same ward as I do, approached me and said that if the Democrats put up a good man in the Second Ward he would be elected. The ring had been spending plenty of money in the centre of the city, but the outskirts were neglected. That was why the Republicans in my ward were aroused. Bowen ask me if we had a good Democrat, and I told him he was speaking to one. I afterwards told a number of Democrat what Bowen had said, and at a caucus they persuaded me to accept the nomination.

"I was elected, though the ward is Republican. Bowen, however, did not keep his promise to me to work for my election. I was elected on the high license and street railway issues and a promise to see that my ward was protected. When the council was organized Roberts and Smith, who, like myself, represented districts which demanded attention, found they could get nothing from the old ring. We were anxious to treat all parts of the city fairly, and the only way to do it was to annihilate the ring. We decided to throw aside politics, and Roberts and Smith joined us in the interests of the city. We defy our critics to show where we have done a single thing that was not perfectly honest. We have stood firmly together in our resolution to work only for the city.

"One of the Republicans on the other side came here to my office and offered me inducements to leave the combine and thus turn the tables. I old him that I was a man of my word and that I intended to stand by the combination we had made. The man who did that pushed the water contract awarded to the Plainfield Supply company because a relative of his is interested in it. He and his colleagues are also anxious to bond the city and if they could get the upper hand they would put a debt of $700,000 on the town. I do not hesitate to say that if it were not us for they would have the city floundering in the throes of bankruptcy by this time.

"As to the water and sewerage contracts we awarded them as we did because an actual saving was secured to the city. The contracts if given to separate parties would have involved a large expense. The Plainfield Supply company was anxious to secure the water contract, because it would then be sure of the work of flushing the sewers, an expense that would be very great. The company wanted the contract on a charter which was granted them in the days of special legislation. In the recent court proceedings that matter was decided in favor of the city. Instead of aiding us to promote the welfare of the city, our opponents have done all in their power to block our way and thereby injure the city. The people demanded a street railroad, a water supply and a sewerage system. Yet in the face of that sentiment these would-be reformers have stopped the work by injunctions and other methods. We are not afraid to go before the people on what we have done, and we believe that the popular verdict will be in our favor. As to my statements about a Republican councilman trying to get me to join the opposition and the other matters I have mentioned, I am ready to substantiate every word.

"Another matter I desire to bring out", continued the councilman, "is the appointment of Mr. Coward as city clerk. That appointment was made at the instigation of Elias R. Pope, who is trying to lead the Republicans against us. He denied it afterwards, but was confronted in his office by witnesses and he had to admit it."

A RIGHTEOUS INDICTMENT.

Mayor Place Sharply Scores Borough Residents for Maintaining Wretched Sidewalks.

The following communication from Mayor Place was presented to the North Plainfield borough council last night and referred to the committee on streets for action:

To the Borough Council:—For several weeks past, much complaint has been made to me that residents of the borough, in certain locations, are allowing their board sidewalks to remain in a dangerous condition. It is only a few weeks ago that one of our residents, Mrs. Geo. Giddis, died of an injury received from walking over a dilapidated board walk. As a matter of law, every resident who maintains a dangerous sidewalk is liable in damages for all personal injuries sustained. It would be well if a test case at some time could be brought, by some one injured, to show residents who with impunity and knowingly maintain dangerous walks that they must take the consequences and suffer the penalty therefor. Every resident can keep his sidewalk in good condition. If he fails to do so, he should be made to comply strictly with the ordinance.

I am aware that there is no money available, in the hands of the council, to repair these broken, neglected walks. The owners of the property, or the occupants where these dangerous walks exist, pay little attention, in many instances, to the request of the street committee to repair them. Such being the case, it is the duty of this council—and I believe the councilmen will agree with me—to transfer from some other fund temporarily the money necessary for such purpose, if it can be done, and cause these old dilapidated board walks to be put in a passable condition. It is equally important to have our sidewalks in good condition as it is to have the roads in good condition, for where scores use the roads hundreds use the sidewalks. It is an injury to the borough that so many of its residents neglect to keep their board walks in repair. In many places they have become a positive intolerable nuisance, and the borough authorities are blamed for their condition. In my judgment there devolves upon this council no more important duty than to enforce the sidewalk ordinance. Section 1 of that ordinance, passed Oct. 5, 1885, reads in part: "In default of such owners doing such work (or paving or laying sidewalks) themselves, after such [30 days] notice, the same shall be caused to be done by the mayor and council of said borough, at the cost and expense of such owners." Now, if residents fail to do their duty in this matter, let the council pass an ordinance—which it has the power to do under the borough act—prohibiting within certain districts the laying of board walks, and compel property-owners to lay flagging instead. I believe the time has come when the people of the borough are ready to demand that such action be taken, for their safety and comfort in passing over the streets of the borough. If this condition of things be allowed to continue, one of the principal reasons for creating our borough will be defeated. I trust this matter will receive your careful consideration, and that such action be taken by this council as the case demands. CHAS. PLACE, Mayor.

The Result of Merit.

When anything stands a test of fifty years among a discriminating people like the Americans, it is pretty good evidence that there is merit somewhere. The value of a medicine is best proved by its continued use from year to year by the same persons and families, as well as by a steady increasing sale. Few, if any, medicines have met with such continued success and popularity as has marked the introduction and progress of BRANDRETH'S PILLS, which, after a trial of over fifty years, are conceded to be the safest and most effective purgative and blood purifier introduced to the public.

That this is the result of merit, and that BRANDRETH'S PILLS actually perform all that is claimed for them, is conclusively proved by the fact that those who regard them with the greatest favor are those who have used them the longest.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold in every drug and medicine store, either plain or sugar coated.

They return to Plainfield at the conclusion of the services.

Settling the VanZandt Estate.

The widow of the late Thaddeus Avery VanZandt has applied for her right of one-third of her deceased husband's estate. When a man dies and leaves a bequest to his widow in lieu of dower the widow has the legal right to decide whether shall take the bequest or dower. Mrs. VanZandt claims the right of dower, and will receive that instead of the bequest in the will.

"Wiesenthen."

"Wiesenthen", the charming German salon piece, which G. E. Hasselmann will play between the acts of the Four Leaf Clover's entertainment at Holy Cross parish building next Tuesday evening, is one of the sweetest works of the composer Gueiker, and was considered by him his best composition. Mr. Hasselmann first played it at a concert in Bremen in 1884, at which the composer was present, and Gueiker was so pleased with the rendering of the work that he presented the manuscript copy to the pianist, as a token of regard, and it is from this autograph copy that Mr. Hasselmann will play Tuesday evening. As to the rest of the programme, it will be an uncommonly attractive one. There is to be vocal and instrumental music by Herbert Schutt, William Holmes and Edward Waring, and a story of domestic life in the olden time told by William L. Saunders.

In the plays themselves the Four Leaf Clover will be ably assisted by William Holmes, George Wetervelt and Miss Ad Bartlitt. The first play, "The Curate", written by George Taggart, will lead the Clover into rather a new field for them, but the other piece, "Second Sight", will bring them back to the sort of comedy in which their former successes have been made, and it is almost safe to predict that the audience will be glad this play is in two acts so they may have a chance to recover their breath during the intermission.

—County engineer F. A. Dunham, of this city, has been called on to criticize the condition of some of the streets in Elizabeth, which he does with much decision and thoroughness. In a communication to his questioners he points out the many defects of the thoroughfares, and tells how to remedy them.

All the druggists sell the Tudor Whiskey. Some of the other dealers do not. They say it pays too small a profit. PURE whiskey never does yield a large profit. It is the adulterated stuff which makes the money. Do you want to pay your dealer an exorbitant profit on an adulterated article, or do you prefer genuine old Whiskey which is sold at a moderate profit? Decide for yourselves. The TUDOR WHISKEY is WARRANTED ABSOLUTELY PURE and TEN YEARS OLD.

THE KAISER'S BEARD.

The Wind No Longer Blows Through His Whiskers.

To Placate His Better Half the German Emperor Sacrifices His Hirsute Appendage—A Birthday Gift of Rare Value.

An unusual interest is being taken by Emperor William's subjects in the beard which he has been raising since his visit to England. During the growth of this hirsute appendage there has been dismay among Berlin photographers and portrait-sellers, whose incomes have been materially lessened by the emperor's refusal to have his picture taken and supplied to the trade until he considered his facial adornment sufficiently advanced. That stage has now been reached, and the Germans generally agree that the new departure is quite becoming to their youthful ruler.

Hrrdly had our artist finished the bewhiskered picture of the erratic kaiser when the news came over the cable that the august potentate had sacrificed his facial adornment to please his loving spouse. This leads the Chicago News to make the following pertinent remarks:

"After having patiently and laboriously grown a full beard, guarding its stubby adolescence from the shots of the photographers and the jests of the irreverent wits of the fatherland, after changing the authentic portrait of his royal highness from a mustachioed prince to a bewhiskered bravo, the emperor of Germany has gone and got a clean shave." Naturally this portentous event has set the Atlantic cable in a great commotion.

"It appears that in honor of the birthday of the empress, William dropped around to his barber's, arranged the little misunderstanding that existed between him and the man with the razor and then was shaved in a highly satisfactory manner. Next he called on the empress to wish her many happy returns and to present his absence of whiskers to her as a birthday gift. The empress, according to the correspondent, who must have witnessed the meeting, was surprised and delighted to see her William with a smoothly-polished chin.

"These sudden and violent changes on so grave a state question as the policy of growing imperial whiskers or cutting them off are very dangerous to the peace of Europe. William has laid himself liable to the suspicion that he is trying to get up so much excitement among his subjects that they will rise in arms and clamor for war as a relief from their nervous strain."

EMPEROR WILLIAM BEWHISKERED.

HARD TO FIND.

Mr. Richmann (a rural philanthropist)—Wall, you see, it's this way. I get interested in the young feller while visitin' at the jail, an' felt I'd like ter help him ter start fresh an' earn an honest livin'.

Country Editor—Of course.

Mr. Richmann—Yes. Give every man a chance, I say. Wall, I feel purty sure this young feller is a nat'ral born thief, an' I thought I'd better start him where there wouldn't be anything to steal.—N. Y. Weekly.

CLOUDS IN THE WAY

Scientists Had Hard Work on the Lunar Eclipse.

NEW YORKERS DISAPPOINTED.

Observations Made With Satisfactory Results at Amherst College.

Curious and Unexplained Phenomena Seen at Princeton—Occultations of Ten Small Stars Secured at Allegheny—Rochester Caught Only a Glimpse—Eclipse Parties Along the Hudson River Disappointed.

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—Great disappointment was expressed in this part of the country last night at the almost total failure of the elaborate arrangements made to observe the total lunar eclipse. The clouds stretching over portions of the section were impenetrable. Prof. Boss only caught a few glimpses of the first contact at Albany. But, as our despatches show, the conditions were much more favorable in New England. Professor Todd made observations with very satisfactory results at Amherst College, where the sky was cloudless until the moon began to emerge from the shadow.

PROF. YOUNG'S WORK.

Curious and Unexplained Phenomena Seen at Princeton.

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 16.—During the total eclipse of the moon, Prof. Young, the well-known Princeton astronomer, had planned to make a series of careful observations of the occultations of the smaller stars by the moon. These occultations, or, as they might be called, eclipses of the stars by the moon, furnish the most accurate data obtainable for calculating the position and diameter of the moon, and the sets of observations taken simultaneously in widely different sections, as in Europe and America, give the best means of accurately determining the earth's distance from the moon.

These occultations are rarely visible even with a telescope except in the time of an eclipse, and last evening, if the air had been clear, thirty-four would have been observable in the great twenty-three-inch refractor of Princeton, owing to the numerous light clouds, none of them could be observed, and so this part of the work could not be done, but during the periods when the moon's face was visible through the clouds a very curious and as yet unexplained phenomenon was observed, namely, that the Eastern part of the great satellite's face was exceedingly darker than the Western part. To what cause this may be due Prof. Young was unable to state last evening.

Occultations of Ten Small Stars.

ALLEGHENY OBSERVATORY, ALLEGHENY, Pa., Nov. 16.—Occultations of small stars in the path of the eclipsed moon were observed here during the total eclipse, at the request of the observatory at Dorpat, in Russia. Owing to the low altitude of the moon and the sky only about ten stars could be observed in a programme containing thirty. The object of the observations was to determine with precision the diameter of the moon.

"Eclipse Parties" Disappointed.

NYACK, N. Y., Nov. 16.—Many large gatherings, termed "eclipse parties," were held in Rockland county last night to witness the eclipse of the moon. All had astronomical instruments and charts, and some were stationed on the high mountains. The spectacle proved a failure on account of the heavy clouds, and hundreds of people along the Hudson River were disappointed.

Only a Glimpse at Rochester.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 16.—The sky was densely clouded during the entire evening, with rain at a quarter past eight o'clock. Not a single phase of the total lunar eclipse was visible from the Warren Observatory save a momentary glimpse after the fourth contact.

A Good View in Boston.

BOSTON, Nov. 16.—The sky here last evening was cloudless and thousands of persons had a good view of the eclipse of the moon.

Big Railroad Strike Threatened.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 16.—A strike is threatened on the entire South Pacific system, from New Orleans to San Francisco. The trainmen are still making efforts to have the engineers and firemen join in some demand, so that should a strike be ordered, the entire system would be tied up. The men demand a material increase in pay. First their petitions were presented to the division superintendents, who refused to accede to their demands. They appealed to General Superintendent Van Vleck and he declined to accede. This afternoon the committee will have a conference with General Manager Kruttschnitt. If he refuses their demands they will either appeal to C. P. Huntingdon or order a general strike.

The Drexel–Irick Wedding.

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 16.—All the invitations to attend the wedding of George W. Childs Drexel and Miss Mary Irick have been recalled. The wedding will take place in Vincentown this week, but instead of being an elaborate and brilliant affair will be witnessed only by relatives of the couple. The ceremony was to have occurred last Thursday, but the illness of Miss Irick caused it to be postponed.

Paul is Insane.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 16.—John P. Paul, who jumped his bail in Chicago, was arrested here last night. He acted in a peculiar manner and a committee of police surgeons who examined him, pronounced him insane. He was committed to the county hospital.

DR. M'GLYNN'S REPLY.

He Refers to the Pope's Letter and Creates a Sensation.

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—Dr. Edward McGlynn addressed a large audience at Cooper Union last night on the admissions made by the Pope in his recent letter on the condition of labor, and in conclusion, made the following remarks, which created a sensation among his hearers:

"I intended on next Sunday to talk about the remedies proposed by the Pope. But something serious has happened during the week. The newspapers, by aid of the press associations and on the authority of the Archbishop of the Diocese of New York and what he has alleged to have received in a letter from the Propaganda, have made me the subject of a great deal of attention. I am not sorry, however, that the matter has again been precipitated. I shall come prepared on Sunday next to say what I have to say.

"I am the 'unfrocked priest' and on certain conditions can get my frock back. I still have my frock, so that is not true. I use it as a dressing gown at home. It is my own and I paid for it, and if an attempt was made to take it away from me I could say, I defy you under the American flag.

"Is it bad theology to call me an ex-priest. According to strict theology I am to be a priest for all eternity, whether in heaven or in hell. If I were called to Rome I could wear my old frock or buy a new one and no one could say me nay. But I will not anticipate. I will come next week with the retraction I am prepared to make."

With these defiant words the excommunicated priest bade his hearers good night amid deafening applause.

MURDERER ALMY'S TRIAL.

He Will Probably be Taken to Plymouth, N. H., This Evening.

PLYMOUTH, N. H., Nov. 16.—The counsel of Murderer Almy, Hon. A. Burleigh, says he does not know when Almy will be brought here, as the matter rested entirely with High Sheriff Brigham. He added that the defense would produce several witnesses at the trial, but refused to say how many.

Deputy Sheriff McCoy is of the opinion that Almy will arrive here shortly after five this afternoon and be taken to the court house, where he will remain during the trial. Everything is practically in readiness for the trial.

A Gang of Safe Blowers Arrested.

CHICAGO, Nov. 16.—The largest and most successful arrest of a well organized gang of safe blowers and jail breakers known in the city's history was made last night. Thirteen men were arrested in the basement at the Gault House, corner of Clinton and West Madison streets, and this number was supplemented by the arrest of six more in a room at No. 96 West Jackson street. Two of the men arrested are wanted for breaking the St. Louis jail.

Paying the Sugar Bounty Slowly.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 16.—The work of paying the sugar bounty on sugar produced in Louisiana is going on slowly, only $182,550 having been provided for thus far. Of this $32,723 goes to one planter, Leon Godchaux. Some of the sugar manufactured by the old fashioned open kettle system is found to fall below the 80 per cent. limit, and will, therefore, receive no bounty.

Accidentally Shot His Mother.

LONDON, Nov. 16. — Thomas Reeves, an Englishman who recently arrived at Liverpool from New Orleans, brought home with him a revolver. When his mother and other relatives called to see him, Reeves displayed the revolver as an American curiosity. The mother unfortunately inspected the weapon too closely, and it exploded, injuring her fatally. Reeves is wild with grief.

Dom Pedro Ready to Return.

PARIS, Nov. 16.—The newspapers here say that Brazil has been officially notified that the Ex-emperor Dom Pedro has made a statement that he is ready to return to Brazil, having seen with profound grief the tendencies of the country to dismemberment, if the nation wishes him to return, and desires his presence among them.

NEW YORK NEWS IN BRIEF.

A son was born to Mr. and Mrs. John Jacob Astor, jr., of New York, yesterday.

William G. Schenck, proprietor of the Westminster Hotel, New York, died yesterday of heart failure. His death was sudden and unexpected.

George F. Ellis, aged 60, an employe of the Hudson River Railroad Company, at West Albany, has been missing from that place for over a week.

State Senator Gilbert A. Deane is critically ill at his home in Copake. Last week he had a stroke of apoplexy, and yesterday a consultation of doctors was held.

Rev. Dr. Charles A. Briggs preached yesterday in New York on the Middle State, to the congregation of the West Presbyterian Church. He said that immediate sanctification at death he did not believe in.

THE WATER FAMINE

Great Suffering in New York and Connecticut.

ALARM IN THE METROPOLIS.

Water in Croton Lake Was Never Before So Low.

Many of the Feeders Dried Up—The People in Hartford Drinking From a Polluted Stream—Mills Shut Down and Hundreds Thrown Out of Employment—Only an Early Rain Can Prevent Intense Suffering.

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—Another day has passed without any prospect of averting the water famine with which New York is eminently threatened. All the officials connected with the Croton Aqueduct Department agree that the storage reservoir and all the sources of supply are so far depleted that by to-morrow the scarcity will be acutely felt in the higher portion of the city and that within a week at the utmost the mains will be absolutely dry.

Never in its history has the city been called upon to face so appalling a danger. Water sufficient for drinking and ordinary household purposes might possibly be procured for a short time from pumps and artesian wells, but in the absence of an ample supply at the hydrants the fire department would become helpless and the very existence of the city become threatened on the outbreak of a serious fire.

Even under the most favorable circumstances the water supply in some portions of the city is normally so low that it is with the utmost difficulty that the engines can be kept at work, and it is to this cause that several of the most serious conflagrations of recent years are attributed.

The farms and villages in Putnam and Westchester counties are suffering with New York from the lack of water. Wells and springs and brooks and ponds have dried up.

In and about Croton Falls, Brewster's, Carmel and Sodom, the farmers are carting water in milk cans and barrels to supply their cattle. At Brewster's Shove and Baxter, the liverymen, carry water from the river for sixty horses, and the landlord of the house has to supply his house the same way. The few springs that have not dried up are visited by neighbors from all around.

AN ALARMING SITUATION.

The Water Famine Causing Great Suffering in Connecticut.

HARTFORD, Conn., Nov. 16.—The six months' drought in Connecticut is still unbroken. It is the severest one in the history of the State. City reservoirs are almost empty, and wells are low. Even in the depths of the forests, streams and springs have dried up that never failed before, and there is no water in swamps and swabs.

Hartford's three or four reservoirs were exhausted weeks ago, and since the people must have water they have to use the polluted water from the shrunken channel of the Connecticut River.

The public is alarmed on account of the impure stuff they have to drink, and there have been numerous cases of diphtheria already. It is known that swiftly running water purifies itself, but the Connecticut River is a sluggish stream and its bed rankly unclean.

The Windsor Locks Water Company have begun to sell pure water in the streets of Hartford at the price of about five cents a gallon.

The water famine is no worse in Hartford than in many other Connecticut cities. Meriden's water supply will last not more than three weeks, since there is only twenty-two inches of water in its public reservoir.

At Waterbury the situation is still more serious. There is so little water in the reservoir that the authorities will allow none of it to be used for sprinkling the streets.

At Moodus village, in the lower Connecticut Valley, the reservoir is empty and the mills have been closed. There is very little water at Unionville, and the factories are idle a part of each day.

In the extreme western part of the State the water in the lakes and streams is so low that many mills have stopped running. The Farmington river is so low that it is hardly more than a trout stream in size. Otis Pond, which is just across the Connecticut border in Massachusetts, is a reservoir that feeds the Farmington river and supplies water to the Greenwood mills at New Hartford and the Collins mills at Collinsville, in this State. The Greenwood cotton mills have stopped work on account of low water in Otis Pond, and consequently New Hartford is filled with idle mill hands, who will soon be in pecuniary distress.

At Colebrook the big Sawyer cotton mill is idle five days in the week, and so also is the Riverton rule factory. In all parts of Litchfield county mills are stopping work on account of the lack of water.

At Norwich, in the eastern part of the State, the water in the long canal that feeds a dozen big factories at Greeneville was never so low before since it was constructed, fifty years ago. Within ten days hundred of acres of woodland have been burned over. The rain that deluged the West last Wednesday went north of New England, and there was only a sprinkle in Connecticut.

Mills Shutting Down in Maine.

AUGUSTA, Me., Nov. 16.—The electric companies have been obliged to shut down their plants, owing to the low water in the river, and in consequence, the city was in darkness last night. Mills are shutting down and fears are entertained that the ice crop this year will be a failure.

THE EPISCOPAL CONGRESS.

To Open To-Morrow in Washington—Senator Edmunds to Preside.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—Another religious convention similar in its purposes to the Methodist Ecumenical Conference held in Washington last month, is to meet here this week. It is the fourteenth Congress of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, and it will bring together churchmen from all over the country to discuss the live topics of the day. The first of these Congresses was held fifteen years ago.

While the Congress has no legislative power, its discussions will be interesting as showing the trend of thought in the Episcopal Church on several secular and religious subjects. No delegates are elected to the Congress, all churchmen who desire to attend being welcome. The management of the Church Congress has been in the hands of an executive committee whose members fill all vacancies occurring in their ranks. This committee, which is thus a close corporation, makes all the selections of essayists and speakers at the sessions of the Congress.

The Congress will be in session four days, beginning to-morrow. Senator George F. Edmunds will preside, assisted by Bishop T. U. Dudley of Kentucky and Gen. J. R. Anderson. The first service is to be at 10:30 o'clock at the Church of the Epiphany, when holy communion is to be administered. Bishop Phillips Brooks of Massachusetts will make the address. The first session will be opened immediately after this service by Senator Edmunds, the President. The regular sessions are to be held in "National Rifles" Hall.

BARD'S BODY FOUND.

Reading's Missing Lawyer Drowned Himself in the Schuylkill River.

READING, Pa., Nov. 16.—The remains of William P. Bard, the well-known lawyer who disappeared from his home ten days ago, were found drowned in the Schuylkill river in the lower part of the city yesterday. It was generally supposed that he had gone west, as he had not been seen since the evening of Nov. 4. On that morning he left home as usual and went to market. Then he disappeared, and no trace of him was discovered until yesterday.

It is now ascertained that Mr. Bard was deeply involved in financial complications and was short of cash belonging to others to the amount of from $30,000 to $40,000. Many of his friends believe that his business troubles unsettled his mind. Mr. Bard and his family stood socially very high. He was 52 years of age.

He was manager of the American Plumbago Works at Byers Station, collecting agent of the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company, and collector of rents for several large estates here. The plumbago works have suspended operations.

SLAVIN IS COMING.

He Says He Will Not Tolerate Any Bluff From Sullivan.

LONDON, Nov. 16.—Charley Mitchell has returned from Liverpool and it is practically arranged that he and Slavin will sail for New York on the steamship Germanic, Nov. 28. Slavin says his intention is to force Sullivan to fight. He has secured substantial backing and says he will not tolerate any bluff. Slavin is hard up and is working for money.

Mitchell also wants another fight. He intimates that he may possibly try Jim Corbett if the latter is not afraid.

May Oppose a Third Party.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 16.—Delegates to the meeting of the National Farmers' Alliance, which convenes here this week, are beginning to arrive. Among the prominent members already here are the President of the Alliance, L. F. Polk, J. H. McDowell and Mrs. Wardell and Boise of California. The principal topic for discussion will be the financial condition of the country. It is said that a resolution will be introduced declaring against any third party scheme.

Coming Opening of the Reichstag.

BERLIN, Nov. 16.—The Reichstag will resume its sittings to-morrow. The report that Prince Bismarck had taken up his residence in Berlin for the session of the Reichstag is untrue. It is not yet known when the Prince will appear in the House. His health requires careful attention, and he will undertake a parliamentary campaign only when assured of his ability to do so by his physicians.

Conductor Sold for $40,000.

FRANKLIN, Pa., Nov. 16.—Miller & Sibley, proprietors of Prospect Hill Stock Farm, sold to Charles and Franklin Ridgely of Springfield, Ill., their great Electioneer colt Conductor for $35,000 cash and ten reserved services. As the horse will command a stud fee of $500, the price paid for him is equivalent to $40,000.

Jack Glasscock's Lucky Find.

WHEELING, W. Va., Nov. 16.—While Jack Glasscock, the shortstop of last season's New York team, was excavating for the foundation of a new residence at North Front and Maryland streets, he unearthed an old oyster can containing $2,000 in gold and silver coin and moldy greenbacks.

CALLED FROM ROME

Minister Porter Arrives in Washington To-day.

HE IS ON A SECRET MISSION.

A Suspicion That Italy Has Sent an Ultimatum.

Probably Taking Advantage of the Trouble Between Chili and the United States—The Suddenness and Secrecy of the Minister's Return Bears Out the Assumption—He Makes an Early Call at the State Department.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16. — Albert G. Porter, United States Minister to Italy, reached this city to-day from Rome, having by his own admission been summoned to confer with the authorities at Washington.

Minister Porter refused to talk about the object of his visit.

This much he admitted:

He was called to Washington and would confer with the Secretary of State regarding the conditions of this country and Italy. He intimated that he thought a settlement of the New Orleans affair would be reached.

Minister Porter called on Secretary Blaine immediately, so it is evident his business with the State Department will not admit of delay.

The hasty summons and arrival of the Minister show probably that Italy has taken advantage of the trouble between the United States and Chili to make a demand for an apology and a money indemnity for the killing of the two Italians who were found by the United States Marshal who investigated the case to be subjects of King Humbert. It is believed to have appeared to the Italian Prime Minister Rudini that this is an opportune time to submit such a demand—it may even be an ultimatum, inasmuch as the naval vessels of the United States are concentrating in Chilian waters, and may be needed there for several months at least.

When the question was put to the Minister direct he declined firmly to say whether a demand upon this Government had been made by the Italian administration for money indemnity and an apology for the New Orleans killing. He said he was not at liberty to discuss the matter.

The suddenness and the secrecy of the Minister's departure from Rome to Washington bears out such an assumption.

Regarding his personal relations with the members of the Italian Government, Minister Porter said that throughout the whole controversy, however bitterly the Italians may have felt, or may still feel, towards the United States Government or its people, he had constantly been treated with the most distinguished consideration.

PRISONERS TRY TO ESCAPE.

Overpowered After a Desperate Fight With the Guards.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 16. — Three keepers in the Onondaga County Penitentiary had a desperate struggle with three escaping prisoners in the main corridor of the institution early in the morning.

The prisoners were John Miller, Frank Leonard and Alfred Delong. Miller sawed away the bars of his cell door, and after gaining the corridor, unlocked the doors of the cells occupied by Leonard and Delong. The three men crept along in the shadow of the wall, and had almost gained the main entrance door, when four of the keepers pounced upon them. The men fought desperately, but the guards succeeded in overpowering them and returning them to their cells.

Delong confessed that he furnished Miller with the saws that were used on his door. The saws were brought to Delong by his father and brother, who reside in Manlius and who visited him frequently. Delong's father and brother were arrested and will be tried for aiding convicts to escape.

This is Leonard's second jail-breaking, the first attempt, which was successful, was made in Massachusetts. He was convicted of killing a horse and when the jailer was about to lock him in the cell he threw the jailer into the cell, turned the key on him and fled. He is wanted in Massachusetts on this sentence.

The Palermo Exhibition Opened.

PALERMO, Nov. 16.—The Palermo exhibition opened here yesterday amid splendid ceremonies. King Humbert and Queen Marguerite were both present, surrounded by notabilities from all parts of Italy and Sicily, and Palermo was thronged with the greatest multitude seen here since the inauguration of the Italian kingdom. The reception of the King and Queen was most enthusiastic, and went to show the complete loyalty of the Sicilians. The exhibition is most varied and interesting, and it is believed that it will attract many visitors from all parts of the world.

Sixty Thousand Dollars Offered for Arion.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 16.—Ever since Senator Stanford's two-year-old colt Arion trotted a mile in 2:10 3-4, numerous offers of purchase have been made to him. One telegraphic bid was received by Senator Stanford offering $60,000 for the colt, but a reply was returned to the effect that $60,000 would not buy one-half of Arion.

Pittsburg Wants the Convention.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 16.—After a short consultation the "Despatch," "Times," "Commercial Gazette," and "Press" proprietors agreed to start a contribution fund for securing the Republican National Convention here. Each of the papers has agreed to give $1,000 to the fund. The other newspapers of the city will doubtless join the movement.

IN MEMORY OF PARNELL.

Irishmen From Several Cities Present at the New York Meeting.

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—Services to the memory of Charles Stewart Parnell were held last night in the Academy of Music and Hon. Chauncey M. Depew was the eulogist. There was hardly a prominent Irishman in the city who was not present, but it was not only Parnell's own race that attended to do his memory homage, as many Americans were scattered about among the vast audience. Delegations from the Polish Societies of New York were also in attendance, while Irish-Americans from Philadelphia, Boston, New Haven, Bridgeport, and other nearby cities paid tribute by their presence.

Perhaps the most prominent auditor of Mr. Depew's eulogy was Governor-elect McKinley, of Ohio. He was accompanied by his wife and occupied a box. In the auditorium could be seen many more persons whose names are notable in law, politics, literature, and the pulpit. All the Irish and Gaelic Societies were well represented in the audience.

The theatre was draped with the Stars and Stripes, over which, in heavy folds, fell cloths of purple. To the right of the stage was a large portrait in oil of the dead leader resting against a large Gaelic cross wreathed with ivy. At the base of the portrait were two wreaths, one of shamrocks, moss and ivy, the other of laurels. The first of these was presented to the Parnell Committee by Mrs. Margaret Horgaan, wife of the Mayor of Cork. The ivy of which it was partly composed was gathered near the spot in Glasnevin cemetery near O'Connell's monument. The moss was taken from the grave of Parnell and the shamrock plucked from the hills of Cork.

The second wreath was a present from the Polish societies. It was bound with Polish colors and bore this inscription: "Poland mourns with Ireland."

By 8 o'clock the house was packed. The services opened with preliminary musical exercises. Then, amid cheers, the orator of the evening arrived. He was introduced by the chairman, Judge Henry A. Gildersleeve.

Ringing cheers and applause followed the masterly eulogy of Mr. Depew. The musical exercises were then resumed, the gem of which was, perhaps, the singing of "It is not the tear at this moment shed," with harp accompaniment by Miss Inez Carusi.

Letters of regret were read from ex-President Cleveland and Henry Watterson, which concluded the services.

READY FOR DANNEMORA.

Parson George to Leave Catskill To-day for State Prison.

CATSKILL, N. Y., Nov. 16. — Unless something unexpected should occur, Parson Harrison W. George will sleep in Dannemora Prison to-night.

The jury only deliberated two hours on his case and returned with a verdict of guilty of manslaughter in the first degree.

His counsel moved to set aside the verdict and for a new trial, both of which motions were denied. The prisoner made a short statement denying anything more than immoral relations with the dead girl, Lotta Townsend.

His enunciation was clear and distinct and he was self-possessed and calm. Judge Sanderson, in an impressive manner, then pronounced the sentence, which was fifteen years in the Clinton County Prison. The sentence was received by George without outward emotion.

Dr. Erway, the physician who attended the girl and was also indicted on the same charge, will be tried at the next session of the court. He is under $6,000 bail.

Boston's Wrecked Bank.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 16. — At least three-fourths of the bank books are already in at the Maverick Bank. They will be made up as rapidly as possible, and then the first dividend will be declared. No one inside the bank can tell just when that will be. The depositors in the meantime are behaving admirably, and all this helps to facilitate matters. Col. Jonas H. French has executed a mortgage for $30,000 on his house on Commonwealth avenue in favor of John Stetson, his bondsman.

Coal Dealers at War.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 16.—Kemmerer & Co. and Markle & Co. large coal dealers, are fighting each other, and members of the respective firms say the war will be carried to the bitter end. The former concern has brought suit against Markle & Co. for $200,000 for damaging their property. On Saturday Markle & Co., with the aid of the sheriff, took possession of Kemmerer & Co.'s property at Harleigh and dispossessed 300 tenants.

A Savings Bank in Trouble.

CONCORD, N. H., Nov. 16.—A rumor has reached here to the effect that the Sandwich Savings Bank, at Sandwich, has closed its doors. Hon. James O. Lyford, one of the State Bank Commissioners, said, when questioned, that it is likely that the bank is closed permanently. He said that the bank was one of the smallest in the State, and its depositors would lose very little, if any. Other banks in the State were in no way affected by the failure.

Panic on the Vienna Bourse.

VIENNA, Nov. 16.—A wild panic occurred on the Vienna Bourse as a consequence of the remarks of Kaiser Francis Joseph to the Polish Deputy, Jaworski, intimating that the recent Russian loan had strengthened that nation's ability for war. With a view to strengthen the financial condition of the monarchy, severely taxed by warlike preparations, the Austrian Ministry is considering a proposal to monopolize for the government the sale and production of tobacco and spirits.

Four Hundred Chinamen Sail for Home.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 16. — The steamer Rio Janeiro sailed for Hong Kong, having on board 400 Chinamen, who will not be legally entitled to return to the United States.

DASTARDLY WORK.

Fire-bugs Get Ready for a Big Blaze, But Discovery Thwarts Their Plans.

The discovery was made at dusk last evening that an attempt was about to be made to start a fire in a thickly settled portion of the town.

The wood-work of an out-house in the rear of Andrew Lutkins's store on Park avenue was found to be saturated with kerosene, and the building had been locked and the key thrown away.

The police were notified, and watch was kept up all night, but the fire-bugs took warning and kept away. The evident intent was to cause a big blaze. The out-house saturated stands at the foot of a back stairway leading up to Lewis Mulford's apartments over the store, and adjoins George Force's barn.

The police will increase their vigilance.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

William Stanton, of Providence, R. I., spent Saturday with Plainfield friends.

William Littell, of Newark, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Dudley S Miller.

Mr. and Mrs. Huntsman of Providence, R. I., are visiting at the home of R. F. B. Huntsman, Bay street.

Elizabeth S. Forbes, wife of James S. Forbes of West Fifth street, died yesterday at the age of 50 years.

Daniel C. Nolan, now of Yonkers, N. Y., but formerly of this city, visited his North Plainfield relatives yesterday.

Messrs Stephen Matherson and Charles Pierson, of Brooklyn, were the guests of the Misses Currie of Arlington avenue, Sunday.

In the absence of A. L. Titsworth, Louis Newman very acceptably filled the position of organist at the Trinity Reformed church, yesterday.

Daniel Birdell and Alexander Roberts, members of the Mercury Wheelmen of Elizabeth, visited George H. Rockafellow of West Third street, yesterday.

Police captain George W. Grant took his first walk about town, after his protracted illness, Saturday afternoon. He was a very welcome visitor to the office of THE PRESS.

W. L Titsworth, whose foot was crushed by a Jersey Central ferry boat Friday evening, was able to go to business in New York this morning, but is still very lame.

The next of the series of Thursday evening popular talks at the Y. M. C. A. rooms will be given by George A. Newman of Orange, who will describe a trip to Japan. All men, whether members of the association or not, are invited to be present.

A wide circle of friends and relatives is sorrow-stricken over the death of Miss Anna E. Titsworth, daughter of Rudolph M. and the late Ann Eliza Titsworth. She had been ill but a few days, and was most of the time unconscious. Her bereaved father was summoned to her bedside, from a distance, and arrived just before she breathed her last. Miss Titsworth was instructor in elocution at The Seminary.

George Percy Taggart, of Washington Park, North Plainfield, whose clever dramatic sketches and farces are favorably known throughout the State and in the metropolis, is doing some very excellent ventriloquism, now and then, for the Literary Budget of the United Press. Taggart is a bright young man, and is making a gilt-edged reputation among the members of the new paper fraternity. —New York Journalist.

All Getting Well at the Hospital.

Two patients were discharged from Muhlenberg Hospital Saturday, leaving only six in the tender care of matron Walrod. All of these are doing nicely under her charge and the ministrations of the staff physicians. Even Dominick Duffy, who was so badly injured in the fight with his brother-in-law Cormick Cawfield, is now on the road to recovery. Saturday some broken fragments of bone were removed from his fractured jaw, and now there are hopes of the bone uniting and healing. At present Duffy has to take all his nourishment through a tube. Anderson, the Dane who had a leg amputated as the result of an injury at the Pond machine tool works, is improving. William Ciegler, who was hurt by the cars at Grant avenue, is recovering rapidly.

True Manliness.

There was a fair attendance at the meeting for men, held under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., at the Trinity Reformed church, yesterday afternoon. A. C. LaBoyteaux presided, and read a Scripture lesson from Ephesians, last chapter, beginning with the tenth verse. The Rev. Dr. Ketcham offered prayer. T. T. C. Crain then spoke on "True Manliness", in an earnest, practical way, and in language easily comprehended. There was good singing by a male choir, led by T. E. Hazell. The Rev. Mr. Schenck offered prayer at the close of the address, and pronounced the benediction.

Shiloh's Cough Cure.

This is beyond question the most successful Cough Medicine we have ever sold; a few doses invariably cure the worst cases of Cough, Croup and Bronchitis, while its wonderful success in the cure of Consumption is without a parallel in the history of medicine. Since its first discovery it has been sold on a guarantee, a test which no other medicine can stand. If you have a cough we earnestly ask you to try it. Price 10c., 50c. and $1. If your lungs are sore, chest, or back lame, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by J. G. Miller, No. 10 East Front street, Plainfield N.J.

JOE ENGLISH'S FAREWELL.

A Thousand People Pack the Hall to Hear Him, and Scores Are Turned Away.

Joe English, the famous temperance preacher, held his farewell meeting in Reform Hall last evening. Fully one thousand people crowded into the building, blocking every aisle; and scores were turned away for lack of room. On the platform with the speaker were mayor Gilbert, judge Codington, ex-councilman F. E. Marsh, J. D. Spicer, judge Harper, Ethan Lanphear, E. P. Williams, George F. Opkyke, and several reformed men. The Rev. W. E. Honeyman led the devotional exercises, pre ident Spencer occupied the chair, and Mr English made a rousing address. Mr. Vanderbeek's choir gave good music.

During the week Mr. English secured 123 signers He would stay another week, but is suffering severely from a sore throat, and must take a rest. When he has recovered he will return to Plainfield for further work.

Jimmy Had a Party, and They All Were There.

The Crescent League mascot had a party on Quality Hill, Fanwood, Saturday afternoon. The invitations read from 2 till 6 p m., and were signed "James Moore 2d". The honored guest was Mrs. Col. James Moore of Elizabeth. Among those present were Masters Hetfield and Blanchard Fosgate, jr., of Plainfield; Master Jack Moore, escorting his sister Helen; Miss Annie Willis Odlorne, Chas. Moore Willis, and Robert Willis, of Elizabeth.

Of the Fanwood guests it is a question as to who was the belle of the party. Honors seemed to be easy between the Misses Harriet Downer, Madeline Robinson, Gracie McKee, Mary Westcott, Ethel Kyte, Mary Briggs, Isabelle Hamlin, Muriel Robinson, and Little Lillie Fancher, Fanwood's fairy.

The gifts received were highly appreciated, the only remark made by Jimmy, after their inspection, being that he did not know he had so many friends. The Rev. Dr. Wm. Maxwell Reilly, with his wife, who, it is reported, closely resembles the "Jersey Lily", opportunely appeared, and were given an ovation by the children. Aubrey Sayre said he had a good time, as also did Buddy Miller; but the two acknowledged to be the leaders, not only in the games but at the table, were Ned Quereau and the irrepressible Victor.

The son of the first president of the Crescent League was one of the most welcome guests, and it was regretted that his father could not be present to assist in entertaining the children, for they all love him. Seven candles were burned in the cake, but the age of the mascot has not been announced.

Exercise for the Firemen.

At 6:30 Saturday evening fire box 13 sounded an alarm, and the department turned out. A lamp had exploded in Hetfield's row, at No. 4 Arlington avenue. Little damage was done. The blaze was put out before the firemen arrived.

At 11 box 13 again sounded, and the various companies responded and flooded a stone yard on Second street, near Peace, where a small tool shed was partially burned. The shed was evidently set afire.

At 6 Sunday evening somebody in the borough shouted fire, and somebody else rang Warren engine bell till the rope broke Peter Seader earned his customary $5 as driver by chasing with the engine around the borough streets. There was no fire. The hose carriage horse arrived in time to get the carriage out just before the engine came back. Some arrangements ought to be made for getting the hose carriage out promptly. With the new hydrants the engine can be dispensed with, but the hose is essential.

Notes of the Boys' Club.

The average attendance at the rooms last week was 71 each evening, the largest being 90, and the smallest 57. The number of visitors was 39 Six boys joined the club during the week, making the total membership 420.

The next entertainment will take place Wednesday evening, Nov. 25. All are invited to attend. An extra-fine programme will be provided.

The Edwards Zouaves meet for drill Wednesday evening at 8:30. A full attendance is desired.

Bowling for Blood.

The Crescents and the Elizabeth bowlers will meet in battle royal at the Crescent club-house to-morrow night. 'Twill be a battle for gore. Each team has won a game from the other, and this is the final of the series.

The Plainfield team will be picked from the following: Reed, VanWinkle, Thiers, Emerson, Teel, Davis, Haven, Allis, Hetfield, Williams, Doane, VanEmburgh.

Who the Bonders Are.

We hear much talk from the bond advocates about the "combine", but they do not tell the public that the township and city of Plainfield for the past thirty years previous to the present common council had been ruled by a combine—but with the difference that they organized and controlled.

Dry sermons are bad enough, but for the minister to preach them through his nose is inexcusable. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup will save both minister and sermon if taken in time. Price 25 cents.

When you go to the sea-shore take along a bottle of Salvation Oil; it kills pain. 25 cents.

MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE.

Young Walter Voorhees Has Been Missing from Home Two Weeks.

Walter D. Voorhees, the sixteen-year-old son of H. K. Voorhees of 40 Duer street, has been missing from home since Sunday, Nov. 1, when he left the house to go to Sunday-school. He had a happy home, and there was no reason for his going away. His parents are greatly worried, and anxious to get news of his whereabouts. When last seen, he wore a neat black cheviot suit, with a sack coat, and a Crescent League cap. He can be identified by two severe scars on his right hand.

The Eclipse Eclipsed.

A thick blanket of clouds veiled the moon from the sight of all local star-gazers last night, and the eclipse, towards which they had been looking with so much scientific anticipation, was lost to them.

About 9:10, when the whole show was over, the clouds suddenly parted, and the moon shone brilliantly down upon the city. According to the programme of the scientists, it was still in the penumbra, and it therefore probably was, but there was no indication of it to the naked eye. In fact, it was then a very commonplace every-night sort of a moon, which gave no evidence of the interesting experience through which it had but just passed.

Fanwood Fun.

A very enjoyable entertainment was given last Wednesday evening at Fanwood's pretty club-house. Mrs. Gibbe and Mrs. Warren were patronesses; with these ladies at the head, any social gathering is an unqualified success.

After the theatricals, dancing was indulged in by all who were not obliged to take early trains to out of town places. Arthur T. Pendleton, referred to as the "Ward McAllister of Elizabeth", though himself not present, was ably represented. Many Plainfield people remained to enjoy the informal dance until the "owl train" arrived to take them home.

The Coal Famine Spreading.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 16.—A Chicago dispatch says the coal famine caused by the strikes in the coal fields is assuming a serious aspect for lake steamers. There is not a pound of coal to be had at Michigan City or Chicago, and the supply here is so limited that steamers have been held twenty-four hours waiting for fuel. The famine is spreading to the railroads.

Internal Revenue Receipts.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—The annual report of Internal Revenue Commissioner Mason for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1891, has been made public. JENNIE WILEY AND HER PARAMOUR.

Each Gets Ten Years for the Killing of Little Pearl Beckman.

Jennie Wiley, the downfallen white woman, and Samuel Beckman, her negro paramour, were sentenced, Saturday, in the Union county court at Elizabeth, to ten years apiece in State prison, for beating the negro's six-year-old daughter Pearl to death.

Jennie Wiley was greatly affected by the sentence, and the officers were obliged to support her to keep her from falling.

Beckman showed anger, and threatened violence to the constables when they were removing him from the court room.

Praise for the State Executive.

The following verbatim report of the speech made by Chauncey B. Ripley in introducing Governor Abbett to the people of Westfield, Friday evening, was crowded out of these columns Saturday:

"You have done well to invite as your principal guest on this occasion, and as the one to make the presentation, the distinguished gentleman whom I shall shortly introduce. Your choice is a good one, not only because he occupies the place that he does, the highest office in the gift of the people of the State of New Jersey, but because he illustrates so well what can be accomplished by persistent hard work, from which all that we celebrate here to-night has resulted. Governor Abbett has been a hard-working lawyer all his life, having offices in two States, distinguishing himself in that profession both in New York and New Jersey. He has sat in both halls of our Legislature, and has acted as speaker of the House of Representatives and as president of the Senate. He is now serving his second term as governor; and as we Jerseymen are so averse to a third term in this conservative State, what can we now do but send him to the United States Senate?

"Governor Abbett is not only a great worker, but he is level-headed. And there is no better evidence of it than his acceptance of the invitation tendered to him by Holy Trinity church and the fire companies of Westfield—especially if he expects to go to the United States Senate. I see by our local journals that over 5,000 votes were cast in the contest for the silver trumpet. That is ten times as many as the number of registered voters in the whole town. And what is more, these votes, cost only ten cents apiece. Where, in all the State, can a candidate for senator get so many votes and at so small a cost?"

The Potter Press Prints Handsome Papers.

"It is always a mystery to me"—writes Allan Forman in the New York Journalist—"that publishers of papers which appeal to the most cultured class in the community look only for speed without regard to quality of work, when they are buying their presses. Take a paper like Mr. Scott's Chicago Herald, for example, which is undoubtedly the handsomest daily paper in the world. Such work cannot be done on a rapid Hoe press. Mr. Scott has ten Potter presses on which his paper is printed, and as fast as he needs them he buys more. It may be a little more expensive, but look at the paper they produce! After all, the expense is not much greater. I have no figures by me, but I have a very distinct impression, after listening to a very animated argument on the subject between John R. Walsh and Ambrose Butler, that in practical use the Potter press is just about as economical as any other, and its work is much more attractive. This is not an advertisement for the Potter press, but simply a suggestion for the benefit of publishers who want to issue handsome papers."

Beware of Bonds.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—Let every owner of a home in our beautiful city beware of any man as member of the common council who will in any way be instrumental in bonding our city—for understand, this in plain language means placing a bond upon your home, which you will have to pay. Do not forget that over twenty years ago, through scheming, designing men, the cities of Elizabeth and Rahway were bonded respectively for five and three millions of dollars; the blighting effects are still visible. It has been our boast that we were free from bonds. This freedom has been the cause of our prosperity. Citizens, if you want to keep your home free, vote the citizens' ticket, as every nominee thereon is pledged against city bonds.

George Thatcher, the famous minstrel man, whom every newspaper man delights to meet, and who is a personal friend of everyone in the journalistic guild, took his "Tuxedo" company out to Demarest and Runyon's Plainfield theatre, Thursday night, and as usual had the biggest house in the history of the town. Plainfield is the home of both Thatcher and his right bower, Ed Marble, and the town delights to do them honor when they bring their show to the "Crescent City of the State".

THE INNOCENT CAUSE OF IT ALL.

Miss Apgar of Dunellen Deplores the Sunday-school Auction Which Resulted Over a Misjudgement of Her Efforts to Please.

The following article, which refers to a prominent young woman of Dunellen, appeared in a New York paper Saturday morning:

SHE USED THE WORD "NIGGER".

THE PASTOR OBJECTED, AND THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT REBUKED THE PASTOR.

Sunday-school superintendent C. P. Kinsey of the Davis Memorial M. E. church of Harrison, N. J., has been deposed. It was done by resolution at the quarterly conference of the church on Wednesday evening, and is the outgrowth of a little episode which occurred on Thursday evening, Nov. 5, when an entertainment was given for the benefit of the Sunday-school. The Rev. John Gutteridge, the pastor, was away when the entertainment was got up, and had no part in it. C. P. Kinsey was the prime mover, and he got a young woman from Dunellen, N. J., to give recitations. She was telling the story of the colored man who tried to get into heaven by carrying a man in on his shoulders, and who failed because St. Peter told the rider to leave his horse outside. She used the word "nigger" several times, and the Rev. Mr. Gutteridge objected. He asked her not to repeat the offensive word and said that the story was blasphemous and distasteful to the colored people, a number of whom attended the church. The young woman was mortified, but it did not prevent her giving another recitation later in the evening. Mr. Kinsey took it upon himself to champion the elocutionist, and he rebuked the pastor for insulting her.

Later the pastor demanded an apology, and, as Mr. Kinsey did not make it, the matter was laid before the conference, and resolutions were adopted to the effect that brother Kinsey had no right to rebuke the pastor publicly, and that he should be deposed for so doing.

It is thought that the trouble is not ended, however, because Mr. Kinsey has a strong following in the church, and it is hinted that it may be impossible to elect another superintendent without his sanction.

The young woman referred to is Miss Louise Apgar, whose ability as an elocutionist is widely known in the State.

Miss Apgar feels greatly annoyed at the result of her efforts to entertain the good Harrisonites. The same selection which caused so much distress of mind to good dominie Gutteridge has been rendered in Plainfield, Dunellen, and many other places, and was greatly enjoyed by perhaps as intelligent people as those of Harrison. Never before had any offense been taken at the humorous story.

It is understood, notwithstanding dominie Gutteridge, that most of the church people of Harrison were much pleased with the recitation, and that only the Rev. Mr. Gutteridge himself took exception to it.

Miss Apgar is an ardent church worker, and has given her assistance in this way to many churches; she consented to go to Harrison through the request of Mr. C. P. Kinsey, the Sunday-school superintendent of the Davis Memorial M. E. church, who knowing her ability, secured her services through the Rev. W. C. Kinsey of Dunellen, who is his son.

Fanwood's Famous Rabbit Hunters.

Last Thursday, General Allen, accompanied by a friend from Tarrytown, scoured the territory immediately adjoining Fanwood in search of rabbits. Although the search was successful, no game was brought home. One "Jack" appeared, heading straight for the man from Tarrytown, who, closing his eyes, blazed away with both barrels, narrowly missing Gen. Allen, who stood gazing upon the scene in amazement, he not daring to shoot for fear of hitting his side-partner. The noble "Jack" hied his way homeward, apparently not surprised, and carrying no ballast, notwithstanding the fact that the General lit out for him in a manner that would discountenance any sprinter of equal weight. "No more rabbit hunting for me this season;"—said the genial General—"but if I can prevail upon Abner P. Downer to accompany me just once I may break the resolution."

Illustrated Lectures by a Plainfield Scholar.

Prof. Edwin H. Lewis, son of the Rev. Dr. Lewis of this city, has prepared a course of nine lectures on "The Private Life of the Romans", which he will deliver at Memorial hall, Alfred Centre, N. Y. The object of the course is to give a systematic treatment of the daily life of the Romans of the Republic and the Empire, and to show the influence of Roman customs on modern ones. The lectures will be illustrated with views of ancient Rome, Pompeii and Herculaneum, prepared by Prof. W. G. Hale of Cornell University especially for this course. The schedule of topics is as follows:

Nov. 12. Marriage, Education, Dress.
Nov. 19. The House, its Construction.
Nov. 26. The House, its Decoration.
Nov. 30. The House, its Furnishing.
Dec. 3. Meals, and Daily Occupations.
Dec. 10. Exercise and the Bath.
Dec. 17. Books, Authors, Libraries.
Jan. 11. Public Amusements.
Jan. 18. Death and Burial.

Notes from Dunellen.

T. N. Abbell of Baltimore is visiting friends in town.

The Rev. L. E. Livermore, while getting out of his carriage a day or two ago, slipped and scraped his leg so severely that he is now confined to his room.

The Young People's Christian Endeavor societies of Dunellen and New Market will give a supper next Thursday evening in the basement of the First Presbyterian church.

Easily made. A cheap and delicious drink for 25 cents can be made from Hires's Root Beer packages. Five gallons. Be careful that you get the real, genuine Hires's. There are a number of would-be Root Beer packages on the market.

AMERICA'S BRIGHTEST STORY-TELLER.

Plainfield's Gifted Neighbor, and the Books that He Produces.

A favorite drive for Plainfield people is to quaint and pretty Morristown, where an hour or two may be most delightfully spent at Washington's famous headquarters; and while in that locality, pleasure parties invariably explore the road leading into the surrounding country, never omitting to take a glimpse at the convent at Madison, where devout young women consecrate themselves to a life of sincere holiness and self-sacrificing industry. Prominent among the homes of Madison, and not far from the convent, is a spacious white frame house, surrounded by stately trees, which attracts the eye of all who spin along Kitchell avenue in their carriages or on bicycles. This is the home of Frank R. Stockton, the celebrated story-teller, and those who have been so fortunate as to enjoy its hospitality pronounce it a most delightful stopping-place. The house is situated at the edge of the beautiful Loantaka Valley, across which a fine view is obtained from the porches and grounds. The country roundabout abounds in romantic scenery, and altogether it is a most appropriate and charming spot for a story-teller to live.

Most of Mr. Stockton's stories are familiar by name at least to all the world, and those people who have never read any of his exquisite tales are truly benighted. He is probably the best entertainer of book-lovers of any living man who wields the pen. The special quality of his stories in paradox—using the term to mean things seemingly true which are absurd in fact. The placid manner in which he relates the most whimsical conceits as though they were every-day occurrences is the strongest element in his humor. He surprises one because he gives much more than he promises. Whether long or short, his tales have originality which cannot be imitated, and his personality pervades every page—which is the same as saying that they are always sane and wholesome. And especially is all this true of his latest book, "The Squirrel Inn", which has just been issued in the daintiest of bindings by The Century company, New York. In this book Mr. Stockton has gathered high oddities together in a queer ramshackle inn, and has constructed a bright little plot, full of quaint turns and interesting ly-developed enigmas.

The landlord of the Squirrel Inn is one of Mr. Stockton's most whimsical creations, a personage most laughably extravagant in his ideas; but his importance is small, and his figure shadowy, compared with the importance and the figure of Calthea Rose, the lady of forty lodgers who is determined to marry somebody. Calthea's faculty for making people miserable is the most "realistic" out in a story full of ordinary persons who do most unexpected things.

At the outset Mr Stockton leads the reader to believe that the young widow intends to abandon her child, leaving it to the care of the young man; then he enjoys baffling him by causing the mother to return. The young man has a quarrel with the deckhand, who is expected to make a reappearance; but the deckhand never comes back at all. The reader is sure that the lively young Irishman of Lethbury, who has been engaged three or four times to Calthea, will marry the pretty governess and repent at leisure (for the pretty governess is a monster of calculation and flirting), but Mr. Stockton make him marry Calthea after all. The story is full of amusing side-strokes, which carry it on most effectually, and the various love affairs are developed in a highly original and enjoyable fashion. The wooing of Mrs Cristie by Lodlow is a very pretty and clever bit of love-making, and the incident of the sweet-pea blossoms is a most charming and unaffected bit of romance. The chapter "Twisted Trysts", in which all of the characters get matters most uncomfortably and ludicrously jumbled, is full of the quaintest humor, and would be enjoyed by the most dyspeptic cynic. The love-making of the Greek scholar at the top of the ladder, the way in which he is accepted, and the comic despair of the scheming Lanigan Beam, imprisoned in the room without any stairs, are the best-told bits of nonsense that even Mr. Stockton ever wrote. To take away first his rival's ladder and then his rival's sweetheart is something that the reader did not expect of Mr. Tippengray.

It would be a most pleasant task to review exhaustively in these columns the complete detailed story of "The Squirrel Inn", but the pleasure of acquainting one's self with all the delights of the book must be left to each individual reader. It is enough to say that there is no new publication which one will be better satisfied in purchasing, or which will bring more enjoyment to the household during these indoor evenings. It may be added, however, as a suggestion to those who enjoy arranging new ideas for amateur theatricals, that in "The Squirrel Inn" everything is so farcical, and the eight characters are so sharply individualized, that it is easy to imagine a quiet little eccentric comedy being made out of this story for a group of clever actors. There would not be much movement in it, but there would be many opportunities for good character acting.

Mr. Stockton's personality pervades the volume, as it does all his books; and that personality is a most original one. Before he was 20 Mr. Stockton had made up his mind to be an author, and during nearly thirty years of desultory literary work his nimbus, like the northern lights, had flickered a little this side or that, or momentarily shown a spectacular glow. It was entirely visible to many when the "Rudder Grange" sketches appeared in a haphazard, transient way, but not until the little conundrum, "The Lady or the Tiger?" propounded in three marginal pages, had set everybody talking, did he become a celebrity. But he was nearly 50 years old then.

Edward Eggleston used to say that Stockton's mind possessed one chamber that had been denied to the rest of mankind.

Mr. Stockton was christened Francis Richard. He comes of New Jersey ancestry and is now 57 years old. His father was a remarkable man and a leading Methodist in his time. He edited a life of John and Charles Wesley, and was a most unrelenting controversialist all his days. Henry Clay called him the greatest pulpit orator that he had ever heard. His son Frank has no children at all, but his father had twenty. Frank's sister influenced the naming of him, and she named him after Francis I, and Richard, the Lion Hearted.

Frank's father kept him out of Sunday-school, so that he would not meet bad boys, and he conducted a little family Sunday-school at home. But Frank belonged to the A. O. B. Club, where the boys were no better than the Sunday-school boys themselves, and the club oath imposed upon them the doing of all sorts of strange deeds. In pursuance of this obligation Frank once helped to eat all the mince meat out of his mother's pies, replacing it with cold mush. He refitted the top crust so well that the ministers, who were guests at his house the next day, had to eat some of the pies before they discovered the absence of the mince meat.

When the family lived in Bucks county, Pa., Frank and his brother had a dog, whose energies were solely devoted to hunting cats. One day the boys were over hauled by the owner of a much pursued feline, and they compromised with him by buying a pig of him for $1. They took the little pig home, and by fighting the other pigs away with a stick at feeding time they soon made their own pig the fattest in the pen. They then sold him at a profit of $7.

Murder in the Second Degree.

CARLISLE, Pa., Nov. 16.—Ed. Straitiff, charged with the murder of William Groman, some months ago, in Penn Townsnip, was found guilty of murder in the second degree. A motion was filed for a new trial.

PENNSYLVANIA BRIEFS.

Barlow's cotton and shoddy warehouse in Philadelphia was damaged $25,000 by fire. Loss partially insured.

Bowlby's machine shop and Brewer's store, at Sunbury, were burned yesterday. Loss not estimated.

The Clover Club of Philadelphia has received acknowledgment from ex-President Cleveland of the spoon sent by its members to Baby Ruth.

An engine on the Pennsylvania Railroad was overturned at Eagle last night, killing engineer Hinkle of Columbia, and severely injured Fireman Josiah Shiveton, also of Columbia.

The most beautiful woman in New York said that she "ascribed her good health and rosy cheeks to the occasional use of a tablespoonful of pure whiskey before meals. It increased the circulation, sent a warm glow through the system, and gave her a hearty appetite." That is the experience of all who drink pure whiskey moderately. A. R. "Seeing is Believing."
And a good lamp
must be simple; when it is not simple it is not good. Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. All metal, tough and seamless, and made in three pieces only, it is absolutely safe and unbreakable. Like Aladdin's of old, it is indeed a "wonderful lamp," for its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light and more cheerful than either.
Look for this stamp—THE ROCHESTER. If the lamp dealer has'n't the genuine Rochester, and the style you want, send to us for our new illustrated catalogue, and we will send you a lamp safely by express—your choice of over 2,000 varieties from the Largest Lamp Store in the World.

CHOOSING A FIELD DOG.

Valuable Tips from Forest and Stream's Kennel Edition.

Characteristics of the Irish, English and Gordon Setters—Comparing the Pointer to the Setter—Certain Points That Should Be Considered.

[COPYRIGHT, 1891.]

During the past ten years a great change is apparent in the habits of our business men. The daily grind for the almighty dollar still goes on, but men are becoming wiser in their generation and know now that to live out their allotted span of life they must needs indulge in some form of relaxation, and naturally a life away from the busy cares and polluted atmosphere of the cities is the first thought that strikes a healthy mind in a healthy body.

Amusements in the country are few and those generally of a nature allied to sport. A fondness for the gun and an inherent desire in the minds of most men to "kill something" finds an outlet in the pursuit of feathered game. This entails the calling to his aid of man's best friend, the dog, and to aid the amateur sportsman in his selection of the best breeds will be my endeavor in the prescribed compass of a newspaper article.

The sportsman has plenty of material from which to choose his field companion. The pointer, the three different breeds of setters and the spaniel family are all adapted by heredity and superior prowess of reason and scents to the pursuit of the quail and the woodcock. Of course individual taste must determine to a great extent man's choice. For the purpose of this article I will leave out any consideration of the spaniel family, for it is very rarely that spaniels are trained for work in this country, the pointer and setter being principally depended upon. Sportsmen differ, and I suppose always will, between the merits of the pointer and the setter, and by setter I mean the English setter, for the Irish and Gordon,

IRISH SETTER MOLLIE BAWN.

in America at least, have not received that care in breeding and training that will entitle them to the consideration of the other two breeds. But perhaps a brief description of the Irish and Gordon setter would not be out of place. For distinctive type and race characteristics the Irish setter is not surpassed by any any other breed, and the well-bred specimen possesses a degree of elegance and symmetry of form that cannot be surpassed. The breed has not been well represented in the field, the greater attention of sportsmen having been devoted to the development of the more popular English setter. Still the Irishman, true to his name, is a dashing performer in the field, for no laggard is he, but rather is his head strong disposition the cause of his neglect by trainers, who find the more tractable English setter the easier animal to handle. However, the Irish setter has field-working merit of a high order, and there are many very practical sportsmen who keep them for this purpose. In the English field trials in the spring, we find that Rev. O'Callaghan's young Irish setter, Coleraine, won several stakes against other breeds, and sportsmen generally in England hold them in high esteem. The Irish Setter club of America is an organization formed with the object of bringing this handsome breed into prominence, and during November field trials for this breed exclusively will be held at High Point, N C., which it is expected will serve to bring the Irish setter, that with his rich red mahogany color is one of the handsomest breeds of dogs living, more prominently to the consideration of American sportsmen. The Gordon, or black and tan setter, is also a handsome animal, but built on heavier lines than either of the other breeds of setters.

Mention of these two breeds brings us now to a consideration of the most important breeds of sporting dogs America possesses. The pointer has been improved during the past two years by careful breeding with a view to good field form, and, their interests being in the hands of energetic sportsmen, they are fast becoming almost as popular as the English setter. Last year at the field trials they demonstrated their ability in several cases to outrange and outpoint their longer coated cousins. Sportsmen have generally complained that the pointer if overworked becomes "stale," and, from a stylish, snappy field worker, begins to lag and potter round in his work, requiring a lengthened rest before he can recuperate and regain his ardor.

Taking the two breeds as a whole, the setter is claimed to be more dashing, quicker and freer ranger in his work, and in the end will endure more fatigue and keep his nose longer than the pointer. Pointer men, on the other hand, claim that he is more easily trained and remembers what he is taught. Setters, if overworked, require only a short rest, when they resume their work with unabated ardor. Breeding, kenneling and general care play an important part in their general welfare, and the sportsman should be as particular about the food and quarters of his valuable helpmate as he would be of his fine trotter or pacer. A great deal depends, in the choice of a "bird" dog, in the kind of country he is required to hunt over. If in thick cover, heavy grass or briars, the setter will be found to have a decided physical advantage, derived from his longer coat. And this also enables him to endure cold, wet and sudden changes of climate better than the short-haired pointer. At the same time, there are some pointers that will, owing to indomitable spirit, go into cover that will lacerate them terribly. They are exceptions, however, and it is cruel to subject them to this punishment. The pointer has an immense advantage when the fields are full of cockle burrs, beggar lice, Spanish needles, etc., for here the long coat of the setter gathers these nuisances so thickly that they cause great distress, and valuable time is lost in having to pick them from the coat before he can proceed. For this reason working setters in such a country are usually trimmed about the armpits and inside of legs.

In choosing a young dog of course special aptitude for field work is greatly to be desired, but this is not enough, and a regular system of training must be gone through for the sportsman to derive much pleasure or aid in his sport. Retrieving, steadiness to shot and wings, and perfect control, are all matters of education by trainers, of whom there are a number scattered throughout the states who charge from $50 to $150 to put a youngster through its course. A sportsman naturally desires to have a dog with him of whose good looks he may feel proud, and a well-bred dog of handsome form costs no more to keep than a scrub. The days in the field that the sportsman treasures as the pleasantest and most successful are those to which a good dog's efforts have largely contributed. Therefore I advise the sportsman who is coasting around to buy a young field dog to purchase one from a reputed kennel and a dog possessing blood which for generations back has been prominent in field trials and the field. Choose a healthy dog, bright in eye and free from skin diseases, and one by his actions showing no disposition to laziness. A lazy dog, like a lazy man, will never do any work. A medium sized dog is the most serviceable type, and either in a pointer or English setter a dog weighing between forty-five and fifty-five pounds will be found the best. They are capable of more prolonged exertion than the larger or smaller. Good dogs like good horses come in all shapes. There are, however, certain points to be remembered in choosing your dog. Avoid a wide chest with heavy shoulders; the chest should be moderately narrow and deep with well-sprung ribs in a compact body, a good strong loin and well-turned stifles. From the foregoing the reader will gather that either a pointer or an English setter will suit nearly every requirement, and as a guide to intending purchasers it may not be out of place to name a few of the more important kennels whose owners have done so much by judicious selections, competent training and a great outlay of money to bring pointers and setters to the front. The principal pointer breeders are Westminster Kennel club, Babylon, L. I.; Hempstead Farm kennels, Hempstead, L. I.; Charlottsville kennels, Charlottsville, Va.; Graphic kennels, Netherwood, N. J.; Charles Heath, Newark, N. J., and Brynmawr kennels, Philadelphia, Pa. The kennels devoted to English setters are Blue Ridge kennels, Sperryville, Va.; J. M. Avent, Hickory Valley, Tenn.; Rockingham kennel, New York city; J. Shelly Hudson, Covington, Ky.; Mount Washington kennels, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Elm's kennels, St. Paul, Minn., and many other smaller breeders whose names would fill columns. The price for a well bred pup from these kennels ranges from $50 to $100, though there are certain strains from field trial winners, whose products cost as high as $500, but for ordinary field purposes the smaller priced is just as good.

NOT FIT TO ENTER

So Said Special Immigration Commissioner Schulteis.

THEY LANDED JUST THE SAME.

He Came Over Disguised as an Immigrant and Makes Grave Charges.

Alleged Immorality Among the Steerage Passengers—Claims Half of Them Are Paupers—The Charges Could Not Be Sustained, and They Were Let Go—A Minister Threatens to Bring Suit.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—H. J. Schulteis, the last of the special commission sent to Europe by President Harrison to study immigration matters, returned yesterday. He came in the steerage of the Servia disguised an an immigrant, and created a lively scene at the barge office by making grave charges concerning the characters of immigrants and incidentally volunteering to give Colonel Weber some legal information. Mr. Schulteis, enveloped in a long coat, was approached in the steerage at quarantine early in the morning by Colonel Lee of the Contract Labor Bureau. Making himself known, he was allowed to depart, but sent word to Colonel Weber to hold all the immigrants, and that he would appear about noon to make charges.

The people were accordingly held, but it was within a few minutes of 3 when Mr. Schulteis put in an appearance wearing a bland smile and a silk hat. A great crowd of people were huddled around the entrance waiting the discharge of the new arrivals. They were relatives and friends of the immigrants. At 2:30 several of the boldest in the crowd went to Col. Weber, asking that they be allowed to take their wives away. He yielded and then decided to go on with the examination, not waiting any longer for Mr. Schulteis. When Mr. Schulteis did appear he seemed surprised that any of the steerage passengers had been allowed to land.

"More than half of these people are paupers," he said, "and at least one of the women is an unfit character to be allowed to go."

There were 225 in all—thirty-eight being Hebrews and 187 Swedes and Norwegians.

"Well," returned Col. Weber, "pick out those whom you know to be so and make your charges."

"Nearly all of them have prepaid tickets," said Mr. Schulteis, "which is strong evidence that they are paupers assisted here."

"On the other hand," replied the Colonel, "it is presumptive evidence that they have friends and relatives in this country who are ready and able to look after them. Over 50 per cent. of the immigrants coming here have prepaid tickets."

Mr. Schulteis selected a number of the people. They were closely examined and found to be very worthy people, who either had comfortable sums of money with them or well-to-do relatives who were ready to vouch for them. In fact every case that Mr. Schulteis pointed out readily passed the examination required by law. Then Mr. Shulteis pointed to a Swedish woman named Petersen, 18 years of age, and made a grave charge against her. She is a handsome young woman, well-dressed and modest-looking. She indignantly denied the charges, with tears in her eyes. Colonel Weber received her affidavit and allowed her to go.

In the meantime the Rev. A. B. Lilja, pastor of a Swedish church who looks after the interests of immigrants from his country, took the girl's statement.

The young woman is on her way to Manistee, Mich., where relatives are located.

Mr. Schulteis turned to Col. Weber with disgust and said the laws ought to bar all the people he picked out. He then commenced, the Colonel says, to quote the law for the benefit of the Barge Office official.

"I told him," said the Colonel afterward, "that when I desired information on legal matters I should ask some one who was posted and not Mr. Schulteis, who was palpably ignorant." When Mr. Schulteis was seen he said he would make his statement at the meeting of the Immigration Commissioners.

"Colonel Weber," he said, "can invite representatives from all the newspapers to be present. Then the people will know what I have to say about the matter."

Colonel Weber said that Mr. Schulteis would not be allowed to take up the time of the other commissioners with any harangue. The object of the meeting is to agree upon the basis of a report to be sent to Washington, giving the result of the commission's labors in Europe. Mr. Schulteis, it is said, represents, or is supposed to represent, some section of the labor organization element. He lives in Washington, and has held a minor position in the Treasury Department.

Pastor Lilja says he will commence a civil action against Mr. Schulteis on behalf of the girl, charging him with defamation of character.

Murderer Parks Held for Trial.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 17 — Alfred Parks, the young Englishman who killed his wife in their rooms Sunday, was brought before Justice Preisel, in the Fourth precinct police court, and committed for trial without bail. Parks refused to make any statement and was as cool as a cucumber throughout the whole proceedings, and the court room was crowded with friends of the dead woman.

Germany Wants a Few Ships.

BERLIN, Nov. 17.—The German budget to be submitted to the Reichstag reports that 50,000,000 of marks are needed for extra expenditures on the navy, of which 29,000,000 is required for 19 new vessels of war. The artillery service calls for 74,000,000 marks extra.

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—U. S. Gov't Report, Aug. 17, 1889.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

THE KING MOUND BUILDER.

His Remains and Those of His Wife Believed to Have Been Discovered.

CHILLICOTHE, O., Nov. 17.—Warren K. Morehead and Dr. Cresson, who have been prosecuting excavations here for the past three months in the interest of the World's Fair, have just made one of the richest finds of the century in the way of prehistoric remains. These gentlemen have confined their excavations to the Hopewell farm, seven miles from here, upon which are located some 20 odd Indian mounds.

They were at work on a mound 500 feet in length, 200 feet wide and 28 feet in height. At the depth of 14 feet, near the centre of the mound, they exhumed the massive skeleton of a man which was encased in a veritable copper armor. The head was covered by an oval-shaped copper cape. The jaws had copper moldings and the arms were dressed in copper. Copper plates covered the chest and stomach. On each side of the head on protruding sticks were wooden antlers ornamented with copper.

The mouth was stuffed with genuine pearls of immense size, but much decayed by the ravages of time. Around the neck was a necklace of bear's teeth set with pearls. At the side of the male skeleton was also found a female skeleton, the two supposed to be man and wife.

It is estimated that the bodies were buried where they were found fully 600 years ago. Messrs. Morehead and Cresson consider this find one of the most important ones that they have yet made, and believe that they have at last found the King of the Mound Builders.

FATAL COLLISION.

A Brakeman Cremated and Several Others Seriously Hurt.

PITTSBURG, Pa., Nov. 17. — A fatal rear end collision between two Panhandle Railroad freight trains occurred just west of Bergettstown, about 20 miles west of this city, at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

Fourteen cars of perishable freight with the caboose and engine of the second train were derailed and piled up in a heap, the mass of wreckage taking fire and burning up.

Brakeman Hardy, of this city was in the wreck and cremated alive.

Thomas Whitesides, of Allegheny, engineer, and John McFarland, fireman, of Cadiz, Ohio, on the second freight engine, received probably fatal internal injuries before being rescued from the burning debris.

The loss will reach $100,000. Trains will be run over the Cleveland Pittsburg Railroad between Mingo Junction and Pittsburg until the Panhandle tracks are cleared.

Want the Convention in New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—A number of prominent editors, hotel men, railway officials, politicians, etc., met yesterday to devise plans for securing the Republican National Convention for New York. Ex-Gov. Lounsberry of Connecticut presided. Gen. Collis was secretary and Col. E. F Shepard and others spoke. Chauncey M. Depew was among th ose who favored the project, and he, on behalf of the New York Central Railroad Company subscribed $2,500 toward a guarantee fund. Several other subscriptions were made. It was proposed to pay the general convention expenses, but not the expenses of delegates. A committee was appointed to take further steps in the matter.

A Novel Plan of Suicide.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 17.—William Ruddy, a young man aged 26 years, committed suicide in a most sensational manner at his home in this city yesterday. It is alleged that Ruddy came home and found that his mother had drank to excess, and this so troubled him that he resolved to make away with himself. Ruddy poured oil over himself, and, by thrusting his hand into the fire, became enveloped in flames. He then seized a sharp knife and stabbed himself over the heart, inflicting a wound that would in itself have resulted fatally. He was terribly burned, his flesh hanging in shreds, and in a short time death ended his excruciating sufferings.

A Duel that Didn't Come Off.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Nov. 17.—A duel was to have been fought yesterday at Monocrief Springs, near here, between H. V. Sevier, editor of the "Evening Telegram," and Benjamin Harrison, editor of the "Standard," and a nephew of ex-Mayor Carter Harrison, of Chicago. The "Telegram" has been publishing a colored society column and Harrison ridiculed it in his paper. The "Telegram" retorted, reflecting on Harrison as a coward and liar. Harrison challenged Sevier. A warrant was sworn out by Father Kenny, for the arrest of the principals, and both men were arrested and put under $1,000 bond each.

NEW YORK NEWS IN BRIEF.

The New York agency of the Nevada Bank of San Francisco will close on Dec. 1.

The Board of Governors of the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States met in New York yesterday.

An unknown man, about 30 years of age was struck by a West Shore passenger train at East Rochester and instantly killed last night.

ALMY SAYS GUILTY

Christie Warden's Murderer Confesses in Court.

HANGED IN EFFIGY AT MIDNIGHT

Excitement Caused By Fear That He Has Cheated the Gallows.

Crowds at the Stations to See the Murderer Taken From Manchester to Plymouth—Evidence in the Case to Be Taken By the Court—The New Hampshire Law.

PLYMOUTH, N. H., Nov. 17.—Frank Almy, slayer of Christie Warden, pleaded guilty of his crime in the Court House here yesterday. He was brought from Manchester guarded by four officers. He looked haggard and walked with the aid of crutches. Eighty special jurors had been called for the trial, the prisoner having first pleaded not guilty.

The silence in the court-room, only broken by the questions and answers, was awful. The murderer himself was as cool as ice until he tried to say that ominous word "guilty." Even his nerve was then shaken. His clasped fingers twitched. His eyes snapped. He swallowed a big lump in his throat. Then out it came—"guilty"—clear and loud.

Almy was taken from the Manchester jail to Plymouth in a special car.

At Concord and Laconia hundreds of excited, gesticulating men, women and children climbed all over the special car, mounted the platforms, ascended woodpiles and took every vantage spot from which they could see the face of Almy. When Almy went up to be arraigned, he was fed at almost every station. He had no such luck this time.

Notwithstanding the plea of guilty, evidence in proof of Almy's guilt will be taken to-day, and within two or three days Almy will know his fate. The impression here is that he has saved his neck and that he will be sentenced to not over 30 years' imprisonment. This impression is causing some excitement among the naturally quiet citizens of the New Hampshire hills.

At midnight Almy was hanged in effigy by the citizens from a rope stretched across the principal street. The figure had this inscription in red paint blazoned upon it:

"Almy—this was done by friends of Christie Warden. Will take the original next."

The effigy has a framework of wood, neck, arms, body and legs. A white face is partially concealed by a black cap. A full suit of clothes adorns the figure. The boots are nailed on to the feet.

After Almy pleaded guilty Judge Doe directed that the 80 special jurymen be dismissed. Attorney-General Barnard says that all the evidence so far accumulated by the State will, unless the Court decides to pass sentence without hearing it, be put in.

The law of New Hampshire says that in case a man who pleads guilty shall be found to have committed murder in the first degree he shall be hanged. If, however, he be convicted of murder in the second degree, he may be sentenced to imprisonment for not over 30 years and for a term as much less as the presiding justice may see fit to impose.

Awarded $15,000 Damages.

NEWBURGH, N. Y., Nov. 17.—Engineer Charles H. Gross was yesterday awarded a verdict for $15,000 damages against the Central England Railway Company for injuries sustained by jumping from his engine near Campbell Hall, Orange County, to avoid a collision after he had made all proper efforts to stop his train. Mr. Gross recovered $10,000 damages from the Pennsylvania, Poughkeepsie & Boston Railroad Company for the same accident. Gross has been paralyzed for life on the right side by the accident.

Actor Florence's Condition.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 17.—William J. Florence, the great American actor, who lies stricken with pneumonia in his rooms at the Continental Hotel, showed slight improvement yesterday, though the critical stage has not yet been passed. Two consultations ended with the physicians much in doubt. While the hope of their patient's recovery is brighter, they are compelled to announce that at any moment a change may come.

PENNSYLVANIA BRIEFS.

Wash McNair, extensive horse dealer, at Chambersburg, has assigned; liabilities, $40,000.

William P. Duncan and others of Phillipsburg have made application for authority to organize a National bank.

The condition of Actor William J. Florence, who is sick of pneumonia in Philadelphia, is still regarded as very serious.

Lilly Mackay, 18 years old, employed as a domestic in the home of Rev. Dr. Thomas G. Apple, at Lancaster, took a dose of poison Sunday night, which caused her death.

A CREW RESCUED.

Loss of the Schooner Montcalm in a Gale on Lake Erie.

ERIE, Pa., Nov. 17.—The steamer Chemung, Captain Walter Robinson, reached this port at noon yesterday and reported the loss of the schooner Montcalm, together with her captain, crew of six men and a woman cook, in Lake Erie early in the morning, but a dispatch from Selkirk states that all hands were rescued at 1 o'clock.

The disaster occurred about 30 miles from Erie and 15 miles northeast of Long Point, Canada.

The Chemung was within hailing distance of the sinking vessel about 3:30 o'clock in the morning, but the wind was blowing a gale and all efforts to throw the line to the deck of the Montcalm were futile. In attempting to render assistance the Chemung lost her rudder and might also have been lost had not a passing vessel picked her up and towed into this port. The Montcalm was half full of water when the signal of distress was first sighted, and sank rapidly.

The vessel was an old wooden affair, 257 tons burden, built in 1857, and of little value. She was engaged in the lumber trade.

Her principal owner was Charles H. Blakesle, of Rochester, N. Y.

THE PRESIDENT SHOOTING.

He Will Probably Appoint a New Secretary of War on His Return.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—The President has gone duck shooting. It is expected that he will return prepared to announce his new Secretary of War to the Cabinet at the meeting on Friday.

There are reasons to believe that he may have changed his mind as to the date of making the public announcement for the appointment to that office.

Ex-Secretary Proctor has announced privately that he will be in Washington this week or the first of next.

If the Californians could agree upon a man for the place the appointment would probably come from that State, but such an agreement seems improbable, and it is believed that ex-Governor Cheney of New Hampshire will be the man.

MINISTER PORTER'S VISIT.

The Report That Italy Has Sent an Ultimatum Generally Discredited.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—Minister Porter did not call at the Department of State yesterday. He was granted leave of absence with permission to visit the United States, so his visit to Washington is regarded to have no special significance, as it is customary for Ministers on their return from abroad to call and pay their respects to the Secretary of State and receive any instructions he may wish to give them.

The Department of State has had no correspondence with the Italian government in connection with the New Orleans affair for some time, and the rumor that Italy has sent an ultimatum is generally discredited here.

Sweeping Changes in Articles of Faith.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17. — The special meeting of the Presbytery of New York to consider the report of the General Assembly Committee on the proposed Revision of Faith, and also the recommendations of the local committee thereon, met yesterday. While both of the above committees have suggested some radical changes, they were not sweeping enough for the majority of the members of the local Presbytery. In their desire to be rid of the slightest tendency toward the support of the old Calvinistic article of faith, that of the doctrine of soverign preterition, eternal fore-ordination of everlasting death, the entire confession was carefully scanned and every syllable upon which a construction might be placed suggesting this doctrine, was carefully expunged.

Woman's Department at the Fair.

BOSTON, Nov. 17.—At the afternoon session of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Mrs. Potter Palmer, of Chicago, Cairman of the Board of Lady Managers of the World's Fair, delivered an address in which she asked the cooperation of woman all over the country in making the women's exhibit at the fair something that they may feel proud of. Mrs. Palmer announced that it had been decided that there would be no separate woman's department, but that their exhibits would be displayed in company with those of the men.

The Complaint Was Wrongly Drawn.

BOSTON, Nov. 17.—The case against the members of the Zeta Psi Club of Harvard for alleged liquor selling, which was tried in the Cambridge District Court last spring and resulted in a conviction and the fining of the defendants, has been not pressed in the upper court to which it was appealed. The reason for this disposal of the case was that the complaint was wrongly drawn, as it covered the sale of liquor when it should have charged distribution. A proper complaint can even now be drawn, but the authorities do not seem to be disposed to push the matter.

For the Murder of the Kesters.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 17.—James Gallagher, Joseph Eveland and J. A. Gallagher were lodged in jail last night, charged with the murder of the two Kester brothers at Sybertsville, six years ago. Damaging evidence has been secured against the prisoners.

Regarded as a Bluff.

MONTREAL, Nov. 17.—The threatened wholesale arrest of publishers, editors and correspondents of newspapers that have published revelations in connection with the Whelan Quebec Court House job, on charges of seditious libel, is looked upon as a piece of bluff on the part of the Mercier government. It is generally understood that the Mercier government is in desperate straits, and some movement had to be made to prevent a serious bolt on the part of the Nationalists.

REJOICES IN MURDER

Naval Apprentice Wise and His Heinous Deed.

THREW A FRIEND OVER A CLIFF.

Both Mere Boys Who Were Serving on an English Training Ship.

The Murderer Confesses and Alleges as His Motive that He Wants to be Hanged—Treats the Whole Affair as a Joke and is Tickled at the Prospect of Meeting Death at the Rope's End.

LONDON, Nov. 17.—The town of Weymouth has a sensation which is a matter of general discussion among the regular inhabitants of the place and among the large number of persons who, owing to the salubrity of its climate, spend the autumn and winter there.

The excitement was caused by the arrest of a youth named Wise, who is only 17 years of age, on the charge of murder.

The case is peculiar in many of its details in that there was seemingly no motive for the crime, and that the murderer displays neither fear of the consequences nor remorse for his action.

The fact of the murder would perhaps have been unknown to the authorities for some time, and the identity of the murderer might never have been established, had it not been that Wise, in a cold-blooded, undemonstrative way, confessed his crime, seeming to take pleasure in relating all the horrible details.

Wise is one of the apprentices belonging to H. M. training ship Boscawen, sixteen guns, Commander G. A. Primrose.

The Boscawen recently visited Weymouth and is at present anchored off that port.

Among those who were given liberty were Wise and another youth, who, when they reached the shore, started for a stroll on the cliffs. They proceeded, laughing and chatting and enjoying themselves in the manner of boys ashore for a lark.

Finally they reached a point where the cliffs stand 70 feet above the narrow stretch of shore beneath. Here the two boys stood looking out seaward, still talking in the most friendly manner, when, suddenly and without provocation or warning, Wise placed his hands against his companion, and, exerting all his strength, shoved him over the edge of the precipitous cliffs.

With a shriek of terror the doomed lad clutched at the air in a vain attempt to save himself, and then fell with frightful velocity upon the rocks at the base of the cliffs.

Entirely unconcerned at the terrible crime he had committed Wise wended his way back to the town and subsequently returned to his duties on board the Boscawen.

When Wise's companion did not return at the expiration of the time allowed to him, the officers of the ship made inquiries, and when they questioned Wise, the latter told them that he had pushed him over the cliff.

An investigation was immediately made, and on reaching a spot on the shore beneath the point indicated by Wise in his confession, the officers found the body of the boy. His skull had been fractured by striking on the jagged rocks and he had received other terrible injuries. He was alive when the searchers found him, but he died in a short time.

Wise was immediately placed under arrest, but he takes the whole affair nonchlantly, and laughs and jokes as though he had no heinous crime upon his conscience.

In fact, death as a punishment for the murder of his friend seems to have no terror for him. On the contrary, he discusses the question of being hanged with avidity, and appears to be overjoyed with the prospect of meeting his death by rope on the gallows.

Before he murdered his friend he had often, in the course of conversation with other boys on the ship, expressed a desire to be hanged.

Some time ago Wise made a confession that he had murdered a boy, but no belief was placed in what he said, as there was no evidence to support his statement.

The prisoner has hitherto borne a good character.

As the case stands at present the only possible reason that can be given for the heartless murder is that Wise is afflicted with a morbid desire to obtain notoriety, or that he is mentally irresponsible for his actions.

New Jersey A. O. U. W. Restrained.

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 17.—It was proposed to hold a meeting here of delegates from the various lodges of the Ancient Order of United Workmen throughout the State for the purpose of organizing a grand lodge of that order. The grand lodge was to have jurisdiction for the State. Past Master Workman Van Sant, of Camden, who is opposed to the organization of a grand lodge in the State, secured an injunction restraining the delegates from holding the proposed meeting. A hearing will take place before Chancellor Van Fleet on the question why the injunction should not be made permanent on November 24.

Could Not Live Without His Wife.

SCRANTON, Pa., Nov. 17.—Jefferson Foster, aged 64, was found drowned yesterday in a creek which runs through Forrest Hill Cemetery. The last time he was seen alive was at the grave of his wife. He had deliberately drowned himself.

NEW JERSEY JOTTINGS.

John Hoey's case came up in the United States Court at Trenton, yesterday, and was adjourned to December 15.

Benjamin Rodman, of Ninth and Linden streets, Camden, was committed by the Mayor for wife-beating.

Cleveland's is the Baking Powder used in the U. S. Army.

EDISON HAS A RIVAL.

Dr. Bories Perfects an Electrical Invention for Magnifying Sound.

SNOHOMISH, Wash., Nov. 17.—Mr. Edison will have to look to his laurels in view of a marvellous electrical invention which has been made here rivaling the work of the wizard of Menlo Park.

The inventor is Dr. William Bories, who has worked for ten years on the invention.

The main feature of the instrument is its power of magnifying sound. It is something like a stethoscope, and is being used to sound the pulsations of the heart.

The battery which runs the machine is in four cups, which are sufficient to strongly charge it with electricity. Polar batteries transmit the electricity from the battery cups to the machine, which is very simple in appearance, seeming to be only a sounding board, a foot square, with two carbons attached to the wire that connect with the battery on one side and with the earphone wires on the other.

If a watch is placed on the sounding board, or if the sounding board is placed on the chest of an individual, the machine will greatly magnify the ticking of the watch or the beating of the heart.

If one talks or coughs against the board their voice will be greatly magnified. If a finger be rubbed over one of the screws or on the sound board it will emit a sound through the earphone like the buzz of a sawmill.

Whenever friction is produced by rubbing on the board or by the vibration of sounds a continuous and brilliant light is produced between the two carbons. This wonderful machine can be connected with any telephone system, and it will greatly aid physicians in examining their patients when they cannot visit them in person.

Dr. Bories made every part of this wonderful machine with his own hands, and expects to improve it by making it smaller and less cumbersome. He has christened it the "stetophone."

The Collector Was Wrong.

BOSTON, Nov. 17.—The Supreme Court of the United States has reversed the decision of the Circuit Court here, and set aside the ruling of the Collector of Customs in the case of the American Net and Twine Company. Plaintiffs imported some twine which was classed by the collector as linen thread. The firm brought suit in the Circuit Court, claiming that the twine should be classed as gilling twine. The Circuit Court, upheld the ruling of the collector and the case was taken to the Supreme Court, which holds that the importation is gilling twine and subject to 15 per cent. less duty than assessed. More than $100,000 are involved in the case.

Peace Congress Adjourned.

ROME, Nov. 17.—The Peace Congress adjourned yesterday, after resolving that all questions between the powers should be decided by arbitration. Delegate Howard earnestly urged that an appeal be made to all Christians to prevent war, but the appeal was voted down, apparently because it was confined to Christians.

Killed by Falling Coal.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 17.—By a fall of coal in the Clear Spring Colliery, at West Pittston, James Sheridan and Joseph Cologinsy lost their lives. They were caught under the falling mass and were taken out dead.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

Smallpox is epidemic in Georgia.

Steamer Rio Jansiro sailed for Hong Kong, having on board 400 Chinamen, who will not be legally entitled to return to the United States.

A plot for a wholesale jail delivery was spoiled by a watchful sheriff at Indianapolis. Eight fines saws were taken from prisoners last night.

Argument in the cases involving the constitutionality of the Anti-Lottery law in the Supreme Court of the United States will be concluded to-day.

News from Brazil continues to be of a conflicting character, official dispatches saying that the country is quiet, while private telegrams tell of secessions and fighting.

Indicted for Murder.

NEWPORT, R. I., Nov. 17.—The grand jury yesterday indicted Georgiana Thompson for murder. A short time ago the Thompson woman confessed to being the mother of the child found in the harbor off Fort Greene. She was arraigned and pleaded not guilty.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—The express messengers and railroad employes have appeared in their new uniforms.

—The Grace church guild met at the residence of Mrs. E. L. Fitch, 215 Park avenue, this afternoon at 2.

—"Perseverance" is the topic at the Y. W. C. T. U. meeting this afternoon, and Miss Wyckoff is the leader.

—A sociable of the Y. P. S. C. E. of the Congregational church will be held in the church parlors Thursday evening.

—The Jr. O. U. A. M. fair just closed was very successful. The profits were over $300. Franklin council is enterprising and progressive, and makes a success of all it undertakes.

—A conference of Christian boys connected with the boys' department of the Young Men's Christian association of New Jersey, will be held in this city Saturday and Sunday, Nov. 28 and 29.

—Important business will be transacted at the meeting of the Young Men's Auxiliary of the Y. M. C. A. this evening. An enjoyable programme, consisting of songs and recitations, has also been arranged.

—A contract has just been filed by Daniel F. Dugan and Monroe R. Brewster, of this city, with Herman Hansen, builder. The contractor agrees to erect a building on the east side of Kensington avenue, for $3,000.

—The valuable property on which Packer's big furniture store stands is advertised by the sheriff to be sold at public auction, at the court-house at Elizabeth, Wednesday, Dec. 23, at 2 p. m., to satisfy the claim of the First National Bank on the estate of the late "Uncle Billy" Moore, against John C. Moore his heir.

—Williams has introduced another new cold-weather drink on the market. He calls it Tomato Bouillion, and those who have dropped in at the handsome new pharmacy, corner of Front and Grove streets, say it is the finest and most nutritious and refreshing beverage they yet have tasted. Williams is the only druggist who keeps it.

—That successful and prosperous journal, the Sunday Morning Call, of Pittsfield, Mass., has just completed its third year of publication, and celebrates its anniversary by a double issue of sixteen pages. As usual, this number gives a complete epitome of the news of the week, and covers fully all the local and neighboring happenings, and in addition publishes a most interesting history of the paper and biographies of its editors. The Call is a model country weekly, and a most welcome visitor to the exchange editor's desk. It has fought its way to success against heavy odds, and is the stronger, better and brighter for it.

CLOSE CALL FOR DR. ALLIS.

A Friend Who Happened In Opportunely Saves Him from Death by Coal Gas.

Dr. J. A. Allis, of 87 Park avenue, had a narrow escape from death yesterday. He had been out driving, and was chilled through when he reached his office. He stirred up the fire and heaped on coal, but neglected to arrange the stove drafts properly and open the dampers. The result was that coal-gas was rapidly generated and in great volume, and before the doctor was aware of its insidious and deadly presence in the atmosphere it had rendered him unconscious.

A friend happened in just in the nick of time, and found him lying prostrate and senseless on the floor. He opened the windows to let the fre h air drive out the noxious fumes, and summoned Dr. J. T. Fritts, who with much difficulty revived his fellow-physician. Dr. Allis was weak and exhausted all the afternoon, and did not fully recover till evening. To-day he is able to attend to his patients. It is hardly necessary to say that he is very grateful for his friend's opportune call, that saved his life

A Popular Plainfield Pianist

Miss Alice O. Smith of this city was pianist at an entertainment given by the Epworth League in the M. E church at Madison, Thursday evening. The Madison Eagle says of her:

"She was received with general enthusiasm. The arrangement from Gounod's Faust, by Franz Liszt, is an extremely brilliant one, involving many difficult passages of touch and technique, and it was generally admitted that she acquitted herself with great credit. As Miss Smith has given her attention to the study of music, it is safe to predict that she has a remarkably successful and bright future before her in the music world. In the other numbers, Miss Smith displayed that force, clearness and brilliancy in execution which characterizes her playing and gives a charm to her entertainments."

To Workmen.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—We are told that the success of the Citizens' Ticket is against our interests, but how much have the Plainfield Water Supply company and their champions, the nominees on the Republican ticket, considered or aided the interests of Plainfield workmen when they brought in a gang of Italians, because they could be hired at starvation wages, and thereby crowded out our home laborers? Is this the protection to labor we have been promised and have a right to expect? Scores of our citizens have been obliged to stand idly by and see the illiterate and greasy Italian hold up his brass number at roll-call, while we tax-paying workmen have been obliged to ask for bread. Fellow-workmen, stand up for "hearth and fireside"!

A TAX-PAYING WORKMAN.

A Sweet Singer Again in Plainfield.

Mrs. Evelyn Everett Spicer, who will be the soloist at the Park Avenue Baptist church at the service of song next Sunday evening, is a lady of charming personality, a bride within the year, a consistent member of the "Old John Street" Methodist church in New York, and sings for the love of singing. Her fine natural voice has been cultivated a high degree by Italian masters, and there is no doubt that her rendering of "Calvary" by Rodney will be superb Besides "Calvary" she will sing an entirely new arrangement, by Bischoff, of that ever-sweet "Rock of Ages", which has never yet been heard by a Plainfield audience.

Damaged by the Wind.

The wind this afternoon blew over and smashed a show-case in front of U. B. Crane's store, 12 Park avenue, and wrecked the chimney of William H. Brower's building at No. 8. A number of people in the street narrowly escaped being hit by the falling bricks.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Corra Ryno, sr., is quite ill at the home of constable Rockafellow, 22 West Third street.

Harry A. Thorne, jr., returned home yesterday from the Adirondacks, after an absence of two years.

James Clinton Field, the Somerville druggist, paid a visit to his former partner, L. Warren Randolph, in this city, today.

R. F. R. Hunteman has severed his connection with the Courier to devote his attention to special correspondence for his syndicate of newspapers.

James McGee, of North Plainfield, will deliver an address at the Y. M. C. A. district convention, Rahway, Saturday evening, on the subject "The Young Men's Christian Association. Is it an Institution Worthy of Encouragement and Support?"

The next tea of the Ladies' Christian Work society of the Trinity Reformed church will be given at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Tier, Bank place, Thursday evening, from 5 to 9. As is usual at these teas, a most enjoyable evening is expected.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria,
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

THE PEACE STREET PROJECT.

The City Council Awaits the Action of North Plainfield Township.

There was presented to the Plainfield common council last night a petition signed by the requisite number of taxpayers representing the necessary one-half of the total frontage of property along the line of the proposed Peace street extension, asking that the extension be made

When the petition had been read, Mr. Rushmore introduced a resolution that anyone present desiring to be heard in the matter be given a chance to speak. The resolution was adopted. As there was no one present, outside of the members of the council and clerk Coward, except the newspaper reporters and three others who had no more interest in Peace street than in Kamschatka, a dense silence prevailed.

Then Mr. Rushmore introduced another resolution, which was likewise passed, that action in the matter be deferred till North Plainfield township had opportunity to hear the petition. The matter is to be brought before the township committee to-night, and then the township and city will take joint action.

No other business of importance came up before the council, which delayed coming to order till 8:40, and which adjourned, some time after 9, for one week.

President Smith referred back to corporation counsel for explanation the paragraph in his recent report stating that the street railway suit was being adjusted. He wanted to know what the compromise was, and said that the street committee had n't heard of it.

New Jersey's Oldest Odd-Fellow.

Abraham Phillips died at his residence, 35 New street, New Brunswick, yesterday, of paralysis, at the age of ninety-one years and eleven days. He was a chain and horseshoe-nail maker. He was born in Stowebridge, England, and came to this country fifty-one years ago. He was a member of the Manchester Unity in England and of New Brunswick Lodge and Middlesex Encampment, I. O. O. F. He is believed to have been the oldest Odd-Fellow in New Jersey.

The Plainfield Runner Won.

The foot race at the Crescent rink last night was witnessed by an audience of 200 people. The contestants were J. W. Anderson, of Plainfield, formerly of Pittsburg, and George Dufrane, of Elizabeth, champion long-distance runner of the State. Anderson easily beat Dufrane, covering the three miles in 15 minutes 20 seconds. The race was for a purse of $100 a side. The two men will run five miles for $250 a side, at a later date.

Tall Oaks from Little Acorns Grow.

The Acorn Athletic club have elected the following officers for one year:

President—Frank Meeker.
First Vice-president—Joseph Acheson.
Second Vice-president—Samuel Terry.
Secretary—Gus. Wilson.

First Lieutenant—Frank Sparling.
Second Lieutenant—William Fireing.
Board of Trustees—Chas. Keller, Audley Marsh, Thomas Dwyer, Arthur Adams.

An Opportune Subject.

In the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church, to-morrow evening at 8, an address will be given on "Chili and the Chilians", by the Rev. J. M. Allis, D. D., of Santiago, Chili. The address will be illustrated by stereopticon views representing Valparaiso, Santiago, and other points of special interest. All interested in mission work are invited to be present.

—There was doubt about there being a bowling match at the Crescent League alleys to-night. It was feared that the Elizabeth team would break its engagement, because it played a game last night and has a league game on to-morrow night. But late this afternoon a dispatch was received saying that the Elizabeths would have a team on hand. The Crescents will have a good game with the Catholic Young Men's team of Elizabeth to-morrow night, for a pennant.

Easily made. A cheap and delicious drink for 25 cents can be made from Hires's Root Beer packages. Five gallons. Be careful that you get the real, genuine Hires's. There are a number of would-be Root Beer packages on the market.

Colored Pride.

Some people can't stand prosperity. An old Texas darky who by industry and economy had accumulated a fortune of sixty-nine cents started a fish market in the public square. He had one catfish on the head of an empty barrel. A gentleman picked up the fish, smelt it and asked the price.

"It am wuff one dollah."

"Whew!"

"Frow down dat fish, sah, and leab my office, sah."—Texas Siftings.

SOFTENING OF BRAIN.

Take the Symptoms in Time.

The above represents an almost incurable case of softening of the brain. This terrible disease can be cured, but must be taken in its first symptoms, which are often slight and apparently trivial. A person grows nervous, weak, irritable, sleepless, wakes tired, has headache, loss of appetite, confused mind, dim vision, loss of memory, dull feeling head, dizziness, despondency, strange sensations, feeling of anxiety or apprehension, cold feet and legs, loses interest in things. You must not neglect these symptoms a moment, but use the great brain and nerve restorative, Dr. Greene's Nervura, at once. This wonderful nerve strengthener will surely cure if taken in time. Use it now if you have the slightest of the above feelings Purely vegetable and harmless. Druggists sell it, $1.

"I employed 23 doctors for my wife. Many pronounced her incurable, some advised placing her in an asylum, while others did her no good. She had poor blood, was weak, nervous, debilitated and half crazy. She had female weakness and her kidneys were very bad. Dr. Greene's Nervura has completely cured her. She thanks God that I bought Dr. Greene's Nervura.
N. B. KING, Danvers, Mass."

N. B. Dr. Greene, the successful specialist in curing all forms of nervous and chronic diseases, 35 W. 14th St., New York, can be consulted, free, personally, or by letter. Call or write him about your case, or send for symptom blank to fill out, and a letter fully explaining your disease, giving advice, etc., will be returned free. 9 15 td thus

HONORING THE DEAD.

Glowing Tribute to Gen. Fay and Mr. Wilson, by Fellow-Members of the Bar.

The committee on resolutions in memory of J. Augustus Fay and William P. Wilson, deceased members of the Union county bar, reported in the circuit court, Judge VanSyckel presiding, Saturday.

The committee were William R. Wilson, E. S. Atwater and Joseph Alward.

The report was submitted by Mr. Wilson, who read the resolutions, which were ordered inscribed on the minutes of the court—Judge VanSyckel remarking that he concurred in the expressions.

The memorial is as follows:

GEN. J. AUGUSTUS FAY.

J. Augustus Fay, a member of the Union county bar, was removed by death in September last.

For more than twenty-five years he had been a member of the bar of New Jersey, and a resident of this city nearly all his life. During all that period he was an honor to his profession and respected by his many friends.

As a public man he was well known. He was prosecutor of the pleas of Union county for two terms, from 1871 to 1881, having been first appointed by Gov. Randolph. He also served on Gov. Randolph's staff as judge advocate general.

He was a soldier in the late war and served with distinction. We, his associates, are now assembled to show our respect for the memory of our deceased brother. When he was with us we esteemed him as a genial companion, a sincere friend, and an earnest and able advocate. Now that he has left us we think of his many excellent qualities and mourn his loss.

Resolved, That it be recorded on the minutes of the court; that we respected J. Augustus Fay while living; that the bar of Union county lost an able lawyer and earnest advocate. In the death of our brother, we bow in silence before God, who has in his all-wise Providence called him so early from his useful life on earth.

WILLIAM P. WILSON.

William Penn Wilson, a member of the Union county bar, died July 30, 1891.

He was a native of New Jersey and a graduate of Rutgers College. He was admitted to the bar as attorney in 1870 and as counselor in 1873.

For a number of years he was associated with the Hon. Robert S. Green in the practice of law, in the city of Elizabeth. Afterwards he was in partnership with the late George P. Suydam, of Plainfield. For several years past he has had an office in the city of New York, and has carried on business there as well as in New Jersey. He was a member also of the New York bar.

Mr. Wilson was a man of good attainments and had a fine legal mind. He prepared his cases with great research and thoroughness. His associates always found him courteous and obliging. They mourn the loss of one who was yet in his prime, and they desire that this minute of their respect to his memory be entered on the records of the court.

Somerset Street English, As She Is Printed.

The following imperishable contribution to polite and cultured literature is from the Somerset street paper of a recent date. To be appreciated, it must be read, and studied:

PEN SKETCHES FROM LIFE.

A little old country woman, feeling tired no doubt, sat down on the raised entrance to a barber shop, on Park avenue, this morning.

She had a large, empty, market basket, the contents of which she had sold.

To improve the time taken to rest, she pulled her skirts around so as to get at a capacious pocket, out of which she scooped handfuls of small change—the proceeds of her sales.

This change she deliberately counted, piece by piece, meanwhile all unconscious of the fact that she was attracting attention. When the counting was finished to her satisfaction she arose and ambled sedately homeward.

A TEMPERANCE LECTURE.

An old man, gray-haired, comfortably clad, with a cotton umbrella, clumsily rolled, in his right hand, after a prolonged effort, yesterday afternoon, to walk on eight feet of sidewalk, gave up the attempt as a bad job, in the—to him—heaving condition of the earth, and fell full length in front of the Methodist Episcopal church.

It was a sad sight. A workman passing with an effort, for the inebriate was like a wet rag, lifted him to his feet and braced him against the fence. Then, after a breathing spell, he started him on his way, keeping a firm clasp on his arm to prevent another fall.

After holding him thus for a short distance, having to go in an opposite direction he let him "go it" alone. When last seen he was walking "Spanish" far out West Front street.

This is all delightfully funny, but the paragraph about the "old man" "comfortably clad with a gray-haired umbrella clumsily rolled in his right hand after a prolonged effort" is the most screamingly ludicrous thing that the great American humorist has ever penned. And yet the "journalist" whose brilliant mind produced it did not mean to be funny. Instead, he dreamed he was writing pathos.

The Frazee Lee Will Again.

Herbert W. Knight, master in chancery at Newark, yesterday continued the examination in the contested will case of the late Frazee Lee, the wealthy Plainfield hermit. At his death Lee willed most of his fortune to the Scotch Plains Baptist church. This was contested by the heirs, and a compromise was effected whereby the property was divided between the heirs and the church. Then the trustees of the church took exceptions to the accounting by the trustees appointed by the will, and the chancellor referred the matter to master in chancery Knight. The only witness examined yesterday was John H. Jackson, one of the executors, whose testimony was of a technical character.

Shiloh's Cough Cure

This is beyon question the most successful Cough Medicine we have ever sold; a few doses invariably cure the worst cases of Cough, Croup and Bronchitis, while its wonderful success in the cure of Consumption is without a parallel in the history of medicine. Since its first discovery it has been sold on a guarantee, a test which no other medicine can stand. If you have a cough we earnestly ask you to try it. Price 10c., 50c. and $1. If your lungs are sore, chest, or back lame, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by J. G. Miller, No. 10 East Front street, Plainfield N.J.

THAT CHURCH RUCTION.

Further Developments of the Affair—The Pastor's Side of the Story.

Another feature of the trouble between the Rev. J. A. Gutteridge, pastor of the Davis Memorial M. E. church at Harrison, and Charles P. Kinsey, the deposed superintendent of the Sunday-school, was developed Sunday. Mr. Kinsey, who is father of the Rev. W. C. Kinsey of Dunellen, and has for years served in the capacity of sexton of the church, resigned in the morning, and when David Burgess, who has a Bible class meeting before the regular church service, arrived, he found that the church had not been opened nor had the fires in the furnaces been built, so that the church building was unfit for services. Shortly afterward one of the young men in the class arrived with the keys, saying that Mr. Kinsey had sent them around and had given up his place as sexton. The church was opened, and a little fire was started, so that the building was partially heated in time for service. At the session of the Sunday-school in the afternoon, neither Mr. Kinsey nor his wife, who had been a teacher, was present, and the pastor of the church, assisted by the assistant superintendent, Theodore Cordes, took charge of the school. No allusion was made to the trouble. The day was missionary Sunday, and the Rev. Dr. Craemer, late United States Minister to Switzerland and Denmark, and a brother-in-law of General Grant, occupied the pulpit both morning and evening.

The following letter, reprinted from the Newark Evening News, gives a different side of the controversy than that published in these columns yesterday:

To the Editor of The News:—Your editorial in this evening's NEWS commending the course of our pastor, the Rev. John A. Gutteridge, meets with the approval of all the official board of our church with but one or two exceptions. The articles published last evening and also this evening, while they have some semblance of truth, are far from being true. They come from a source that is antagonistic to the pastor and to the prosperity of our society.

C. P. Kinsey represents an element that have done and are still doing their utmost to injure the influence of both the pastor and church upon the community. The entertainment given in our church a few days ago was disgraceful. Its consistency is unquestionable. The young lady [Miss Louise Apgar of Dunellen] was not to blame for what she said. The blame rests upon the superintendent for permitting the recitation in a place consecrated to the worship of God. Had it been in a hall or any other place but the House of God it would have excited no comment. Our pastor has been faithful to his church. He has succeeded by his own personal efforts in relieving our church of a debt of nearly $6,000, and by his earnest effort in this direction has placed our church upon a footing of respectability and a standing equal to any church in the Newark conference.

The article published in this evening's edition states that the whole affair is but a climax of a series of persecutions upon the part of the pastor. This is false. Reverse this statement and you will come nearer the truth. Persecution comes from a number of members of our church who have done their utmost to destroy the pastor's influence. They have not been driven from their official positions, but have, some of them, resigned because they could not rule. Others have been displaced by the people because they were not in sympathy with the pastor and his work. Again, our church has never had 400 members. We now number about 250, and our congregations, instead of averaging about sixty-five, average about one hundred or more.

At the entertainment November 5 the pastor had much to humiliate him. When he entered the church on that evening the first thing he noticed was a drop curtain placed across almost the entire width of the church, giving it the appearance more of a theatre than a temple of worship. The first recitation was a burlesque on the sacred office of the ministry, representing a minister being called to the church that paid the highest salary. The pastor remained quiet through it all. The second recitation was also entirely out of place in the church. The word "nigger" was used at least three times. Then the pastor arose and in a quiet and gentlemanly manner requested the young lady to use some other phrase as there were a few good people connected with our church that were colored, which might perhaps be their misfortune.

The young lady went on with her recitation until its close, when Mr. Kinsey arose and in the presence of some 350 people said that he considered that they had been grossly insulted by their pastor, and declared the entertainment closed. Objection was made to the closing of the entertainment, and it continued. Our pastor and his friends felt that he had been greatly humiliated in the presence of strangers as well as friends. He felt that Mr. Kinsey, as superintendent of the Sunday-school, holding an office as important almost as the pastor's, should be in harmony and accord with him, and not wishing to be harsh in his treatment toward Mr. Kinsey called upon him, and in the presence of an official member of our church requested him in all kindness to apologize or retract his insult. Mr. Kinsey refused, and when the pastor informed him that he should feel compelled to enter a complaint against him at the quarterly conference he (Mr. Kinsey) threatened to publish it throughout the entire community. This he has certainly done.

At the quarterly conference Mr. Kinsey apparently had the sympathy of the entire conference, but his attitude and that of his son, the Rev. W. C. Kinsey, of Dunellen, (who by courtesy of the conference was permitted to be present), entirely changed the feeling of the conference so that when the vote was taken Mr. Kinsey was removed and the pastor sustained by a vote of 10 to 3. The pastor of any church has a right to object to anything that he may consider inconsistent or out of place in the House of God, and while some may question the propriety of his objection the official board and a very large majority of the membership and congregation stand by and sustain him in endeavoring to keep the House of God free from everything contaminating. By publishing this you will do justice to one who has been true to his principles and fearless in the discharge of what he considers to be his duty.

Respectfully,
WM. H. GARDINOR,
Recording Steward.

THE STORY OF MAN.

A Profound and Thrilling Work, Giving a Marvelous History of the Human Race.

The renowned author and historian, J. W. Buel, has just completed, and the Historical Publishing company of Philadelphia has produced in the finest style of the printer's and engraver's art, a marvelous book, "The Story of Man", a work of thrilling fact and exciting history, which follows the footprints of the human race from the earliest ages, and brings up to the present date, complete, the wondrous tales of man's achievements.

It is a most fascinating book, and an exhaustless mine of information. The deepest research of scientific explorers has contributed to its pages, and the experiences of travelers among the wild races of the world have added to its wealth of marvelous fact.

The book carries the reader back to the most primitive peoples, and reveals the every-day life of man before he had taken the first steps towards civilization, when imbruted nature dominated and made of him a companion of the savage beasts that shared with him the dominion of the earth. From this primal condition one finds man to have developed slowly, the earliest evidence of his improvement being manifested by a kind of society, and in the manufacture of stone implements with which he contended with wild animals first, and soon afterward used them as weapons against his fellow men.

"The Story of Man", therefore, describes not only the slow stages of development, but also dwells particularly upon early man's surroundings; the forests of desolation, howling packs of fierce animals, terrible beasts of giant stature and unsated voracity, the mighty creatures of brake, jungle and plain, the ferocious inhabitants of land and water, whose appalling aspects fortunately no longer affright the world.

Besides the pictures thus drawn to illustrate man as hunter and warrior, one is made familiar with primitive man in his home-life, his family, the ties of relationship, the unwritten laws for mutual protection and advantage, his marriage and burial ceremonies, feasts, festivals and athletic tournaments; his warlike life is exhibited by descriptions of the gathering of clans, tests of strength and valor, how chieftainships were bestowed and honors awarded.

The people of the stone age are thoroughly described in "The Story of Man". Their homes, their weapons, their manner of living, their desperate hand-to-hand battles with contending tribes, and their furious contests with wild beasts and prehistoric monsters that roamed the world in that distant age, carrying terror in their path and leaving desolation and dismay in their track—monsters so frightful that it is asserted modern man could not look upon them and live.

From the stone age, the duration of which cannot be even approximately determined, man emerged at last into what is known as the bronze age.

One finds also in this book a history of those marvelous people, the lake dwellers, of the neolithic, or polished stone period, who were distinguished for their curious custom of constructing their dwellings upon piles driven into lakes. The fierce Vikings of the northern seas, those desperately valorous buccaneers who subjugated Iceland and the Celts of Scotland and England, and who laid tribute upon all the people of northern Europe, are also glowingly pictured in an eloquent and powerful description.

A people even more remarkable than the Vikings, but with whom they were contemporary, were the fanatical zealots of early Britain known as the druidical sect, who flourished in what is now France and England, before the time of Christ. The history of these wonderful barbaric religionists, as detailed in this work, is more thrilling than that recorded concerning any other people.

Who, and what were the singular races that erected vast mounds of earth and colossal temples of stone, extending from the great lakes of the North to the Isthmus of Darien and which have since excited the wonder of the civilized world, and then disappeared as mysteriously as they came? "The Story of Man" answers these questions by a statement of all the accumulated facts bearing on the subject, and presents a startling array of the most thrillingly interesting matter that ever appeared in print. From the ancient races of America who have disappeared forever in the silent grave of the forgotten past, one is led naturally to a consideration of the more modern Toltecs and Aztecs, who flourished many centuries ago in Mexico and Central America. Among this strange and remarkable people one finds a civilization closely resembling that of the old Egyptians, closely intermingled with certain beliefs and ceremonies like those of the ancient Israelites, which has caused some learned men to suppose that the lost tribes of Israel may, in some miraculous manner, have found an asylum in the wilds of Prehistoric America.

"The Story of Man" furthermore reveals, in the brilliant and fascinating language of its gifted author, all that is known of the lost Atlantis, which Plato describes and Bacon pictures. Tradition says that this wonderful and mysterious continent formed the highway between Ancient Europe and Prehistoric America, and was the cradle of a mighty people gifted with the highest civilization, which was disseminated through other parts of the world by restless emigrants seeking new homes, and from whom sprang races that peopled adjacent lands. Beautiful but ill-fated Atlantis, with its towering mountains, its pleasant valleys, and its teeming cities, is reputed in fable and story to have disappeared in a single night, with its precious burden of a splendid people, beneath the waves of the Atlantic, the result of one of those terrible internal convulsions of the earth peculiar to the earlier ages.

In short, "The Story of Man" is a grand book of marvels, and in its pages one finds such a host of most wonderful events described, and into its thrilling pages is gathered so vast an array of facts about these ancient and mysterious matters, that the reader's great admiration is excited, and he acquires grander and nobler conceptions of the history and vicissitudes of his race.

For any library "The Story of Man" is a treasure. For a holiday gift to young people who have a thirst for knowledge it is most appropriate. It is a book every family ought to have.

The Fly Wheel Alone Blamed.

MANCHESTER, N. H., Nov. 17.—The Coroner's jury in whose hands has been placed the investigation of the causes which led to the awful disaster in the Amoskeag mills some four weeks since, resulting in the death of three persons, the wounding of many others and great damage to property, made its report yesterday, and charge the disaster directly to the fly wheel being defective. No one is blamed for the accident.

Convicted of Murder.

EASTVILLE, Va., Nov. 17.—George E. Dreyer, a young Pole, has been convicted of the murder of Miss Fannie McFadden of Cape Charles City on Oct. 16, and will be sentenced to be hanged. Dryer was Miss McFadden's clerk in her grocery store. While she was asleep he choked her to death and stole $400 from her money drawer. He narrowly escaped lynching at the time of the murder.

A Firebug Arrested.

GENEVA, N.Y., Nov. 17.—Fred White, hostler at the Geneva Hotel, which was burned Sunday, was charged with starting the fire, and finally admitted his guilt. At his examination he was held for the grand jury. It is thought that he also set fire to the buildings in Senaca Falls. When arrested he appeared to be suffering from delerium tremens.

Eloping Pair Arrested.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Nov. 17.—Detectives yesterday afternoon arrested George Aies and Lulu Devore, at the Sherman House, International Bridge, where they had registered under assumed names. Aies is a married man from Dayton, O., whence he eloped with Miss Devore last Wednesday. The latter is an heiress and beautiful, while her lover is almost repulsive in appearance. After considerable persuasion and a promise that her friends would withdraw a warrant for Aies in Buffalo, Miss Devore consented to return to Dayton.

FASHION'S FANCIES.

Some of the Most Interesting of Autumn's Eccentricities.

The People Who Revive Trunk Hose Must Have a Sense of Humor—Fancy Jackets and Cloaks—The Sheath Skirt and Skirt with Crinoline.

[COPYRIGHT, 1891.]

A friend of mine was telling me the other day a little experience with her tailor, which seems to bode ill for her getting dresses to suit her in the future. She had the hardihood to object to one of his decrees when, drawing himself up with dignity, the dapper little autocrat delivered himself:

"There was a man from Cleveland in here yesterday; he used to know you when you lived in Cleveland. He saw you in Dr. John Hall's church last Sunday in that Louis Quinze brocade coat I made for you. He said he looked across the aisle at you and you were just like a fashion plate, for all the world."

My friend was not brave enough to tell the tailor that she objected to looking like a fashion plate, and so he inflated himself like a turkey cock in bright weather and proceeded to make her brown and blue checked Orkney tweed in the manner that seemed good to him and not at all in the manner that seemed good to her.

The autocracy of the tailor bodes even more ill than common this winter; for there is hardly a fashion or a fancy on the schedule for the season that does not already manifest a wild impatience to kick up its heels and run off into coltish vagaries. For example, I saw a very pretty pink-cheeked girl yesterday in a frock of plum color and apricot yellow. She wore a bonnet of plum colored velvet with a yellow crown overset with jet and trimmed with plum colored plumes. She had yellow gloves, a vest of yellow kid — and this was the touch of extravagance in the ensemble — to the back of her revers collar faced with yellow was pinned an apricot yellow velvet rosette with ends long enough to come forward under the arms on each side and tie in a bow just below the bust, the loops falling quite to the hem of the gown. The ribbon, mind you, was not narrow ribbon, but broad and heavy and fully conscious of its own exceeding worth and dignity. At the early season tea to which the apricot and plume costume was invited, its wearer stepped on the velvet ribbon at least half a dozen times while alighting from the carriage and going up half a dozen steps to the front door.

I don't know that the eccentricities of fashion are of large interest, and yet in a way it gratifies one's sense of humor to see what is being worn. Take as an instance the traveling cloak I have figured. It was my fortune to sit beside this cloak in a run from Newport and New York—please do not think I spend my autumn vibrating between the two cities—after the last of the regattas. It was worn by a tall and extremely handsome red-headed girl. You can imagine how the long straight lengths of it seemed to sweep down and away from her. Its fabric was tan-colored camel's hair; its back was fitted close, a deep box plait running down the middle. Its fronts were loose, bound with dark and red braid and fastened with buttons. Over the sleeves were caps forming double capes which reached to the bottom of the waist behind. It's not a bad sort of garment, and it's nothing against it if it reminds one of costume plates of the twelfth century, but it cannot be denied that it is extreme.

Consider, too, the jacket that is set down in the second illustration; it, too, may be a very good sort of jacket but quite decidedly it is extreme. I made a study of this jacket at one of those functions called private openings, meaning displays for the benefit of invited guests chosen from the "elite directory." I am not sure that I can describe it correctly as to its details. The waistcoat with its deep basque cut in one with the garment was of a dark Spanish yellow cloth inclining to brown with yellowish ivory buttons mottled with brown. The coat was of a rich dark mahogany cloth edged with a narrow band of even darker velvet. From beneath the square collar standing up the throat came the ends of a dark velvet tie expanding on the white shirt front frilled with white ruffles. Note the lace puffs at the wrists below the square cuffs, and tell me if the young woman who wears this jacket will not figure bravely as a fine young cavalier.

Yet I haven't committed myself to admiration of it, mark this please.

As if paniers did not announce with sufficient clearness fashion's intentions to accentuate the trip, look at the picture I give you of trunk hose. It was at one of the autumn weddings that I saw this costume worn by a piquant young matron, sister to the bride. I recollect the colors and materials. The sleeve caps and bodice belt were of pink velvet with flower brocade in gray; the bodice front was of mercury gray silk, and the double ruffle at the waist forming the curious resemblance of trunk hose was of the same material. Such a design could not by any conceivable stretch of the imagination be artistically suitable to a woman's figure, but on the young matron who wore it, she being extremely slender, it was as little objectionable as it is capable of being.

The bonnet worn with this toilet repeated the pink and gray and accentuated the colors with jet trimmings.

By the way, what an amount of jet there is this autumn and how heavy it is. I noted a costume of the same private opening of which I have told you which offered a good illustration of jet tendencies. It is figured with the long cloak in the first picture. The bell-shaped skirt—to say truth that other descriptive term extinguisher is quite as appropriate—was of beige cloth, bordered with a leaf applique in black velvet. The long coat was cut in deep, narrow tabs all around, finished with velvet leaves and a very deep jet fringe. The coat opened over a gathered bodice of beige silk, and was to be worn with a little black velvet turban with Mercury's wings.

THE TRUNK HOSE.

It is not easy, even after long experience, to understand the absolute lack of common sense manifested by fashion. Why, for example, should anybody wear jet fringe?

Mouflon is among the prettiest of the fur novelties. The soft grayish white of it goes well with many colors. There are a good many women who appreciate it. Now that I think of it I saw Ella Wheeler Wilcox hovering over a cloak dress adorned with it, not many days ago. It's my impression she bought it, for she usually knows what suits her. The long, overlopping garment was of a mercury gray-faced cloth, with judicious but not overdone embroidery in black, and with edgings at bottom and up and down the front and at throat and vaist and belt of the soft, feathery mouflon.

I have seen a variety of evening wraps, prepared in advance of the season, and white, rose and pale green seem to be preferred colors among them. Cream white camel's hair, lined with dull red, makes a luxurious garment, especially if it has trimmings of seal or some rich dark fur. White faced cloth is lined with rose colored silk and trimmed with shaggy white Thibet fur. An antique white brocade, flowered with pale colored orchids or violets and ferns is beautiful wrap material; passementerie, gold and fur are used for decorations, and white or pink plush forms the sleeves. Pale green cloth is effective, with white fur to give it distinction.

The most comical thing about the present fashion situation is the wavering between the sheath skirt and the loop skirt; between "draperies" tight as trousers and those which call for twenty yards of material. The newest sheath skirt is more of a sheath than ever. It is strained about the figure with not an inch to spare. It has a gored seam up the front and narrow gores on each side and no fullness except for four inches in the middle of the back. It is as narrow a skirt as was ever made, and makes a pocket more than ever an unattainable luxury to be classed with the things to be looked for only in the millenium. It is absolute in its emphasis of its side of the skirt question, but on the other hand the bell skirt is now made with three flounces reaching from waist to ground and quite on friendly terms with the crinoline. We shall see what we shall see.

ELLEN OSBORN.

Barrelled Up His Son.

An eccentric man named George Bump, living in North Lyme, Conn., the other afternoon attempted to put a head in a cider barrel, but could not make the head stay while he tightened the hoops. So he put his five-year-old son, who is deaf and dumb, in the barrel to hold up the head, and soon the barrel was headed up. Bump went to work in the field and forgot his son, until his wife asked him where the boy was. Bump ran to the barrel, knocked out the head, and found the boy breathing through the bunghole, but so frightened that he went into spasms. Bump was arrested, but was afterward released. He has always been known for his absent-mindedness.

DAMAGE BY STORM

The Nor'wester Creates Havoc in Many Quarters.

SEVERAL SHIPS DRIVEN ASHORE

A Factory Near Binghamton, N. Y., Blown Down and Employes Injured.

Cleveland Swept by a Blizzard and Traffic Impeded by the Snow—Railroad Property on the Hudson Destroyed by a Tornado—Fears for Vessels on Long Island Sound—Worst Storm in Years.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 18.—The storm which reached here yesterday has done a fearful amount of damage along the shore of the Sound. All the harbors are full of sailing craft that have run in for shelter.

The New Haven Yacht Club House was lifted from its foundation and dropped back some eighteen inches from where it originally was. Small boats were driven up into the flats. A slice of dock No. 3 was washed away, and a large amount of coal dropped into the harbor.

A stretch of roadway along the shore at West Haven was washed away so that passage is impossible for over a mile. One of New Haven's famous elms was blown down on Broadway and wrecked a small cigar store, leaving nothing but the rear wall standing.

NEW LONDON, Conn., Nov. 18.—The storm here has been the most severe since last winter. The tide was unusually high, and the wind attained a velocity of 35 miles an hour. All the summer cottages at Eastern Point were damaged. Bridges have been carried away and docks broken by the waves.

At Niantic the waves washed over the railroad tracks and against passing trains. A three-masted schooner is ashore on Fisher's Island.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Nov. 18.—The four-story Lester shoe factory at Lestershire, a suburb of this city, was blown down by the gale. The western end of the building began to give way, and the wall bulged out.

Suddenly there was a loud crash; a sound of flying timbers and the entire force of 700 men became panic-stricken. Many jumped from windows and many were injured.

The plant is valued at $1,000,000. Daniel Lamont and and ex-Secretary Fairchild of the Cleveland Cabinet are the principal stockholders. The accident has thrown 700 men out of employment. The building was 400 feet in length and 50 feet high.

MANISTEE, Mich., Nov. 18.—The schooner Sigel, from Cleveland, loaded with coal for this port, went ashore last evening, north of Manistee piers. Two men are reported drowned. The lifesaving crew is now trying to get to the wreck. The "northwester" which prevails is the worst of the season.

Damage By a Tornado.

NYACK, N. Y., Nov. 18.—A severe tornado, which formed in New Jersey yesterday afternoon, swept across the Palisades to the Hudson River with a terrific roar. It then passed rapidly up the river to the long pier at Piedmont, where it struck the long trestle and costly hoisting machines used in shipping coal, and did damage to the amount of several thousand dollars. The machinery is owned by the Erie Railway Company, and a large number of men were employed there, but they were fortunately on shore owing to the rain. No one was hurt. Many people saw the tornado as it approached the pier and aver that it sent the water sixty feet in the air.

Heavy Snow Storm in Ohio.

CLEVELAND, Nov. 18.—A terrific Northwester has been raging here all day and all travel has been impeded by the falling snow. Vessel men are anxious for their craft on the lake and but little hope is entertained that any vessels caught outside will escape being wrecked. Street car lines are having the utmost difficulty in operating. The storm is the worst November blow known in years.

Sam and Eva Still Discussed.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 18.—The alleged miraculous escape from drowning of Miss Eva Jewell and Samuel W. Thornton still excites the members of the Congregation of the Mount Olivet Presbyterian Church. Some dissatisfaction is expressed with Pastor Junor's report, but it is denied that Pastor Junor contemplates a second trip of investigation to the South. Mr. Moses Y. Young, a member of the church, has interviewed many captains of vessels with a view of testing the probabilities of Mr. Thornton's remarkable story and may be able to explain away some of the discrepancies. Advices are still awaited from the captains of two vessels that sailed from here at the time the voyagers disappeared.

Vender of Obscenity Arrested.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 18.—Joseph Slattery, an ex-priest, who has been lecturing in Lafayette Hall during the past week, was arrested last evening on the charge of selling obscene books. Five hundred of the books were confiscated by the police officials. The lecture and the books purport to be an expose of "secrets of the confession," together with other serious charges against the priesthood.

NEW JERSEY JOTTINGS.

The lumber yard and planing mill of John Rendall in Newark were destroyed by fire yesterday. Loss $50,000.

William Barensticker, a Trenton barber, has been arrested for bigamy. The police say he has six wives in different cities.

A petition is being circulated for the pardon of 18-year-old Hamilton Turner, of Atlantic City, sentenced to six months for forging his father's name.

HIS BRIDE ABDUCTED.

Martin Hamilton Finds What It Is to Marry Clandestinely.

PORTLAND, Me., Nov. 18.—The inhabitants of the island of Chebeague, in Casco Bay, are in a state of great excitement over the abduction of a bride by her irate mother.

For some time past Martin B. Hamilton, aged 29, has been paying attentions to the village schoolmistress, a bright young woman of 19, Miss Zetta Hamilton. The courtship was opposed by the young lady's mother, and the couple resolved to marry without her consent.

Monday they went to the house of a friend and were married by Rev. Joseph Wright. The newly married bride returned to her parents to break the news, and the groom to his house to await further developments.

Hearing nothing from his bride, he went to her home the next morning and received from his new mother-in-law a warm greeting. He asked to see his wife, but his request was denied.

Two days passed, when the captive bride managed to send a letter to her husband. That afternoon he was promised an interview with her the next day.

Early that morning the bride, with her eldest brother and mother, took the steamer for Portland, before the groom knew what had happened.

The young man is nearly frantic at the loss of his wife, and has sought legal advice to have her restored to him.

ACCUSED OF WITCHERY.

A Woman Threatened With the Stake and Brutally Beaten.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 18.—Frenchtown, Luzerne County, has been in a turmoil for several days on account of the superstitious beliefs of the foreigners who compose that town. About a week ago Mrs. Pascere in an unguarded moment stated that she was the daughter of a mountain-shepherd in Austria-Hungary, and according to the natives such a woman has the power of bewitching.

Every little misfortune that has since befallen any of the inhabitants of the town has been charged to her. She has been universally shunned and threatening letters sent her stated that the citizens would combine and burn her at the stake if she would not commit suicide.

A cow belonging to the leader against the innocent woman took sick and died and he charged the death of the animal to the "witch." He went to the house and demanded that the cow be brought back to life within five hours. The penalty for failure to do so was death.

When the five hours had expired and the animal had not come to life the owner collected a crowd and proceeding to her residence, dragged her from her home and so murderously assaulted her that her life is despaired of. Her husband had as many of the men arrested as he knew and in a hearing they were committed to jail.

Preparing Their Plans.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—Governor-elect and Mrs. Flower returned from Albany last night. Yesterday morning Mrs. Flower made a tour of inspection of the Governor's mansion and laid plans for transforming the bachelor's den into a proper habitation for a Governor with a wife, and the Governor-elect journeyed through the rain to the Capitol, where he visited the State departments and held an informal levee in the Executive Chamber, where the heads of the departments, clerks and messengers freely came to shake the next occupant of the Executive Chair by the hand.

A Prisoner Instead of a Bride.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 18.—Mary Kishbaugh was brought here yesterday from Stockton and taken to jail on the charge of infanticide. She confessed that she threw her babe into a vault, but said she thought it was dead. Marks on the neck, however, indicated that the child had been strangled. The girl came from Austria three months ago. She says she was sent here by her lover, who promised to follow and marry her.

Thirty Years for a Murderer.

LANCASTER, N. H., Nov. 18.—The jury in the case of John Donnelly, charged with killing William M. Wilson, at Berlin Falls, last May, who has been on trial for the past few days, yesterday brought in a verdict of guilty. Donnelly was immediately sentenced to serve 30 years in State prison.

Palo Alto is King.

STOCKTON, Cal., Nov. 18.—Palo Alto, United States Senator Stanford's peerless stallion, is king of the trotting turf. Yesterday he trotted a mile in 2:08 3-4, equaling the record of the queen of trotters, Maud S., and going dangerously near to that of his recent stable companion, Sunol.

Dr. Vose Held for Trial.

FALL RIVER, Mass., Nov. 18.—As a result of preliminary examination yesterday Dr. Thomas Vose, who is charged with malpractice at South Somerset, which resulted in the death of Mary Tallon, was held in $1,000 bail for the Superior Court, and Berube, the man who brought the girl to the doctor's house, was held in $500 as a witness.

ALMY BREAKS DOWN

Mrs. Warden's Testimony Shakes His Stolidness.

THE TRIAL LIKELY TO BE SHORT

Evidence for the State All in, and the Defense May Close To-day.

An Enormous Crowd Present at the Proceedings—Statement of Christie Warden's Sister—Almy Positively Identified as Abbott by Jailer Newell—Efforts in the Murderer's Behalf.

PLYMOUTH, N. H., Nov. 18.—The immense amount of interest taken in the atrocious murder of Christie Warden, and the fate of her murderer, was shown in the enormous crowd that gathered about the court house long before the time fixed for its opening. When the doors were finally opened all the available space, except that reserved for the judges, counsel, prisoner and witnesses, was quickly filled. Even the hallways were packed, while those who failed to get in the building at all lingered around outside in groups and discussed the matter from their various points of view.

County Solicitor Mitchell, who has taken a prominent part in the case since the night of the murder, opened for the prosecution. He said he proposed to prove deliberate murder on the part of the prisoner. Many of his statements of alleged facts were ruled out by the court.

At the conclusion of Mr. Mitchell's argument Mrs. Warden took the stand and was sworn. Her testimony of what happened on the night of the shooting was substantially the same as that already published.

She went on to tell of the home life at the farm of Almy and Christie. The prisoner, who hitherto had maintained that wonderful nerve for which he has become noted, broke down completely during Mrs. Warden's recital of these facts, covered his face with his hands and sobbed quite audibly.

As Mrs. Warden continued, Almy leaned forward and cried out in a voice shaken by emotion: "Oh, Mrs. Warden, please tell it all!"

Mr. Burley, of his counsel, restrained him and Mrs. Warden's examination was continued without interruption. She told of the friendly relations existing between her daughter and Almy, related that, as both had a taste for literature and poetry, that they often read together and that they frequently exchanged presents. The family, however, never allowed them to be alone together. Some member of the family was always present during their meetings. Mrs. Warden said she did not believe that Almy was forming an attachment for Christie.

At this point Almy held a conversation with his counsel, evidently in relation to the testimony of Mrs. Warden.

Mrs. Warden, continuing her testimony, said that when Christie was at Manchester, she had sent two letters there. One of these contained a message to Almy. Mrs. Warden said she had seen nothing in Almy's attentions to her daughter indicating a desire to make the latter his wife. The family, she concluded, would not have approved of any attempt at courtship.

Fanny Warden, sister of the dead girl, then took the stand. In relating the story of the murder, she said that Almy had fired three shots at her and finally dragged Christie away from her, pulling the latter through the fence bars by her skirts.

When Christie's body was found, she was lying on her back with her legs crossed. Miss Warden said she found her sister's dress, skirt and underskirt off and lying at some distance from the body. These garments were here produced and shown to Judge Doe, during which proceeding Almy again broke down and wept bitterly.

Miss Warden was then cross-examined by counsel for defense. She said she did not get along very pleasantly with Almy. She always intended that he should know what she thought of him. Christie, she said, did not want to provoke the prisoner, because she was afraid of him. She then told of Almy's attention to Christie and said he worked in every deceitful way possible to gain her affections. The witness said the prisoner had a revolver when he first came to the Warden house. He showed it freely and said he came from the South where everybody carried a similar weapon. Miss Warden remembered only one occasion when Almy and Christie were alone. This was when they walked home from Hewett's together. The family never knew that Almy had Christie's picture. He stol ethat, Miss Warden said.

Emmett Marshall, who came to the assistance of the Wardens on the night of the murder and was fired at by Almy, testified to the circumstances of the murder and the finding of the body.

The prosecution then introduced some medical evidence to show the nature of the wounds inflicted upon Miss Warden. Witnesses also identified Almy's handwriting and the revolver and cartridges taken from him. The State then rested its case and testimony for the defense began.

Andrew Warden, Christie's father, was the first called. He testified to Almy's attachment for Christie, but said no member of the family had ever encouraged it.

Myra A. Warden, a sister of the deceased, testified practically to the same effect as her father.

Several neighbors of the Wardens were then called and testified as to Almy and Christie being together at parties and driving together.

Jailor Newell, of Haverhill, who had Abbott in charge when he was committed for burglary, saw Almy last night and is positive that Almy and Abbott are one and the same person.

JUDGE PHELPS' DECISION.

Regarded of Great Importance in the Connecticut Governorship Fight.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 18.—The decision of Judge Phelps in the Superior Court of Clinton is of the utmost importance in its bearings on the Connecticut Governorship contest now in the courts.

A Democrat contested the election last October of a Republican Selectman on the ground that the Republican ballots were left blank as to certain offices, or had names pasted or written over blanks.

Judge Phelps found that, owing to flaws in the ballots of both parties, not a single legal ballot had been cast in Clinton at the last election. By agreement of both sides all the law points involved were reserved for the Supreme Court of the State at its January session. These will thus reach the Supreme Court not long after its decision in the quo warranto case.

The highly important question is about the legality of the Prohibition blank ballots cast at the State election of 1890 to the number of 3,000, the invalidation of which would immediately let in all the Democratic candidates for State offices. Judge Hall, Republican, in the East Lyme contested election case last December decided those ballots illegal, but that the case under the law could not be appealed, as has now been done in the Clinton suit.

THE SUBJECT DROPPED.

Italy Has Given up Hope of Satisfaction from the United States.

ROME, Nov. 18.—In view of the statements which have been circulated relative to an alleged settlement of the difficulty between Italy and the United States on the subject of the New Orleans lynchings, the Italian foreign office has felt it necessary to issue an official and authorized declaration: This has been made public through Deputy Forrais, and is to the effect that since the departure of Baron Fava from Washington there has been no communication and no exchange of views with the United States government in relation to the New Orleans affair, and that Minister Porter does not carry to America any proposals relative to a settlement; that the Italian government has dropped the subject, with the hope that time would bring about a satisfactory solution.

Hardships of a Shipwrecked Crew.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—The fishing steamer Hewett, which has arrived at Gravesend, had on board Capt. Evans and three of the crew of the bark, Kate Sanction from Shields, England, to Pensacola, Florida. The Kate Sanction was dismantled by a storm, and abandoned on the 11th instant, the crew taking to their boats. It was bitterly cold and the waves almost swept over the shivering sailors. Nine died of exposure and hunger. The survivors were rescued by a fishing smack which transferred them to the Hewett. They were in a terrible condition when landed, and it is not yet certain that they will recover.

Telephone Patent Issued.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—Yesterday the United States Patent Office issued a patent to Emile Berliner, assignor to the Bell Telephone Company, for a combined telegraph and telephone, which had been pending in that office since June 3, 1887. It is understood that the Bell Telephone Company believes that this patent covers features which are necessary to the practical use of telephones. Inventors do not take that view of the patent. They think that when Bell's basic patent expires, March 7, 1893, they will be able to produce practical telephones not infringing on the Berliner patent.

No Further Charges Made.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—The meeting of the Immigration Commission yesterday was held behind closed doors. Although Commissioner Schultles was present, he made no mention of the serious charges against the Servia's steerage passengers to which he called Col. Weber's attention on the arrival of that vessel.

Mayor Chapin for Speaker.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 18.—An effort is being made by some of the more enthusiastic friends of Mayor Chapin, of Brooklyn, Congressman-elect from the Second district, to boom him for Speaker of the House. It is thought that the fight between Congressmen Mills, Crisp and the other aspirants will be so hot that Chapin may be selected as a compromise candidate.

Colonel Smith's Trial Begun.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 18.—The examination of witnesses in the court-martial of Col. William B. Smith of the Third Regiment, National Guard of Pennsylvania, began yesterday. The charge is the misappropriation of money belonging to the regiment. Mr. Smith is an ex-mayor of Philadelphia. The trial will probably last several days.

A Sudden Death.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 18.—Howard B. Ensign, Treasury of the Maryland Steamboat Company, while on his way from Lakewood to Baltimore died suddenly from heart disease yesterday.

The Young Man's Parents Stop at Nothing to Compromise the Case.

Miss De Garno, Betrayed By an Ohio Banker's Son, Follows Him, Believing He Would Make Good His Promise of Marriage—When Told of Her Presence He Left the Town and is Thought to Have Gone to Europe.

DAYTON, O., Nov. 18.—Ed S. Crane, whose father is president of the Troy National Bank, is a fugitive, and a determined woman whom he has wronged is on his track. Crane is a handsome young man and has moved in the very swell set here. Some time ago his father sent him to Williston Seminary, Easthampton, Mass., to prepare him for Harvard or Yale.

While there he visited his uncle in Brooklyn, N. Y., and during the visit met Miss Mary De Garno, who lived near by. When Crane had completed his studies his uncle made him secretary of the Cleveland Baking Powder Company, of which he was president. Crane frequently called upon Miss De Garno, and their friendship ripened into love, on her part, at all events. In the course of time Crane proposed marriage and was accepted, and then, so it is alleged, deceived her.

Shortly afterward he resigned the secretaryship and came to Ohio to prepare for his wedding, so he said. He went to Troy and there consulted his relations. They advised him not to marry the girl. He continued to write to Miss De Garno, telling her he intended to make his word good and still loved her. She became suspicious at last and came here. She called upon a friend of hers who was a relative of Crane's, and asked if he was in town. Crane when he heard of it made a bee line for the depot and left for Indianapolis and the West.

The girl had disobeyed her attorneys in her anxiety to see her lover. They had instructed her to swear out a warrant for his arrest before she made her presence known.

Next day she swore out the warrant, but it was too late. The rich relatives of Crane, it is said, offered to compromise the suit with Miss De Garno for any sum she would name. She refused the offer, however, and had detectives sent out in all directions to look for her recreant lover.

Then, it is alleged, influences were brought to bear to have Miss De Garno arrested as an adventuress or a blackmailer. She was taken to Police Headquarters, examined and released. She says she does not wish to live with Crane, but wants a legal father for her unborn child.

Crane was last heard of making arrangements to sail for Europe. Miss De Garno's father is in Europe and will meet Crane when he lands, if he goes. The girl's parents and attorneys say they will hunt Crane down if it takes a lifetime.

Nally Killed by Inhuman Treatment.

DUBLIN, Nov. 18.—The death of P. W. Nally, the noted Irish Nationalist, who died Monday week in Montjoy prison, and whose remains have just been interred in Glasnevin cemetery, near this city, will undoubtedly prove one of the sensational features of the battle to be fought in Parliament, immediately after the reassembling of the Houses. For once it is expected that the sympathies of even some of the more rabid Tories will be enlisted in the approaching inquiry, for it is claimed that Nally's death was directly due to most hard and infamous treatment received at the hands of the keepers of the Millbank prison, London, where Nally was detained previous to being transferred to Montjoy prison.

Must Be Done By the Auditor-General.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Nov. 18.—The Attorney-General has rendered an opinion stating that the annual report of the banking and savings institutions of the State must be prepared by Auditor-General McCamant, owing to the failure of the Governor to appoint a State Banking Superintendent.

Cut a Whale in Two.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—The steamship Ethiopia, just arrived here from Glasgow, reports having been in collision with a whale off the banks of Newfoundland Sunday. The whale was cut in two. The steamship only experienced a slight shock.

PENNSYLVANIA BRIEFS.

Actor Florence's condition is regarded as slightly improved.

Frightful burns received a month ago caused lockjaw and has just ended the life of Bridget Gallagher, of Allentown.

State Treasurer Boyer has appointed John P. Morrison to be cashier of the Treasury vice William Livsey, resigned.

Annie Kishcar, a pretty Hungarian girl, is in Luzerne county jail because the body of her child was found in a cesspool near Hazleton.

Bridget Barrett, while playing with some other children near a bonfire at Archibald, Pa., tripped and fell into the mass of flames and was burned to a crisp.

The "Christian Statesman" of Philadelphia has been bought by some Pittsburg reformers, and is soon to be moved there with a view to securing a stronger local support.

Emil Henschel, of New York, who received injuries in a Philadelphia & Reading Railroad wreck near Annville last March, was awarded $3,300 damages by a Lebanon jury.

AGAINST RACING.

Illegality of Horse Racing and Pool Selling Affirmed.

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 18.—Chancellor McGill, in the Court of Errors and Appeals yesterday decided the appeal in the case of Haring against the State, and has affirmed the judgment of the Supreme Court against the legality of pool selling on the race tracks.

This was a test case, and the final decision by the highest court has been awaited with much anxiety by all the sporting men in the State of New Jersey, and, indeed, in the country.

The case has gone against them.

The Monmouth Park track was not opened during the past season, the officers announcing that without the exciting adjunct of the betting ring horseracing could not be made to pay, even at Long Branch.

The Monmouth held off pending this decision.

The case against Haring was prosecuted in the Supreme Court, where he was indicted under the law forbidding the keeping of disorderly houses, the prosecution contending that pool-selling and bookmaking came within the meaning of that law.

The Court found against Haring, and the Court of Errors and Appeals now affirm that finding. The sporting fraternity will now appeal to the Legislature in an effort to get the law repealed or amended. The Linden Park Racing Association officials were punished, and their track is now closed. So are most of the others, and they will not attempt to open again unless the law is amended.

New York Navy Yard Foreman.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—By direction of Secretary Tracy an examination will be held at the New York Navy Yard on the 30th inst. for position of foreman of that yard. This examination has been ordered, as the board which conducted the former examination for this position stated, in its report, that it did not consider those examined came up to the requirements. The board recommended that the person who passed highest be appointed until another examination could be had, and the recommendations of the board were adopted.

Chorus Girl Heir to a Fortune.

BOSTON, Nov. 18.—A chorus girl in the Ship Ahoy Company, Ada Fells, has fallen heir to $100,000, left by her grandmother in Springfield, Ill. The girl's parents are also wealthy, but because they refused to permit her to go on the stage, she ran away from home six months ago, since which time she has been with the Ship Ahoy Company.

Fatal Railroad Collision.

FREMONT, Neb., Nov. 18.—In a collision yesterday morning between a freight and a passenger train on the Elk Horn Valley Railroad, the conductor and brakeman of the passenger train were killed and several passengers seriously injured. Ed. Hardy, of Omaha, a traveling man, was fatally burned by colliding with the stove in the smoker.

Horse Dealer McNair's Liabilities.

CHAMBERSBURG, Pa., Nov. 18.—The liabilities of Washington McNair, the horse dealer are $55,000. McNair's failure caused the entering of judgments against Christian Brechbill and R. H. Boyd, McNair's endorsers, to the amount of $50,000, Brechbill has made an assignment.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

J. S. Moulton, of New York, confidential clerk to the Commissioner of Pensions, has resigned.

A banquet was given to Hon. Wilfred Laurier and his party from Canada in Boston, last night. Gov. Russell spoke for Massachusetts.

The Treasury Department has decided that goods that pay a specific rate of duty are not liable to additional duties for undervaluation.

Fonseca has issued a decree creating a special credit of 13,000,000 of milreis (over $13,000,000) for the purchase of arms and munitions of war.

The sheriff yesterday levied on all the property of the Grand Rapids, Lansing & Detroit, and the Detroit, Lansing & Northern Railroads. The levy was made on the suit of two contractors, who have an unsatisfied judgment against the roads.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—Moy's Hot Soda—None Better.

—There will be a meeting in the W. C. T. U. rooms, to-morrow afternoon at 3:30 o'clock.

—A number of Plainfield firemen were interested spectators at the fire-engine competition at Elizabeth Monday afternoon.

—In another column Howard A. Pope advertises a special sale of ladies' and misses' cloaks, at greatly reduced prices. Go and see them.

—A bowling contest between five men from Somerville and five from Plainfield will take place on the Crescent alleys to-morrow night.

—Edsall says he is showing as fine an assortment of seasonable goods in his line as can be found anywhere, and will guarantee the lowest prices.

—The same team that defeated the Elizabeth bowlers last night will bowl against a picked team of Crescent League members next week Wednesday.

—George A. Newman of Orange will describe a trip to Japan, to-morrow at 8 p. m., at the Y. M. C. A. rooms. The admission will be free, and all men are invited.

—Two very fine specialties at the Broadway store of Neuman Bros., just now, are Hamburgh stringless beans, 2 cans for 25 cents, and Burnham & Merrill's Paris sugar corn.

—The weather of the past few days all through this section has been anything but agreeable. With the weather at Coronado Beach one never finds fault. The Hotel del Coronado is a dream of delight for tourists.

—A lamp exploded in the house of Charles E. Ball, 90 East Fifth street, last night. Before the flames were subdued a carpet and several small pieces of furniture were damaged beyond repair. The insurance company will allow $14 in cash for the damage.

—A five-men team from the Somerville Bowling club will visit the Crescent League alleys, to morrow evening, and roll against five men selected from the following representative bowlers of Plainfield: Davis, Thiers, Reed, Teel, Allis, Williams.

—The Y. M. C. A. district convention will be held at Rahway Nov. 20-22. The following Plainfielders who have already signified their intention to be present will give information to all interested: W. D. Murray, E. L. Suffern, S. Cahoone, A. C. LaBoyteaux, Frederick Moon, J. A. Robinson, George S. Beebe, C. H. Lee, and Frank Howland.

A BIG WIND IN TOWN.

It Plays Strange Freaks With Trees and Buildings, and Brings a Seasonable Cold Wave.

The tornado that did so much damage in various parts of New York and New Jersey, yesterday afternoon, as told in the general telegraphic dispatches elsewhere, paid quite a lively visit to North Plainfield borough.

Some of the damage done in town by the storm was noted in these columns last evening, but full reports, especially from the outlying districts, did not reach the office till after the hour of going to press.

In Plainfield itself the damage done was slight. The most serious was the wrecking of U. B. Crane's show-case and the chimney at 8 Park avenue. The escape was very narrow, of passers-by, from being injured by the shower of bricks. The swinging signboard in front of the shoe shop on Park avenue at the foot of North avenue was wrenched from its fastenings, smashed a window, and blew out into the street and inflicted quite a cut on a horse which it struck. A number of shade trees had large branches torn away. The top of Trinity church spire swayed violently in the high wind, and it looked as though the huge vane and ball would be carried away across the house-tops.

In various parts of the town frame dwelling-houses trembled and shook violently, to the great alarm of the inmates. Luckily, however, the worst fury of the storm confined itself to the thinly-settled outskirts.

One of the Smalley brothers who own the stone-crusher on the mountain-side back of Sebring's mills was at the stone-crushing works when the sky overhead became overcast with a dense blackness. There was a tremendous rushing sound in the distance, and suddenly there loomed over the mountain-top a vast, whirling, purple cloud. It slipped half-way down the mountain, and then came bounding towards him like a huge rubber ball. In shape it was like an immense inverted haystack, with a twisting, gyrating suction-pipe at its base, very like an elephant's trunk. The cloud kept slipping gradually down the mountain-side, and when it went whizzing past Mr. Smalley it was just far enough below him for him to see over its top. The rush of wind that followed the tornado's track tore a few boards from the sheds at the crusher, but did no serious damage.

Adam Fritz was at his barn at the rear of 295 Somerset street, watering his horses, when he saw the tornado come rushing along the mountain-side. His description of it tallies exactly with that of Mr. Smalley.

"It looked just like a big haystack turned upside down"—he told a PRESS reporter.—"It had a rolling, twisting motion, and pounded up and down most peculiarly. At times it bowled along the ground, and then would leap up in the air and dive down again, picking up branches of trees, logs and fences, and hurling them to earth with great violence. The trees in its path shivered and rocked as though a giant power had them by the roots and was determined to wrench them from the soil. The huge funnel of the whirlwind was thick with masses of leaves and tree branches.

"The tornado struck the new house which I was just completing on the newly-opened street back of Howard street, near my barn, and caused an utter wreck. The loss I estimate at $500.

"Just as I thought my barn was about to be lifted from its foundation the tornado swerved aside in its course and bounded up into the air. It swept over the house of Israel Lewis in such a way as to take the chimneys off just as though they had been cut through with the blade of a huge broad-axe. Had the storm-cloud stooped it bit lower it must have unroofed the dwelling altogether.

"The affair was all over in a twinkling. Had I been in the path of the cyclone it must have whirled me off my feet and carried me through the air, so tremendous was its power; but I was just outside its reach, and only felt the strong after-draught. Outside the path of the tornado the wind was blowing just hard enough to make a man bend over and cling to his hat."

Mr. Fritz added that the aspect of the storm-cloud was most terrible, and that the things it did were so strange and astounding that had not his own eyes seen it all he would not have believed it. PRESS reporters went over the path of the tornado and visited the wreck of Mr. Fritz's house, last evening. The house was certainly a most thorough wreck. It had been lifted bodily from its foundations, carried through the air, and thrown down with a tremendous crash beside the residence of Mr. Wyckoff, who occupies another house owned by Mr. Fritz. The huge beams and tough timbers were snapped and twisted into splinters, and the building was a mass of jagged fragments. The foundations from which it was taken looked as though they had just been finished and no house had ever stood on them.

The fury of the storm did not reach the thickly-settled portion of the borough, but swept on out across the farm-lands, carrying away fences and chimneys, and unroofing sheds and barns. The tornado skipped about in a most erratic way, and visited Newark, South Orange, Red Bank, Point Pleasant, and other places farther down the coast. It formed a huge water-spout on Raritan Bay, and a Jersey Central train had a most exciting race with it across the big bridge.

Two singular incidents were connected with the wrecking of the Fritz house. A basket filled with glass preserve jars, which Mr. Wyckoff had left out at the side of the house, was tumbled over and over, and finally set down right-side-up, directly underneath a mass of debris from the Fritz house, yet not a jar was broken. The tornado and the flying wreck of the Fritz building swept the shutters and their hinges neatly off the entire side of the Wyckoff house, without even cracking a single pane of glass. Mr. Wyckoff says that for three minutes the air was black with shattered timbers, which rained down as though there was an exhaustless supply overhead. He adds that the noise was deafening.

One of the sheds at Israel Lewis's slaughter-house was carried away, and the slaughter-house itself was damaged. Mr. Lewis was struck on the knee and badly lamed by a big timber, and a lad named Hatfield who was working for him had his head cut.

The cyclone-cloud seemed to be charged with stones and billets of wood, which smashed in the windows at the barns of Fritz and Lewis.

The violence of the storm was of course greater on the other side of the mountain than on this. The tornado satisfied itself on this side with sweeping up leaves and branches along a streak through the woodland. In the valley beyond it took trees up roots and all, and left a barren path in its wake two hundred feet wide, piling up the trees in ragged heaps along the side of its trail.

The worst damage seems to have been off to the northwest. Details are meagre, but many barns are reported wrecked and farm-houses unroofed.

The new hotel building in process of construction by August Alland, adjoining the silk mills at Stirling, was leveled to its foundations. The total loss is $1,000.

The big bill-board adjoining the Crescent rink on Broadway was blown down in yesterday's high wind. The grand-stand on the Crescent League athletic grounds in the borough were also somewhat damaged.

On Wilson Evans's farm back of the mountains the wind picked up a section of rail fence, crashed it through the side of a barn, and killed a cow in its stall.

It was feared during the progress of the storm that the tall ice-house back of Mr. Fritz's place would be wrecked, as it swayed to and fro as though about to topple over, but it escaped. The storm seemed to split against it, and a smaller whirlwind went eddying up Stony brook, forming a veritable water-spout, which finally broke over a bridge with a sound like a clap of thunder.

On John F. Wilson's farm a number of fine shade trees were damaged.

Plainfield commuters were very much surprised this morning at being told that an actual cyclone had swept through this section, and at first were inclined to discredit it. A little trip over the path of the storm-centre would soon dispel all doubts of any scoffer.

The storm was welcome in one sense, for it was the forerunner of a very seasonable cold wave. The temperature fell rapidly. Day before yesterday was muggy and absolutely oppressive, and yesterday was warm, very wet, and in every way disagreeable. At times the rain fell in torrents. By 7 o'clock last night the moon was shining from a bright blue sky, and ice was forming in the pools of water about the streets. To-day is crisp, wintry, exhilarating.

The Rev. Dill to Move to Plainfield.

The Rev. Arthur C. Dill and the Rev. George Bowers, of Stirling, addressed the largest congregation that has yet filled the Memorial chapel at Washingtonville last Sunday evening. The audience were much pleased with the manly delivery and pleasing address of Mr. Dill, and hope to hear him again.

The Rev. Mr. Bowers, who is an old favorite, had many old friends among the audience.

The Rev. Mr. Dill will soon take up his residence in Plainfield, where he has some old classmates of Yale, among whom is W. D. Murray, president of the Y. M. C. A., who is a warm friend of his and who speaks in the highest terms of him. Mr. Dill's home will be on Broadway.

Preparing for the Conference.

The executive committee of the Union county Christian Endeavor union met in the lecture room of the Presbyterian church and arranged some matters in reference to the annual conference to be held at Westfield to-morrow evening. Vice-president Teller, of Cranford, presided, and there were representatives in attendance from Elizabeth, Rahway, Union and Plainfield. The constitution and by-laws were revised, and some important recommendations were adopted which will be presented to the county conference.

Presbyterian Elders Have a Social Discussion.

The Elders' association of Elizabeth were the guests of the elders of the Crescent Avenue church at a social meeting held in the Crescent Avenue church last evening. The Elizabeth elders arrived on an early train to attend a dinner which was served in the church parlors promptly at 6:30. The subject "How to make the prayer meeting acceptable and helpful to a large proportion of our church membership" was taken up for discussion at 8, and the evening was very pleasantly and profitably spent.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Max O'Rell will lecture at the Temple Opera house, Elizabeth, to-morrow night.

Miss Nellie Suydam of Parkville, L. I., is the guest of the Misses Currie of Arlington avenue.

The engagement is announced of Miss Daisy Morse, daughter of Edward Morse, to W. Allen Schutt, of Duer street.

The Rev. J. P. Taylor has accepted the citizens' nomination for school trustee in place of DeWitt C. Ivins, declined.

Mrs. Fred. J. Horr, of 13 Bay street, started on Monday for Montreal to make a visit of several weeks to her family.

The Potter Press Works were closed at noon to-day for the afternoon, on account of the funeral of Miss Ann Eliza Titsworth.

Major Ackerman, one of New Providence's best-known citizens, in company with freeholder Jones of the same township, were guests at Force's Hotel, to-day.

The death occurred this morning, at Passaic, of Mrs. S. J. Mundy, daughter of Thomas Clarke of this city. She had been ill of hasty consumption. She leaves a little daughter nine months old.

Miss Alice B. Sturtevant has conveyed to Mary A. D. Sturtevant, by deed of warranty, land situated on the centre line of Broadway. The date of deed is August 25, 1891, and the consideration $3,000

The many Plainfield friends of Mr and Mrs. F. D. Squires will sympathize with the family in the recent loss by death of their only daughter, Edna, age two years. Mrs. Squires was Miss Ida Lee, a former resident of Plainfield. Her present home is in Birmingham, Alabama.

Col. Charles K. Moore of Fanwood held a barbecue at his home on Quality Hill, last night, whereat was served a fatted pig of 18 pounds with other delicacies of the season. A French chef of local renown roasted the porker and prepared the rest of the menu. A number of guests from this city, Elizabeth and New York were invited.

Lieutenant-Colonel John E. Bryant will be one of the speakers at the men's meeting to be held under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., at the Trinity Reformed church next Sunday afternoon at 4:15. He served three years in the Union Army during the late war. He entered as captain in the 8th Main Infantry, and came out as major and brevet lieutenant-colonel.

George F. Odlorne of Brooklyn has connected himself with the Daily Courier publication office and will hereafter occupy the position formerly held by R. F. R. Huntsman. Mr. Odlorne's wife is a sister of Mrs. F. W. Runyon. THE PRESS would bespeak for him the favor of Plainfield's business community, and can assure everybody who may be called into the Courier counting room, that they will find him most affable and ever anxious to serve and please them.

The Rock of Ages.

Love, sympathy, devotion—the finer sentiments of our humanity—have combined to make "Rock of Ages" one of the most fruitful subjects of delineation by brush and pencil, with chisel, and in song, the world has ever known.

One hundred and fourteen years ago this well-known hymn was written by Toplady, since which composers have vied with each other in producing, now almost countless, arrangements and variations in the music of this ever popular song.

The latest and the sweetest soprano arrangement is by Bischoff, which will be sung for the first time before a Plainfield audience, by Mrs. Evelyn Everett Spicer, at the song service, next Sunday evening, in the Park Avenue Baptist church.

Easily made. A cheap and delicious drink for 25 cents can be made from Hires's Root Beer packages. Five gallons. Be careful that you get the real, genuine Hires's. There are a number of would-be Root Beer packages on the market.

The Peace Street Extension.

At a meeting of the North Plainfield township committee held last night, objections against the opening of Peace street through the borough were called for, but none was presented. The committee decided upon calling a meeting for next Monday night, when commissioners will be appointed to assess the values of land through which the thoroughfare will pass.

"Time is money," If you have a bad cold, don't mope around and half do your work. Get a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup; take a dose at night and get up the next morning—cured.

You need not despair! Salvation Oil will heal your burnt arm without a scar. 25 cents.

Agreement for the Sale of Property.

An agreement has been entered into by Alfred D. Cook and wife and Dr. Ellis W. Hedges, whereby Mr. and Mrs. Cook agree to convey to Dr. Hedges, by deed of warranty, land situated on the easterly corner of Broadway and LaGrande avenue. The date of agreement is Nov. 13, 1891, and the consideration $19,250.

ANOTHER WILL CONTEST.

A Plainfield Woman Asks the Law to Give Her a Share of Her Father's Estate.

Mrs. Theresa Radin, one of the heirs of the Bedloe family who formerly owned Liberty Island, has begun proceedings to contest her father's will.

Mrs. Radin, whose husband lives at Scotch Plains, but who herself is a resident of this city, is well known to Plainfield people. Her home has long been in this locality.

When her father, Thomas Dufarrier, died, less than a year ago, he bequeathed the bulk of his property to a nephew at Wampsville, a district of the Oneida community, New York State. Mrs. Radin charges that undue influence was used by the nephew over the deceased in his dying hours, and that the nephew induced Mr. Dufarrier to disown her, and she alleges that the will does her a gross injustice in seeking to divert to a distant and less deserving relative property that is hers by every natural right. She invokes the aid of the law in endeavoring to secure that which the will seeks to keep from her, and has engaged as counsel Jacob Halstead of New York, who is taking the preparatory legal steps towards breaking the will. The estate in dispute is understood to be quite a valuable one.

Paynter's Cousins Don't Like His Will.

John Goldsmith Paynter, when he lived in Plainfield, was so favorably disposed towards Trinity Reformed church that he mentioned it in his will for $10,000. But he married afterwards, moved away, changed his will and when he died at Dansville, L. I., on Aug. 11 last, it was found that he had left $62,000 to the Presbyterian church at Newtown, $12,500 to other institutions, and provided for his widow and certain relatives.

The widow presented the will for probate, and yesterday there was a rush of relatives to the Surrogate's office to file objections. The objectors were cousins John K. Paynter and Charity M. Morris, and second cousins Amanda J. Paynter, Manley V. Paynter, John V. Paynter, Thomas S. Paynter, jr., William Paynter, Ella F. Frampton, Ellen B. DeBevoise, Catharine E. Wood, and Mary Helen Pierce.

They allege that the testator was mentally unsound and that the will was procured by fraud, circumvention, and undue influence on the part of the widow or other persons.

Christian Endeavor County Conference.

The annual conference of the Union county Christian Endeavor union will be held in the First Presbyterian church of Westfield, to-morrow evening. It promises to be a notable gathering for the young Christian workers. Five new societies have been admitted to the union since its last meeting, the First Congregational and Second Presbyterian, of Elizabeth, the Westfield Presbyterian, the Warren Mission of North Plainfield, and the Roselle Baptist.

The Rev. A. V. Cadwell will welcome the delegates, and two papers will be read. "What can this society do for Sunday-schools?" is the title of a paper by Miss Grace M. Gilby, and S. A. VanDerveer, of Elizabeth, will speak on "Men, Money and Missions." A feature of the service will be a question box, to be conducted by the Rev. John T. Kerr.

An Easy Victory.

The Crescents had a walk-over over the bowling team sent up by Elizabeth last night, and the Crescents did some very poor bowling, too. The score:

Central Coal Trains in Collision.

Two loaded coal trains, on the Jersey Central, bound for tidewater, came in collision yesterday just above the Union street bridge, Elizabeth, with disastrous results. One of the locomotives was knocked off the track and its side badly damaged. A loaded gondola car of the other train, which was struck by the engine, had its side crushed in and was jammed against the locomotive, but, strange to say, the car was not derailed. The accident was caused by one train trying to pass the other on the switch.

Travel was partly blocked for two hours, until a wrecking crew could haul the derailed engine back on the tracks. Nobody was injured.

The Result of Merit.

When anything stands a test of fifty years among a discriminating people like the Americans, it is pretty good evidence that there is merit somewhere. The value of a medicine is best proved by its continued use from year to year by the same persons and families, as well as by a steady increasing sale. Few, if any, medicines have met with such continued success and popularity as has marked the introduction and progress of BRANDRETH'S PILLS, which, after a trial of over fifty years, are conceded to be the safest and most effective purgative and blood purifier introduced to the public.

That this is the result of merit, and that BRANDRETH'S PILLS actually perform all that is claimed for them, is conclusively proved by the fact that those who regard them with the greatest favor are those who have used them the longest. BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold in every drug and medicine store, either plain or sugar coated.

A Charming Entertainment.

The Four-Leaf Clover entertainment in Holy Cross parish building last evening was enjoyed by a deservedly large audience, all of whom greatly appreciated the feast of reason and flow of wit provided. George Taggart was of course the gem of the evening, and was sincerely congratulated by his friends and admirers for the excellence of his entertainment. He was funnier than ever, in his humorous originalities, and his comedietta, "The Curate", sprang into popularity with the same success that has followed all his previous efforts.

The dramatic entertainment of the Four-Leaf Clover was more ambitious than any they ever before attempted, and its unqualified triumph proved that whatever they apply themselves to is sure to go.

As Montgomery Lushington Mr. Taggart was very funny, as was also Howard Spencer as Don Fiasco.

Mr. Saunders's "Story of Ye Olden Tyme" met with prolonged applause, and was one of the evening's best features.

The song "Masks and Faces", by William Holmes, was encored, as were Edward Waring's violin solo and Herbert Schutt's "Banbury Cross". The following is the complete programme of a most delightful and successful affair:

Introduction...Ein Polnisches Staendchen
G. E. Hasselmann. [von Katka

A Comedietta, in one scene, by George Taggart, entitled: The Curate.
Richard Marlow, curate at St. Mark's ..... George Taggart
Robert Trenchard, his cousin. Howard Spencer
Harold Hastings, a mutual friend ..... Tiffany Spencer
Jack Leslie ..... Will Spencer
Roger ..... George Westervelt
The scene: Trenchard's apartments, New York.

A Story of Ye Olden Tyme, the Knight and the Lady, as originally told by one Thomas Ingoldsby, and now repeated by Mr. William L. Saunders.

Violin Solo...Selection from Martha...Flotow
Edward Waring.

A Farce Comedy, in two acts, by Bernard Herbert, done over refitted, refurnished and entitled: Second Sight.
Don Fiasco de Caramba, a Mexican ..... Howard Spencer
Montgomery Lushington, an actor ..... George Taggart
Jay Halifax Jent, of Nova Scotia ..... Tiffany Spencer
Freddy ..... William Holmes
Dolly ..... Will Spencer
Trixy ..... Ada Bartling
The Scene: Mme. Stella's clairvoyant parlors.

During act one Don Fiasco and Mr. Lushington introduced a bright comedy sketch, and in act two Freddy sang the popular character piece, "Masks and Faces."

Entr'acte...Banbury Cross.... Herbert Schutt.

Piano Solo.....Wiedersehen..... Guelker
G. E. Hasselmann.

Accompaniments by.....Mr. W. H. Miner

An Intellectual Banquet.

Concerning the supposed American descendants of the Atlanteans, the Toltecs, Aztecs, Peruvians, etc., the reader of that book of marvels, "The Story of Man", will find abundant matter in its pages for rich entertainment, since the chapters devoted to these races provide an intellectual banquet that will charm every sense, and excite an appetite that will find perpetual gratification without ever feeling a surfeit. These people were architects, civil engineers, mathematicians, astronomers, and scientists, as well as desperate warriors, all seeming to point to their connection with the inhabitants of the fabled Atlantis. They were also fire worshipers, like the ancient Egyptians and the Zoroastrians of Persia, and while they were in many respects a very humane people, yet their altars in all their cities reeked with the blood of human victims, offered as sacrifices to the sun god, similar to the abominations of the worshippers of Baal. "The Story of Man" describes these people in a manner which enthralls the reader with its extraordinary fascination. It gives a glowing picture of their magnificent palaces, shrines and monuments, as well as of their battles, splendid war costumes, and the desperate valor displayed by their well-drilled armies, as they rushed upon their enemies, more for the purpose of securing prisoners for sacrifice than to win military glory.

Washingtonville.

Shiloh's Cough Cure.

This is beyond question the most successful Cough Medicine we have ever sold; a few doses invariably cure the worst cases of Cough, Croup and Bronchitis, while its wonderful success in the cure of Consumption is without a parallel in the history of medicine. Since its first discovery it has been sold on a guarantee, a test which no other medicine can stand. If you have a cough we earnestly ask you to try it. Price 10c., 50c. and $1. If your lungs are sore, chest, or back lame, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by J. G. Miller, No. 10 East Front street, Plainfield N.J.

Valuable Gift to the Library.

Miss E. L. Adams, public librarian, received, this morning, from John H. Dunning of Brooklyn, formerly of this city, some very valuable old papers, among them the following:

Plainfield (N. J.) Union, Oct. 17, 1846.
Brother Jonathan, 4th of July, 1846.
New York Herald, June 12, 1864, (with map showing Hunter's operations in the Shenandoah valley, with news from Grant, Sherman, and others).
New York Herald, July 10, 1864, (map showing the invasion of Maryland).
New York Herald, July 12, 1864, (rebel operations in eastern Maryland).
New York Herald, Aug. 14, 1864, (Farragut's operations, showing position of his fleet inside Mobile Bay).
Weekly Aurora (published in Philadelphia), 1811-'12.
Newark Messenger, 1817-'18.
Newark Patriot, 1819.
Patron of Industry, 1820.
New York American, 1831-'32-'33.

They are all really valuable. Those containing the news of the rebellion seem especially so.

"A GOD SEND is Ely's Cream Balm. I had catarrh for three years. Two or three times a week my nose would bleed. I thought the sores would never heal. Your Balm has cured me."—Mrs. M. A. Jackson, Portsmouth, N. H.

I WAS so much troubled with catarrh it seriously affected my voice. One bottle of Ely's Cream Balm did the work. My voice is fully restored.—S. F. Liespner, A. M., pastor of the Olivet Baptist Church, Philadelphia, Pa.

Banquet of N. Y. Commerce of Chamber.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—The 123d annual dinner of the New York Chamber of Commerce, was held at Delmonico's last evening. Among the speakers were: Secretary of the Treasury Foster, Hon. Carl Schurz, Bishop Potter, Rev. Chas. A. Briggs, Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, Hon. Frank Hiscock, Captain Henry Erben, U. S. N., and Hon. Thomas H. Carter.

Kidnapper Barnes Held.

MECHANICSVILLE, N. Y., Nov. 18.—Dr. Charles Barnes of New York the alleged kidnapper, had an examination here yesterday before Justice Porter. After hearing damaging testimony from Mrs. Mattie J. Barnes and Mrs. Susan M. Barnes, both claiming to have been married to the defendant. Barnes was held for the grand jury to answer the charges of kidnapping the child, bigamy, and burglary in the first degree. The charges not being bailable before a magistrate. Dr. Barnes was committed to Ballston jail.

Estimate for the Sugar Bounty.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 18.—Secretary Foster has incorporated in his estimates for next year $9,000,000 to pay the bounty on sugar. This is a reduction in the amount originally estimated, which was based on a probable sugar production of 450,000,000 pounds. It is now estimated that not more than 400,000,000 pounds of sugar will be produced.

A $100,000 Conservatory for Pittsburg.

PITTSBURG, Nov 18.—Henry Phipps, jr., of Carnegie, Phipps, & Co., has offered to erect in Schenley Park a $100,000 conservatory. A condition is made that the conservatory shall be closed on Sunday.

KING OF THE CANYON.

A Hunting Episode in the Mountains of Colorado.

How a Bold Sportsman Dispatched a Giant Member of the Bear Family—A Moment of Expectation and Intense Excitement.

Presently a low hiss from our guide called our attention to him, writes Ernest Ingersoll in Outing, in the course of an article on hunting in Colorado a few years ago. His face was ablaze with half-suppressed excitement, and silently he came creeping to us and whispered: "I seen him!"

"Where?"

"Creep 'round yer and look down—right below yer. Ain't he an ole whaler?"

"Sam" and I looked long and earnestly and with beating hearts, but saw no bear. Then the guide crept forward and took another look and whispered: "He war thar all right, fur I seen him. He walked 'roun' that rock and looked bigger'n a steer. We'll jest lay low fur a bit; he's as ugly lookin' an ole devil as ever yer seen, an' I reckon hez a den down under thar."

We waited for half an hour, watching intently. It was not more than seventy-five yards to where the guide had seen him, and a series of rock steps made it quite feasible for a man to descend to his level. Finally, "Sam" signified his intention of going down. "Yer want ter be mighty keerful," said the guide; "if he gets his eyes on yer he'll go fur yer sure."

"Sam" said: "All right; you fellows place yourselves to cover me and I'll go down. I'm going to see that bear if it takes a leg." Forthwith he began a noiseless, carefully gauged descent, lowering himself from point to point and from ledge to ledge until he was barely forty yards from the supposed den. We waited and watched with rifles ready and nerves strung to the straining point. "Sam" had halted in a crouching position and was peering keenly down when the crisis suddenly arrived. A big piece of shaly rock, loosened by his movements, started to roll down and finally, followed by a small avalanche of pebbles and grit, lit with a crash upon the shelf-like level where the bear had been.

A moment later an immense rusty-brown head seemed to protrude from out of the solid rock, and "Ephraim" had come forth to see who dared invade his stronghold. He was immediately below "Sam's" point of vantage, and looked to be so close that he might have been almost touched with the rifle, though in reality the distance between them was about thirty yards. Before the grim brute saw his foes; before he even realized that the avalance of stones was aught else but a natural slip, a forty-five caliber bullet struck him fair and true in the back of his massive head and laid him dead in his very doorway. As "Sam" started to pump in another shell his treacherous foothold gave way a trifle and he slid downward directly toward the bear for about ten feet or so; the next instant he was climbing like a scared cat upward as fast as hands and knees could carry him, while the expression on his face did our hearts good to see. He speedily rallied, however, and yelled to us to know could we see the bear. Then we all three went down to within twenty feet of our prize, where the guide drew a bead on the small, round ear and fired pointblank into it. But "Ephraim" was a thoroughly dead bear, though the guide declared that he took no chances, and I believe rightly enough.

"Ephraim" proved to be a big old he bear, much the largest our guide had seen. His enormous bulk—he was fat as a stall-fed ox—his great fangs and terrible curved claws were almost terrifying, even in death, and he certainly would have proved himself a dangerous customer had fate ordained he should have had half a fair chance. As it was, "Sam" had secured a magnificent trophy fairly enough, and took it all coolly and as a matter of course.

"Say, 'Sam,' how did you feel perched up there when his head showed; were you scared?"

"Not a bit."

"Then what the deuce made you climb so when you slipped?"

A knowing wink was the sole answer.

Tigers on the Increase.

Of late years steps have been taken to prevent the destruction of forests by fire in certain districts in India. This care has had one curious result. Cover and water, which vanished with the timber, have again become common, and there has consequently been a large increase in the number of tigers. For the same reason there has also been an enormous increase in the number of wild deer. In one sense it is fortunate that the deer have grown in numbers with the tigers, for the latter have preyed upon them instead of upon cattle and human beings. When, however, they shall have scared away the deer, or have become tired of venison, they will probably prowl around villages and play havoc with cattle, besides killing their man or two.

Arizona Dates.

Dates are grown at Phoenix, Ari. A cluster weighing over eighteen pounds was recently picked there.

INFANT AUTOGRAPHS.

What Can Be Done with Plaster of Paris and Olive Oil.

People who are lucky enough to be provided with babies can extract considerable amusement by use of a plan recently suggested in a scientific journal. Procure five cents' worth of plaster of paris and a little olive oil. In a rather deep plate of any kind mix the plaster with cold water after first greasing the plate. The mixture should be to the consistency of very soft putty. That is, make a mass as soft as will hold together, and allow the hand to plunge into this (first greasing the hand to prevent sticking) and in a short time—a very few minutes—the plaster will "set," when the member may be removed carefully.

Before it is hard pierce the plaster with some sharp instrument—say a nail—making a couple of holes near the edge for convenience in mounting later. With some of the gold bronzes or liquid gilding, to be easily obtained, paint the surface outside the outline of the hand, going in between the fingers but leaving the impression proper showing wholly white. The best way to mount the cast is to cover a board with plush—blue looks well against the gold and white—attach it by means of brass headed tacks driven through the holes provided.

PRIMITIVE WRITING.

The Method Described in the Book of Job Still Practiced in Ceylon.

The earliest mention of writing in the Bible is probably found in the book of Job. "O," says the patriarch, "that my words were now written! O that they were printed in a book! that they were graven with an iron pen."

The method of writing here alluded to is still practiced in the island of Ceylon. There all the old manuscripts are written in Pali—a language not now spoken—upon the leaves of the talipot palm. These leaves are cut into strips of the required length and are then carefully dried.

In writing an iron pen or stylus is used. It is guided by a notch cut in the thumb-nail, and the marks so engraved are rendered plain by being rubbed with a dark dye extracted from the juice of the palm. A short distance from the end of each leaf strip a hole is made, and a couple of colored cords, passing through the covers and leaf-strips, bind the whole together as a book.

The covers are made of the wood, and the cords of the fiber of the palm, and to give a finish to the whole the edges of the leaves and the covers are generally dyed red.

NAPOLEON'S COUCH.

The Bed Which He Carried with Him, and on Which He Died.

The garden seat on which Napoleon the Great often sat at St. Helena, his camp bedstead, his long gray coat (the famous redingote grise for which Lejeune, the emperor's tailor, charged him 160 francs), and his little corporal's hat have been removed from the Musee des Souverains in the Louvre to that of the Invalides by order of President Carnot. The sketch is of the famous bedstead, without which the great emperor never traveled, which accompanied him through every campaign and upon which he died.

The faded and yellow silk draperies were once a pretty blue shade, and the scarlet silk coverlet, embroidered with gold stars, is torn and cut about in many places. The Napoleonic relics—the bedstead and the garden seat—may now be seen in a room next to the council chamber at the Invalid's hospital, while the coat, hat, uniform and saber have been laid to rest in the black chapel near the tomb, where they will hereafter remain, in glorious memory of a still more glorious man.

DR. SMITH HAS GONE

And With Him Has Disappeared Some $30,000.

AN ENDOWMENT ORDER SCHEME

The Doctor Let Two Friends Have $50,000 to Buy the "Fraternal Circle"

This Was Deposited With Treasurer of Massachusetts, Who Refused to Give It Up—Smith Had Taken the Money from an Institution of Which He Was Treasurer, and as He Couldn't Settle He Skipped With All He Could Find.

LOWELL, Mass., Nov. 19.—An interesting chapter in the crash of the short term Endowment Orders developed here yesterday. Dr. Sumner P. Smith, treasurer of the six months' benefit order known as the Rising Sun, is a fugitive, and technically he is an embezzler of about $80,000.

The State Treasurer, however, holds $50,000 of that sum, but the remainder is in the possession of the missing treasurer. It is stated that the money was taken by Smith in order to save for the benefit of the certificate holders.

The cause that led to this state of affairs is interesting. Recently K. J. McKenzie, W. H. Jones and others tried to buy the order of the Fraternal Circle. As alleged the inducement was that there was about $300,000 in the treasury, enough to pay about $200 each on the certificates, which could be bought for $120 each. This would give the purchasers a profit of over $100,000.

In order to buy the Fraternal Circle, however, $50,000 was required for deposit at the State Treasury. McKenzie was associated with Dr. Smith, the treasurer of the Rising Sun, and the latter was persuaded, it is alleged, to let the purchasers of the Fraternal Circle have $50,000 for one day. He let them have the money and it went into the State Treasury, but it stayed there, the Treasurer refusing to recognize McKenzie and his associates as the legal successors of the original officers of the Fraternal Circle pending their re-election as such stockholders.

This put Smith in a trap, as the money was wanted for certificate holders of the Rising Sun and a charge of embezzlement stared him in the face.

Thereupon he took what money remained in his charge and left town. President Lovejoy of the Rising Sun is now looking for him with Pinkerton detectives.

It is understood that Smith will come back if the matter can be arranged. It is said he is in hiding at present through advice of counsel.

Forger Wood Found Guilty.

NEW YORK, Nov 19.—Frank H. Wood was yesterday afternoon convicted of forgery in the first degree in the Court of General Sessions for signing the name of Mrs. Elizabeth R. Raymond, his benefactress, to a certificate of ten shares of Western Union stock. The trial has been going on for ten days, but it only took the jury ten minutes to convict him. He will be sentenced on Monday. Under Wood's conviction he is liable to be sentenced for a life's term. The minimum term is ten years.

Nine Cities Want the Convention.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—The Republican National Committee will meet in the Arlington Hotel in this city on Monday next, at 11 a. m., for the purpose of choosing a place for holding the Republican National Convention of 1892. There will be a lively competition for the honor. The cities that have already put in applications, or decided to do so, are New York, Chicago, Cincinnati, San Francisco, Omaha, Minneapolis, Pittsburg, Detroit and Tacoma.

Trying to Stop the Fight.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 19.—A delegation of citizens of Olneyville called upon the Governor yesterday and requested him to take measures to prevent the Conley-Sullivan fight, which is announced to occur at the Rhode Island Athletic Club, at Olneyville, to-night. Gov. Ladd declined to interfere, unless the town authorities call upon him to preserve the peace.

The Charleston Ordered Home.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—It is learned at the Navy Department that the cruiser Charleston had been ordered home from the Asiatic station and would stop at Honolulu on her way to San Francisco. It is stated at the Department that the cruiser does not go to Honolulu on any special mission, but will simply stop there for coal.

Throckmorton to Be Court-martialed.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—The papers in the case of Major Charles B. Throckmorton, Second Artillery, charged with duplicating pay accounts, have been reviewed at the War Department and forwarded to Gen. Howard, commanding the Division of the Atlantic, who will order a Court-martial to try the officer.

Sweating System Condemned.

BOSTON, Nov. 19.—The United Garment Workers, in convention yesterday, adopted a resolution condemning the sweating system, and refusing to deal with or recognize National Trade Assembly 231, K. of L., which, it alleges, has aided in perpetrating the sweating system.

John Brown's Fort for the Fair.

CUMBERLAND, Md., Nov. 19.—Workmen are busily engaged in tearing down John Brown's Fort, at Harper's Ferry. One of the contractors stated that a stock company of Chicago capitalists had purchased the fort, and every brick and piece of brick, with all the contraptions both inside and outside will be sent to Chicago. The building will be reconstructed on the World's Fair Exposition grounds in Chicago.

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—U. S. Gov't Report, Aug. 17, 1889.

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

THAT ANARCHIST RAID.

Some of Chicago's Police Likely to Suffer for the Arrests.

CHICAGO, 19.—It begins to look as [illegible] administration was to [illegible] times fighting the [illegible] anticipated. Mayor [illegible] more than a bare [illegible] City Council at his [illegible] majority may be brought [illegible] the demand of the [illegible] ing the administration [illegible] mercy of the anarchists, socialists and labor element.

In such case the impeachment of the Superintendent of Police for ordering the raids upon the anarchists meetings is not among the improbabilities. This condition of affairs has encouraged the anarchists and socialists greatly, and they talk of again openly defying the authority of the police. Should they do this the latter will show them no mercy whatever, but will resort to the club upon the slightest provocation. The police say they don't propose to take any chances, and that if there is any shooting or bomb throwing to be done they want to be in it at the very beginning.

SENATOR SHERMAN'S CHANCES.

His Friends More Confident Than Ever of His Re-election.

COLUMBUS, O., Nov. 19.—Advocates of the re-election of Senator John Sherman are more confident than ever of the veteran statesman's return to the Senate.

The news that Dr. Chauncey M. Depew had in his speech at the banquet of the New York Chamber of Commerce, spoken in Senator Sherman's behalf, when taken in connection with the utterances of Secretary Foster, has caused much gratification.

It is claimed by many leading Ohio Republicans that their party would stultify itself by rejecting Senator Sherman and sending ex-Gov. Forsker to Washington. The consensus of opinion is that Senator Sherman's distinguished services to the party and to the nation will have such weight with the Legislature that his re-election is a thing assured.

Sixteen Suits for Alleged Arson.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 19.—In the United States Circuit Court the case of the People's Fire Insurance Company against D. W. Holt is on trial. The case involves about $120,000. There are sixteen similar cases against Holt which will be decided by this one. The present suit is to recover $3,500 paid to Holt on a fire insurance policy. Holt was a lumber merchant in Phillipsburg, Pa., and had a large lumber yard. Some time ago it was destroyed by fire, and Holt recovered $120,000 insurance. He had been insured for $125,000, apportioned among a number of companies. It is now said by the plaintiff that Holt has set fire to, or caused to be set on fire, the lumber to get the insurance; also that by fraud he made his books show that he had on hand about twice as much lumber as he actually had at the time of the fire.

Pretty Girl Missing.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 19.—Millie Lester, a pretty, dark-haired, black-eyed young lady, 18 years of age, has been missing from her home on East avenue since a week ago last Monday. Miss Lester's mother resides in Syracuse, but since she was a small child she has lived with her uncle, Fenton W. Sayers. Miss Lester left her house a few minutes before noon on the day mentioned, saying that she was going out for a walk and would return soon. Since that time the most diligent search has been made, but no clue to the young lady's whereabouts has been found.

Tons of Cents on Hand.

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.—The Sub-Treasury officials fear an avalanche of copper in the shape of a mountain of cents. In March last there was a total of $47,000 in the small coin in the vaults. Now there is a total of $104,060, or in gross weight 72,800 pounds, or nearly 37 tons. They come in from the penny-in-the-slot companies, who gather them from their machines all over the country. They ship them to the main offices in New York and there dump them into the lap of Uncle Sam and ask for larger money in return.

PENNSYLVANIA BRIEFS.

Actor William J. Florence is much better than he has been in the past twelve hours.

The fight against the maintenance of the Bridgeport and Horseshoe Turnpike Company's toll-gate within the city of Lancaster will be carried to the Supreme Court.

A slander suit for $500 damages is the outcome of gossip alleged to have been started by Henry Kiss of Washington borough, Lancaster county, alluding to Jacob Kremer, a prisoner, as "a hospital bummer and prison grabber."

ALMY'S TRIAL OVER

Judge Doe Will Pronounce Sentence To-day.

THE PRISONER'S TESTIMONY.

His Story of the Shooting of Christie Warden and His Subsequent Actions.

He Said That When Going Over the Bars With Christie They Stumbled, and in the Confusion the Revolver Was Discharged—Could Not Tell How it Happened, But He Did Not Mean to Kill the Girl, Whom He Loved Better Than Life, Etc.

PLYMOUTH, N. H., Nov. 19.—This morning the addresses of the counsel for Almy and for the State are being made. They are expected to be brief, and then Judge Doe will announce the degree of murder and sentence the prisoner.

Yesterday Almy was put on the stand, and his evidence was breathlessly followed by the tremendous crowd present.

He said he loved Christie with all his heart, and thought that if he could have had her she would have led him to a better life. They talked it over, and she advised him to get a better education, but lack of funds compelled him to reach to the conclusion to make a short cut to professional life.

Witness said that Christie kissed him when they parted. She aroused passions in his breast, and had Mrs. Warden spoken only one pleasant word to him he would not have been here to-day. He then gave an account of his travels after leaving Hanover, saying that he bought his revolver in Springfield, for the purpose of taking it with him to Texas. He had shown it to several persons, and had made no attempt to conceal it.

He finally came to Hanover for the purpose of seeing Christie alone, to get her approval and encouragement. He did not write while he was away, because he was afraid she would not get the letters. His expectations were high, and as he had no doubt her parents were against him, he must see Christie alone. He arrived in Hanover on the midnight train, and went into the Warden barn, from which he could command a view of the kitchen and parlor. He thought he could see her when she went to the Grange.

About a week later he went through the house one night. He went four times in all. The last time he decided to open her door and speak to her. He did so, but her brother was lying on the bed. He did not stay all the time in the barn, but wandered about the fields, waiting nearly a month to see Christie. He told of entering the room at Mr. Pettee's, occupied by Christie, but was horrified to find it occupied by another woman. As the latter rose in bed he caught her by the throat and pushed her back. Then he told her his story and his desire to see Christie, but she said Christie was not there.

A compact was made to keep the matter of the visit a secret. When he heard Christie was going to the Grange, he went to the pasture, changed his clothes, and after supper, went down back of A. Flint's house and waited for Christie.

Soon she came along with others of the family. Almy then described the meeting with the Warden party, as had been related by several witnesses, and said in going over the bars with his arm about Christie's waist they stumbled. Fannie was screaming and he fired his revolver to keep her back.

His fall stunned him. His thought was that he must have Christie; there were sounds of voices coming nearer, and Christie was on the ground unconscious. In some way his revolver was fired, he did not know how. Then, when he saw Christie was shot, he exclaimed: "My God, Christie is dead!"

He was dazed. He went to the river, and returned to the Warden barn, and watched the men who brought the body to the house. He told of visiting Christie's grave on several occasions. He could not realize that she was dead. He never thought of being captured, and the feeling that he could not leave her chained him to the locality.

Almy told his story in trembling tones, and frequently stopped to brush away the tears.

Almy was subjected to a sharp cross-examination, and admitted that his statement that he had relatives in Savannah was false. No evidence was allowed to prove that Almy is George H. Abbott, although the matter was once broached by the Attorney-General.

At the conclusion of Almy's testimony both sides rested.

Laurier Calls on Gov. Russell.

BOSTON, Nov. 19.—Hon. Wilfred Laurier and party yesterday afternoon called upon Gov. Russell at the State House, and Mayor Matthews at the City Hall, and later visited Harvard College.

The Dog-Bite Killed Him.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Nov. 19.—Louis Duelos, of Easthampton, who was recently bitten by a dog and at the time had the wound cauterized, died yesterday from hydrophobia.

THE FRENCH STRIKERS.

Over 36,000 Men Out—A Bitter Struggle Anticipated.

PARIS, Nov. 19.—Dispatches received here to-day from various places in the Department of Pas-de-Calais show that the striking coal miners are gaining many accessions to their ranks.

The strikers now number 36,000, and no doubt is entertained that in a very short time a majority of the men still remaining at work will quit and join the great body of strikers.

The authorities are taking every precaution to guard against disorders, and though in some places the miners displayed a very bitter feeling, there has as yet been no serious disturbance of the peace, but only a trivial outbreak here and there that has speedily been suppressed.

As in all labor troubles in France, there is danger that the Socialistic element may incite rioting, and, as a matter of fact, prominent Socialists are at work among the discontented and striking miners, spreading their lawless tenets. They are closely watched, however, and upon the least indication of a general resistance to the law they will be speedily lodged in jail.

To prevent the patrols appointed by the strikers from approaching the pits in their endeavor to induce the workers to quit, and also to guard against an attack either against the men working or upon the property of the mine owners, strong detachments of cavalry and infantry have been stationed about the various pits.

The presence of the troops, it is believed, will have the effect of keeping the strikers, as a body, from making a riotous demonstration.

This is the fourth day of the strike, and both the miners and their employers are confident of victory.

No hint of concession is made by either side, and from present indications the struggle will be a long and bitter one.

LOVE'S YOUNG DREAM.

Mrs. Partridge, 75, Sues Andrew Joyce, 80, for Breach of Promise.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 19. — Mrs. Matilda Partridge, who is about seventy-five years of age and a resident of Third avenue, Brooklyn, has brought an action for $10,000 damages for breach of promise of marriage against Andrew J. Joyce, about 80 years old, a real estate dealer on Atlantic avenue.

The two went around together, visiting different places, and enjoyed each other's society. It is said that Joyce asked Mrs. Partridge for a loan of $1,000, and she let him have the money.

When the time approached for the wedding it is alleged that Joyce asked Mrs. Partridge if she could not let him have about $10,000 more. She said she could not. There was no wedding, and Mrs. Partridge says she was unable to get the $1,000 she had loaned Joyce.

Sherwood Granted a Mandamus.

CORNING, N. Y., Nov. 19.—The application of Franklin D. Sherwood, Republican candidate for Senator from the 27th District, for a mandamus restraining the Board of Canvassers of Steuben County from forwarding to the State Board of Canvassers the protest of Chas. E. Walker, the Democratic candidate, and the resolution of the Board declaring their opinion that Mr. Sherwood was ineligible to the office of Senator because of holding the office of Park Commissioner in the city of Hornellsville, was granted by Judge Adams, in the Supreme Court, last night.

Four Killed by the Cars.

GREENSBURG, Pa., Nov. 19.—A sad accident occurred at Beirer's Crossing at 5 o'clock last evening. James Walsh, aged 26 years; William Galvin, aged 28; John McCain, aged 8, and William McCain, aged 8, attempted to cross the Southwest Pennsylvania Railroad track in a wagon. Just as they reached the crossing the Youghiogheny express, going North, turned the curve and struck the unfortunates. Welsh, Galvin, and the oldest McCain boy, were instantly killed. The younger McCain is fatally injured. Galvin was married, and leaves a wife and one child.

Instructions to Schultels.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—Acting Secretary Spalding said yesterday that, while the Treasury Department has not yet decided to make public the instructions given to Labor Commissioner Schultels, this course would be pursued if there exists any belief in England that the United States government countenanced the deception which Schulteis practiced on the English societies to assist emigrants. It is not intended that any official of this government shall play detective, and the department resents the trick which Schulteis resorted to.

Knights of Labor and the World's Fair.

TOLEDO, Nov. 19.—The General Assembly, Knights of Labor, has approved the demand of the W. C. T. U. for equal wages and equal suffrage. The Assembly declared in favor of the World's Fair being kept open on Sunday for the education of the masses, provided no person employed at the Fair shall work more than six days, eight hours each, per week. The fourth resolution, asking the Knights to petition the authorities to close the saloons and prevent the sale of liquor on the Fair grounds, was rejected.

A Strike Improbable.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 19.—The employes in Oliver & Roberts' South Side wire mill were yesterday notified of a 20 per cent. reduction in their wages. The employes are naturally very much dissatisfied, but that a strike will result is not considered probable, as the men are without organization.

Pawtucket Still Without a Mayor.

PAWTUCKET, R. I., Nov. 19.—A second attempt was made yesterday to elect a Mayor of this city but failed. The following is the vote: Ex-Mayor Hugh J. Carroll, Democrat, 1,817; White Republican, 949; Sherman, Independent, 1,432. No election.

HER FATHER IS RICH

But He Allowed Only $50 for His Child's Funeral.

SHE DIED IN A POORHOUSE.

Cruel Treatment of Maggie Barkley by Her Stepmother.

Compelled to Live Out as a Servant Girl to Avoid Her Tyranny—Taken Sick She Was Cared for by an Aunt, and Finally Went to the Poorhouse in Pittsburg—Her Father Worth $400,000.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 19. — Miss Maggie Barkeley, aged 26 years, died at the Pittsburg Poor Farm on Monday last of consumption.

The story of her life came out yesterday from a remark by undertaker Flannery, who declared the young woman was the daughter of a Brooklyn man worth $400,000. From investigation made last night it appears that Miss Barkeley came to Pittsburg last May.

She had for five years been a domestic in the family of Mrs. Kellogg of New York, a relative by marriage of one of the Vanderbilts.

Mrs. Kellogg advised her to leave New York for the benefit of her health, as the girl was showing symptoms of consumption.

This Miss Barkley did, taking up her home at 404 Fifth avenue, Pittsburg, with an aunt, Mrs. Mary A. Ferrigan. Mrs. Kellogg very kindly supplied her with money from time to time.

Several weeks ago she became so poorly that she was sent to the Homœopathic Hospital. After a time she was discharged from the institution but subsequently sought re-admission.

On account of some technicality this was refused, whereupon the girl applied to the city authorities and was admitted to the poorhouse.

The girl's story as it was related at the Ferrigan residence by Mrs. Mink, who lives in the same house, was that her parents left her with relatives in Ireland when she was 4 years old, the Barkleys emigrating to America.

The mother died in Brooklyn and the father remarried. The daughter was, for some reason, not sent for, but at the age of 16, having earned money as a servant, she came to America.

She claimed that her father would not receive her and she had to earn her own livelihood.

Undertaker Flannery says: "On Miss Barkley's death, Mr. Barkley, who is worth fully $400,000, was notified but sent no reply.

"Another telegram was sent him and that time he telegraphed.

"Bury her, expense not to exceed $50."

Chief Elliott was notified and Barkley will have to pay for the maintenance of his daughter at the poor farm.

THE PRESIDENT'S LUCK.

He Bagged the First Duck and Declined to Take Any Advantage.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 19.—The Presidential duck-shooting party had better luck yesterday, and seven fine specimens, including canvasbacks, redheads and Mallards, are displayed as the result of the day's sport. It was bitter cold when the President with Mr. Knight and ex-Senator Sewell started at dawn for the blind and a chilling northwester was blowing.

President Harrison was as usual offered the best point of vantage, but declined it, preferring to take his chances with the others. He was the first one to bring down a bird, and his aim was good, despite the heavy wind. He expects to have a good day's sport to-day and to return to Washington to-morrow.

A Miner's Heroic Act.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 19.—Napoleon De Montemue, a Frenchman, employed in one of the Plymouth mines, sacrificed his own life to save that of 600 other men. He had fired a blast, when a spark set a pocket of gas on fire. There was no immediate danger, but Montemue thought the fire would spread and endanger the lives of 600 men. He at once took off his coat and began to beat out the flame with his garment. He succeeded, but before he could get back in his breast, the roof fell in, crushing him to death.

October Output of Anthracite.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 19.—Statistician Jones' report of the production of anthracite coal in October shows that the output exceeds the best month on record by nearly a quarter of a million tons. It is estimated that the output for the year will approximate 39,500,000 tons, or a million tons more than the best year heretofore. Prices have been better than at any time since the Knights of Labor strike in the Schuylkill regions three years ago.

Mayor Grant Couldn't Land.

QUEENSTOWN, Nov. 19.—The Inman line steamship City of Paris, having on board Mayor Grant, was unable to make a landing here, owing to the storm which was prevailing off the coast, and so she made direct for Liverpool. This is said to be the first time that Captain Watkins has had such an experience. Mayor Grant was landed at Liverpool at 6 o'clock last evening.

NEW ENGLAND BRIEFS.

The U. S. cruiser Newark sailed from Boston yesterday for Chili.

Mrs. Ruth Davis, who was 100 years old last August, is dead at Long Plain, N. H.

The National Association of Carriage and Harness Manufacturers is in session at Springfield, Mass.

Etta W. Harris, better known as Dr. Ludgate, who has figured prominently in criminal annals for the past two years, died yesterday in Tyngsboro, Mass.

CANNOT BE SETTLED.

No Likelihood of Peaceful Negotiations Between Fonseca and Grande do Sul.

MONTEVIDEO, Nov. 19.—It appears that very little confidence is placed by the Provisional government forces of Rio Grande do Sul in the favorable result of any negotiations pending with Da Fonseca, as the troops of the Provisional government are actively engaged in strengthening Rio Grande do Sul to resist an expected attack of Da Fonseca's forces.

The Fonseca government is also evidently apprehensive of trouble in the Province of Santa Catharina, and a body of soldiers has been sent there by sea.

The troops will be stationed at Desterro, the capital, where they will be prepared for any disturbance in Santa Catharina itself, or can be readily used in an attack on the opposition forces in the adjoining province of Rio Grande do Sul.

One rumor is to the effect that Fonseca apprehends a sudden descent by sea by the naval force of the opposition on Desterro, which, from its exposed situation might easily be captured in that way, especially as the forts defending Desterro have but a small garrison.

Latest advices from Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil, say that additional towns in the State have gone over to the side of the Provisional Junta. Among them are Santinoel, San Lins, Parana and Cruzalta.

The enlistment of infantry and cavalry among the people of Porto Alegre, the capital of Rio Grande do Sul, is actively carried on.

Two Killed in a Collision.

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa., Nov. 19.—A passenger train collision occurred at Aughensbaugh Station yesterday afternoon by which two men were killed outright and one sustained injuries that are likely to prove fatal. Twelve or fifteen of the passengers were badly shaken up and bruised. Two engines were demolished and half a dozen coaches were badly damaged. Two express trains running at a high rate of speed collided. Lum Ray, one of the train-hands, and a passenger named Harry Bard were killed outright. The engineer was hurled into the air, and when picked up had both of his legs broken and received other injuries from which he cannot recover.

Forgot to Put in the Wires.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 19.—Pittsburg's new postoffice and Federal building, which has been nearly 20 years in process of construction, was practically finished recently with a strange oversight. Those in charge forgot to wire the building for electric lights. Gas has already been found impracticable, and Congress will have to be asked for an extra appropriation with which to put electric wires in.

Contest for the Speakership.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—The Speakership contest will open in earnest next Monday, when Mr. Mills will establish his headquarters at Willard's Hotel. He will be the first in the field. Mr. Springer will be at the National and Mr. Hatch probably at Willard's. The other candidates have not yet selected their rooms.

Fatal Railroad Collision.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Nov. 19.—A wrecking train collided with the westbound mail on the Chateaugay Railroad, near Lyon Mountain. Fred Mellette was fatally injured and both trains badly wrecked. The cause was a misunderstanding of orders.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The New Orleans Cotton Exchange reported its receipts yesterday the largest in the history of the port.

Miss Bessie Blosson, one of the prettiest girls of Genoa, Nev., has eloped with an Indian of the Washoe tribe.

The weather in the West for two days has been very cold. In some parts of Minnesota the mercury was down to 20 degrees below zero.

Thomas Magett, the son of the well-known Indianapolis artist, is under arrest, charged with writing improper letters to a young lady.

Weather Indications.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—For New England: Westerly winds; fair; slightly warmer to-morrow.

For Eastern New York, Eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland and Delaware: Fair; variable winds; fair and warmer to-morrow.

For Western New York and Western Pennsylvania: Warmer; southerly winds and generally fair weather.

MR. SPANGENBERG SPEAKS.

He Tells Some Interesting Facts About His Councilmanic Career, and Shows How the "Big Six" Have Always Worked Solely for the Public Good and Plainfield's Growth.

So much has been published in misrepresentation of the so-called "Big Six" of the Plainfield common council, and so many have asked THE PRESS to secure for the public an authoritative history of that body's workings in the interests of public improvements and Plainfield's advancement, that a reporter obtained an interview with Leonard Spangenberg, the people's candidate for re-election in the Second ward, and secured from him an interesting statement of the doings of the "Big Six" during their official career.

"In the fall of 1889,"—said Mr. Spangenberg, in response to the reporter's inquiries—"while myself and several gentlemen were at the Netherwood station, discussing the political situation in Plainfield, Henry E. Bowen asked me if I knew of a good Democrat in Netherwood, who would run for councilman in the second ward. I replied that he was looking at one, meaning myself. He said 'You get the Democrats to nominate you, and we will elect you.' I told him that I was not over-anxious to run, as it would take up a great deal of time from by business. A day or so after that I met Mr. Moffett on the train, and told him what Mr. Bowen had said. I added that if the Democrats would nominate a good man they no doubt could elect their man. The result of these and other discussions was that they nominated me as their candidate. After due consideration, I agreed to accept the nomination, with the understanding that I pledged myself only to 'High License', as I desired to be a free agent, and would not be hampered by anything else.

"As soon as I received the nomination, the Republicans of the Putnam avenue district sent a delegate to me, desiring an interview, which I gave them. The people of that district and of Netherwood had never before been able to get anything done for them, but I told them that I would look after their interests, and pledged myself to advocate waterworks, sewers, and a street railway.

"About 6 in the evening, in January, 1890, when we met to organize the council, Mr. Moffett called upon me and said he wanted me to meet the three other Democrats of the council at half-past 7, in the parlor of Miller's hotel. I was then suffering from a severe attack of the grippe, and had been ordered by Dr. Hedges to remain at home, but I promised Mr. Moffett that I would be there. When I arrived I found that a deal was proposed to, put Mr. Moffett in the chair and appoint J. B. Coward as clerk. I said 'This means that the Democrats are going to be on top, and you are at liberty to make up your committees as you see fit?' Mr. Moffett said 'Yes.' As I did not care who had the clerkship, provided he was a capable man, I at once agreed to make the deal. I learned only a short time ago, through Mr. Smith, that Mr. Pope was at the bottom of this deal, and wanted Mr. Coward for clerk, even if Mr. Moffett had to be made president of the council. I also learned through 'Uncle Dan' Roberts that councilman Johnston had also agreed to do the same thing, but that he backed out at the last moment.

"When the water and sewer franchises came up for consideration, I saw Messrs. Pope and Runkle, not in an official way, but as a progressive citizen. I said to these gentlemen 'Put in the water and sewers together, and you can get a franchise for both, which would be a benefit to yourselves as well as to the city.' They agreed to have a committee meet the water committee of the council, which committees met, and the result was the discovery that they did not know anything about sewers. But our council committee said 'Furnish the money, and you can get a sanitary engineer to do the rest.'

"Did these gentlemen take our advice? No: but they were bent on putting in the water alone, with a franchise obtained twenty years ago, in the days of special legislation, which could not be obtained to-day. This charter is as broad as the Atlantic ocean. In other words, it means 'Go as you please, and do likewise'. Well, what did they do? Why! put in the water, and left our streets in a most outrageous condition. The granting of the J. M. Low franchise has brought the Plainfield Water Supply company down from $60 to $19 per hydrant per annum, both for fire purposes and flushing the sewers. The former price Frank Bergen said in my presence and Mr. Low's, would be their price, if they flushed the sewers. This is quite a fall in price: is it not? But if the city should see fit to grant them this price of $19, where would the profit come from? Why, they would make it up with the consumers of water, and bond the city for sewers, and perhaps for water as well. The result would then be politicians in our council, and a repetition of the experience of Elizabeth, Rahway and New Brunswick, financial disaster.

"I can readily understand why councilman Rushmore is so deeply interested in the Plainfield Water Supply company's interest: his father and father-in-law are both directors in this company. I have no personal spite against any of the gentlemen connected with the Plainfield Water Supply company, but I am working in the interests of the city of Plainfield from start to finish, and I defy anyone to make a statement in public that anyone of the 'Big Six' have ever taken one dollar for their vote for any of the franchises that have come up in the council, notwithstanding the gross misrepresentations of these gentlemen by the Plainfield Evening News and Central Times. The 'Big Six' have spent their time and money in the city's welfare, and their sole desire is to see the city progress like other cities in the United States. I venture to say that with water, sewers, and a street railway, the population will double in the next five years."

At Rest.

The funeral services held over the remains of the late Anna E. Titsworth, yesterday afternoon, were very beautiful and impressive. Friends and relatives of the deceased thronged the residence on West Seventh street to overflowing. The body reposed in a handsome white velvet casket, about which were heaped roses, lilies of the valley, and other rare blossoms, entwined with the green of the smilax, in great profusion. The casket rested on a bank of chrysanthemums, roses, pinks, and smilax. There was an abundance of magnificent flowers all about the room. A bust of Longfellow, Miss Titsworth's favorite poet, stood in a bed of roses near the casket. The service was opened by the singing of that beautiful hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light", by a special choir consisting of Mrs. J. K. Myer, Miss Holmes, E. E. Runyon, and Robert Gorton, who also sang "Life Has Many Trials", and that sweetly solemn hymn, "Gathering Home". The Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis read poetical selections and passages of Scripture which had been favorites of the departed, and spoke feelingly of her lovely qualities and Christian womanliness of character. The Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes led in prayer.

Interment was made in Hillside cemetery, where the Rev. Mr. Daland, of Westerly, R. I., read the burial sentence. The pall-bearers were Joseph M. Titsworth, Arthur L. Titsworth, and George B. Titsworth, brothers of the deceased, and David E. Titsworth, John D. Titsworth, and the Rev. Everitt Tomlinson of Elizabeth, cousins.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

"Esmeralda" will be a great success at the Casino to-night.

Miss Cook of Norwich, Conn., is visiting her uncle, councilman Gallup.

Frank Humston of Dunellen has been spending a few days with his parents.

The ladies of the Trinity church will conduct a tea at the home of Mrs. J. H. Tier this evening.

A. H. Lewis, J. F. Hubbard and G. H. Babcock have been appointed a committee to secure publication headquarters for the Seventh-Day Baptist denomination.

Prominent guests at the annual banquet of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, at Delmonico's, Tuesday evening, were W. Wallace Howland, John W. Murray, and Augustus D. Shepard.

Funeral services over the remains of the late Sarah J. Mundy, who died at Passaic yesterday, will be held at 2:30 to-morrow afternoon from the residence of her father, Thomas Clarke, 25 Somerset place.

Double Wedding.

An interesting ceremony took place at the M. E. church parsonage last evening, when the Rev. C. B. Mitchell united two happy couples in marriage. The two brides were Miss Lulu Woolley and Miss Sophia Mieleteski, both of this city. Miss Woolley, who is the daughter of Mrs. L. Woolley, became the wife of Wallace H. Coriell, son of Cornelius Coriell; and Miss Mieletski, who is the daughter of Joseph Mieletski of Germany, was the bride of Howard Thompson, son of William Thompson. The event was a very pretty one, and the happy young people have the congratulations and best wishes of a host of friends.

Escape the Shylocks, While Yet There is Time.

In a conversation with a resident of Plainfield, a prominent official in the city of Elizabeth said: "Do not allow your city to be placed in our situation. Here we have our water-works, gas-works, and street railway, all owned and controlled by one party. Why sir, this John Kean syndicate have us completely by the throat, and we are utterly helpless. I say to you Plainfielders, do not have all the improvements at the mercy of a band of selfish Shylocks."

—A teachers' meeting for Bible study will be held in Grace church chapel to-morrow afternoon at 4:30.

—A description of the ancient Pharaohs, under whom the Israelites toiled in a grievous bondage, will be found in that intensely interesting and valuable book, "The Story of Man", which further tells how, by a method of engineering, now unknown, they built the immense Pyramids, and carved out the mighty Sphinx, which, as marvels in stone, still stand towering among the wonders of the world to tell modern ages of the power, wealth, and almost unparalleled attainments in all the sciences of this now fallen race.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

Cold Weather.

The thermometer at Tier's lake at 6 a. m. to-day registered 16 degrees above zero. The lake is entirely frozen over.

Mr. Milliken's thermometer registered 20 above zero, Tuesday night, a fall of 40 degrees in 24 hours, and last night was down to 14 above.

Easily made. A cheap and delicious drink for 25 cents can be made from Hires's Root Beer packages. Five gallons. Be careful that you get the real, genuine Hires's. There are a number of would-be Root Beer packages on the market.

Hymeneal: Irick—Drexel.

VINCENTOWN, N. J., Nov. 19.—Miss M. S. Irick and Mr. George Washington Childs Drexel, the youngest son of Mr. A. J. Drexel, the banker, were married in the Trinity Protestant Episcopal Church at noon. Bishop Scarborough of New Jersey performed the ceremony, assisted by Rev. James W. Smith, the rector. The church was handsomely decorated. Owing to the illness of Mrs. Drexel, the bridegroom's mother, the wedding was private. Mr. Anthony J. Drexel, the groom's father, was present at the ceremony.

Not Yellow Fever.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Nov. 19.—M. Berger, the barber of the United States and Brazilian steamship Allencea, who was sent to the hospital for contagious diseases, has been discharged from there as cured. The health authorities state that he was not suffering from yellow fever.

Burglars Made a Big Haul.

ALLENTOWN, Pa., Nov. 19.—The house of Charles Holbach at Catasauqua was entered by burglars during the night, who stole $500 in gold, a quantity of jewelry and $20,000 worth of bonds and other papers. The papers were found near the house.

Senator Donaldson Better.

BALLSTON, N. Y., Nov. 19.—State Senator Harvey J. Donaldson, who has been suffering with a severe cold which threatened to develop into pneumonia, is thought to have passed the danger line.

Shiloh's Cough Cure.

This is beyond question the most successful Cough Medicine we have ever sold; a few doses invariably cure the worst cases of Cough, Croup and Bronchitis, while its wonderful success in the cure of Consumption is without a parallel in the history of medicine. Since its first discovery it has been sold on a guarantee, a test which no other medicine can stand. If you have a cough we earnestly ask you to try it. Price 10c., 50c. and $1. If your lungs are sore, chest, or back lame, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by J. G. Miller, No. 10 East Front street, Plainfield N.J.

TIRED OUT—EXHAUSTED.

How Women Can Get Strength and Health.

From the society lady who suffers from nervousness or palpitation to the wife and mother, who by over-work and household cares, becomes tired, weak, exhausted, dragged out, with nerves shattered and unstrung, the cause is the same—nervous prostration.

The remedy is Dr. Greene's Nervura. It is the great nerve invigorator, the great blood vitalizer, the great strength producer, the great health restorer. It will give you good digestion and regulate the bowels. Above all, it will make you strong, vigorous and healthy, give you a good complexion, strong and steady nerves. It is purely vegetable and harmless. Druggists sell it, $1. Do not fail to use it, weak and nervous sufferer.

"I was miserable, had no ambition, no strength in my limbs, and was tired all the time.

TIRED AND WORN OUT.

"When I walked a few rods I felt as if I would drop down on the ground. Dr Greene's Nervura has done me more good than anything I have ever taken. I look and feel like another person since I began to take it, and I recommend it to all who are ailing."

MRS. FRANCES M. BODLE,
Chester, N. Y."

N. B. Dr. Greene, the successful specialist in curing all forms of nervous and chronic diseases, 35 W. 14th St., New York, can be consulted, free, personally, or by letter. Call or write him about your case, or send for symptom blank to fill out, and a letter fully explaining your disease, giving advice, etc., will be returned free.

A Communication.

Citizens of Plainfield, how do you appreciate the name used by the Kean funnel? You are hirelings of the "Big Six" when you attempt to dictate your own vote according to the Kean funnel idea. Well, he may be right; but have you ever thought how a funnel is made? It is large at the top, and runs down to a point, forming a kind of a concentration. Now, just see how it is worked. When you want to pay your gas bill, go to the funnel, No. 6 East Front street. When you want to pay your electric light bill, go to the funnel, No. 6 East Front street. When you want to pay your water bill, go to the funnel, No. 6 East Front street. When you want to deposit your weekly earnings, go to the funnel, No. 6 East Front street. Now just keep on dancing to the tune of the Kean funnel, and in a short time you will have to go to the funnel to pay your sewerage rent, and your street railway fare. It won't be long before you will have to go to the Kean funnel to know whether you will have cabbage for dinner or soft-shell clams, or nothing. How do you like the picture? If you like it, swallow it, and don't kick after it's too late.

ADMIRER OF PLUCK.

John Jaeger's Conversion.

John Jaeger, who will speak with Col. Bryant, at the men's meeting at the Trinity Reformed church, next Sunday afternoon at 4:15, has had a marvelous experience. On the 9th day of July, 1881, he was a drunkard, a thief, and an opium eater, in one of the worst sections of New York city. On that day a teacher in a Sunday-school which his little girls attended found him in a fearful condition just on the verge of delirium tremens. John had never been to school, and could neither read nor write, and did not know a word of the English language. Mr. Gilbert, the Sunday-school teacher, persuaded him to go that night to Jerry McAuley's Water street mission, and he went forward for prayers. As Jerry prayed, the only word that John could understand was Jesus, which sounds in German very much as in English. But he knew enough of the plan of salvation to accept Jesus, which he then did, and from that moment to this he has been a new man.

School for the School Ma'ams.

The Plainfield public schools will be closed to-morrow to permit the teachers to attend the Union county teachers' institute to be held at Elizabeth, Nov. 20 and 21.

The programme includes the following: "The Teaching of History, Theory and Practice", by Miss Williams of the New Jersey State Normal School; "Some Errors in Our School Work", by the Hon. E. O. Chapman, State Superintendent; "Essentials of Good Teaching and Development of Character", by Mrs. H. E. Monroe of Philadelphia; and "Nature Study—Training to Observe", by Prof. A. C. Apgar of the New Jersey State Normal School.

This institute is held under the direction of the Union county superintendent, B. Holmes of Elizabeth, and in accordance with the State law.

A Talented Woman to Speak.

One of the most gifted, entertaining and effective platform speakers of to-day is Mrs. Luther, wife of Dr. Luther, of Newark. Besides being the wife of a physician of high standing she is herself a graduated M. D.

The Baptists of this city have long endeavored to secure her appearance here, heretofore without success; but at last she has consented, or, more properly speaking, she has been able, to arrange her engagements, so as to be in this city next Sunday evening.

She will speak at the special service of the Park Avenue Baptist church.

The subject will be "Missions", of which an experience of ten years in the foreign mission field entitles her to speak with authority.

Borough Property Changes Hands.

Recent North Plainfield real-estate transfers include the following:

Warren M. Townley to Harry L. Maxson, $2,500.

Harry L. Maxson to Margaret Townley, $2,500.

Helen M. Morgan to George R. Brown, $1.

Letitia B. Larrabee to Edwin L. Bonny, $5,000.

Carrie C. Boice and Carrie C. Boice, jr., to Elisha Coriell, $11,000.

Elisha Coriell to Justus H. Cooley, $11,000.

Grand Sociable To-night.

Valuable Horse Poisoned.

Z. Osborne, the Dunellen milkman, met with a severe loss yesterday. He purchased some rat poison and placed it in his barn, on some grain, to kill rats. During Tuesday night his most valuable horse got loose, and, finding the grain, ate it. The animal was in terrible agony, and died yesterday morning.

Reveries of bachelors used to contain an alloy of painful anticipation on account of sleepless nights with the prospective baby, but Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup has made all that part a joy forever.

Fanwood People Hear the Phonograph.

A very pleasant entertainment was given at the Fanwood club-house last evening. Adrian Plate gave some very skillful sleight-of-hand performance. Frank H. Paulison gave some fine harmonica solos, recitals, and humorous sketches. The Edison phonograph was heard in wonderful reproductions. After the regular programme, gentlemen from the audience sang two comic songs: "Learning McFadden to waltz" and "I've worked eight hours this day". They sang into the phonograph, which reproduced the songs to the delight of the audiences. This entertainment over, the hall was cleared, and dancing ended the evening's pleasure. The music was furnished by Andrew G. Carpenter of this city.

Robbers at Warrenville.

Many of the farmers have lately lost potatoes, corn, etc., which have been taken from their farms during the night. Some of the corn was husked in the fields when taken. Fillmore Codington lost cider barrels. Charles Codington lost 10 bushels of apples of choice variety. Geo Mantz lost 10 bushels of potatoes, which were dug out of the ground in the night. William Miller lost several bushels of corn husked in the fields and taken away in the night.

A search warrant was obtained, and the premises of Mr. Benaux were searched, on suspicion. Several articles found looked like the lost property. Mr. Benaux is missing.

BEN BOLT.

Three Horses Burned in a Barn.

This morning, between 3 and 4 o'clock, a fire broke out in Joel Giddis's barn, Dunellen, which was situated in the rear of his lot on North avenue.

The barn contained three good horses, besides other utensils, all of which were burned. This is a great loss to Mr. Giddis, who depended upon his stable for his living.

Mr. Giddis was away at the time of the fire, attending a sick horse for a neighbor, and thinks that some one set the barn afire maliciously. His son Arthur ran out barefoot and saved two wagons.

Mr. Giddis's insurance expired only a week ago, and was not renewed.

Good Music Under Mr. Roe's Leadership.

The New Market and Dunellen Vocal society organized Tuesday evening for the coming winter. They will give Dunellenites a chance to listen to their melodious voices at an entertainment later. The last one, given under the leadership of Mr. Roe of Plainfield, was a grand success, and as he has again taken charge of the society the lovers of music are expecting another treat.

Accident to an Equestrian.

A young man named Loizeaux, while riding on horseback down Park avenue, this morning, met with an accident. His horse slipped on a puddle of ice in front of Rafferty's, fell heavily, and rolled over on the rider's leg. Neither was hurt except that the weight of the horse strained the rider's leg.

Without doubt the most wonderful remedy for pain is Salvation Oil. It sells for 25 cents.

Said to be a Defaulter.

READING, Pa., Nov. 19.—It is now alleged that Horatio Merkel, superintendent of the Moselem Iron Company, is a defaulter to the extent of several thousand dollars. He has been missing for a week, and it is believed that he is in the West. The furnace is owned by Philadelphians, and Merkel paid the employes and collected the rents.

NEW YORK NEWS IN BRIEF.

Mrs. Henry Hoyt, of Rochester, was killed in a wreck on the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad at Perry, Tuesday night. Baggageman Kane had several ribs broken.

Will Sanford, colored, of Jordan, while hunting rabbits accidentally shot himself through the arm. The arm was amputated but Sanford died soon after from the shock and loss of blood.

The lifeless body of Stephen Conley, of Corning, was found in his wagon Tuesday night. He had fallen asleep and in some way got his head caught against the wheel which tore away part of his head.

Bridge Across the Schuylkill.

NORRISTOWN, Nov. 19.—The Reading Railroad Company has the arrangements about completed to build a bridge across the Schuylkill at Norristown. It is expected that by the time the terminal in Philadelphia is finished this bridge will be built, and that all trains on the main line will cross at Norristown, and so secure the advantage of the terminal.

NEW JERSEY JOTTINGS.

John Malloy, a grocery man and owner of a stone quarry at Lambertville, has been missing since Friday last. He has many creditors, it is said.

Smallpox is still raging in Newark. Yesterday an Italian woman and her 4-year-old son were removed to the pest house suffering from the disease.

"A GOD SEND is Ely's Cream Balm. I had catarrh for three years. Two or three times a week my nose would bleed. I thought the sores would never heal. Your Balm has cured me."—Mrs. M. A. Jackson, Portsmouth, N. H.

I WAS so much troubled with catarrh it seriously affected my voice. One bottle of Ely's Cream Balm did the work. My voice is fully restored.—S. P. Lisenner, A. M., pastor of the Olivet Baptist Church, Philadelphia, Pa.

Misinformed.

She (severely)—I have been informed that you intend to give a bachelor dinner to your friends on the day before we are married. Now, as I understand it, a bachelor dinner is for the purpose of taking leave of a gang of fellows whom no gentleman would introduce to his wife, and I should just like to know why a gentleman should have such—

He—My dear, you have been misinformed. I haven't the least intention of giving a bachelor dinner or taking leave of anybody.

"You haven't?"

"Of course not. I shall meet them every night at the club just the same as before."—N. Y. Weekly.

Important to Smokers.

"You ain't a-gwine to give ten cents for that cigar, are you?"

"I believe I will, Sally," said he.

"Jest to burn up?" said she.

"That's what it is make for, Sally," said he.

"Well," said she, "I'd look at a dime a long time before I'd give it for that thing and then burn it right straight up. If I was gwine to be a fool I'd be a fool some other way."—Texas Siftings.

On the Stubble Field.

Chappie—I can't get the impwession out of my mind that I've forgotten something.

Dumley—Not your flawsk?

Chappie—No, nor me loading tools, nor me compass. Here are me cleaning implements, shell extwactor and me cartwidge bag. Aw, I have it now. I have left me gun at home! Deucedly awkward, isn't it?—Jury.

An Unfortunate Break.

"I declare, I never thought!" cried Mrs. Lincolnpark, after her dinner was over.

"Never thought of what?" asked Mr. L.

"Why, I placed Col. Jones and Mrs. Parkerton next each other at dinner, and, now I think of it, he was her first husband!"—Harper's Bazar.

One or the Other.

Seaside Visitor—What a magnificent villa! It must have cost a fortune.

Driver—That's Smith's cottage.

Visitor—Ah, indeed! Smith, the soap man, or Smith, the pill man?—N. Y. Weekly.

Nothing to Fear.

Lady—Little boy, isn't that your mother calling you?

Little Boy—Yes'm.

"Why don't you answer her, then?"

"Pop's away."—Good News.

What It Was Made For.

"I can't see any sense in the line: 'Time was made for slaves.' It's made for men."

"How so?"

"So they can have plenty to wait in while their wives are putting on their bonnets."—Philadelphia Times.

Pedagogical Item.

Said an absent-minded school-teacher: "I hear a quiet noise in the right hand corner of the room. I know very well who the guilty party is, but I will not mention his name. It is Tommy Jones."—Texas Siftings.

Explained.

"I wonder why that widow, Mrs. Hitterby, paints the edges of her eyelids black."

"In memory of Hitterby. It's a mourning border just like that on her stationery."—Judge.

Grease and Cash.

Hessman—Confound it! I've managed to get several spots of grease on my overcoat.

Seedeigh—I was fortunate enough to get several dollars on mine.—Jury.

Get the Genuine.

If you suffer with lame back, especially in morning, ALLCOCK'S PLASTERS are a sure relief.

If you cannot sleep, try an ALLCOCK PLASTER, well up between the shoulder blades—often relieves—sometimes cures. Try this before you resort to opiates.

If any of your muscles are lame—joints stiff—feel as if they wanted oiling—or if you suffer with any local pains or aches, these plasters will cure you.

If you use them once you will realize why so many plasters have been made in imitation of them. Like all good things, they are copied as closely as the law allows. Don't be duped by taking an imitation when it is as easy to get the genuine.

If you always insist upon having ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS and never accept a substitute, you will not be disappointed.

He Had a Piece.

Mother—What in the world has become of the other half of that cake I cut for supper?

Little Dick—You gave it to me.

"Nonsense! You asked if you could have a piece of cake and I said yes."

"Yes'm. I meant the piece that was left over."—Good News.

The Wrong Man.

Clubberly — My tailor came around yesterday and I couldn't pay him. Sad, I assure you.

Pupette—I know how that is, and I can sympathize with you, old man.

Clubberly — Don't sympathize with me. Sympathize with the tailor.—Clothier and Furnisher.

Dangerous Foes.

Cuely—Play a game of billiards, sir?

Stranger—Well, yes; but I must tell you I don't know anything about the game, and—

Cuely—Excuse me, then, if you please! It cost me five dollars to play with a man this morning who didn't know anything about it!—Boston News.

IT IS NOT

A LIE.

A. R. TUDOR'S Rye Whiskey is warranted absolutely pure and ten years old, and the statement is unqualifiedly true. Read the following affidavit:

HENRY SNYDER, Jr., of the City, County and State of New York, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he has been the General Manager of the A. R. TUDOR Co. from its inception, and he knows of his own knowledge that no neutral spirits, flavoring extracts, or foreign ingredients of any kind have ever been used or contained in the Whiskey bottled under the label and trade mark of A. R. TUDOR. He further solemnly swears that he has personally superintended the withdrawal of the A. R. TUDOR Co.'s Whiskey from the U. S. Bonded Warehouse, and that the U. S. Government stamps on the barrels thereof have, in no instance, borne date later than the year 1881.

must be simple; when it is not simple it is not good. Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. All metal, tough and seamless, and made in three pieces only, it is absolutely safe and unbreakable. Like Aladdin's of old, it is indeed a "wonderful lamp," for its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light and more cheerful than either.

NOVELTIES IN GEWGAWS.

What Fashionable People Will Wear in Jewelry This Winter.

Bow Knots Quite the Go—Scarf-Pin Frogs —A New Kind of Signet Ring—Odd Stones That Are Being Set in Jewelry—Rings for Men.

[COPYRIGHT, 1891.]

The prevailing styles this season are marked by beauty, simplicity and elegance, especially in rings, scarf pins and bracelets. One would think that of the myriads of different designs of articles of jewelry since the goldsmith's art has been in existence that invention and imagination were exhausted—nevertheless, novelty comes and ingenuity is exhibited every season with unremitting regularity. The great jewelry houses never fail to have something on hand different from last year. Tiffany & Co. literally ransack the world for new gems, and art libraries and picture galleries for novel forms that may be used for trinkets for personal adornment. Clever workmen in jewelry rack their brains for something new. This is true of all the houses who make a specialty of these goods. Amidst a glittering collection of bangles and bracelets, brooches and pendants, earrings and necklaces, all set more or less with precious stones from diamonds to tourmalines, all in the aggregate equal to the ransom of a score of kings, the eye rests on what are apparently narrow bands of gold twisted into fantastic shapes.

On closer examination they are found to be bow knots of colored etruscan gold, highly chased and beautifully engraved. Some are with clusters of one pearl, one diamond, one sapphire and one emerald. These articles are of large size for ladies for brooches and smaller as scarf pins for gentlemen. The bow knot is carried through all articles of jewelry this season. An exquisite effect of watered rilk ribbon is given to some of these brooches or breastpins. They are of various colors, all delicate and on many the enameling is different on both sides. Most of this particular design are set with diamonds. They are too comparatively moderate in price, ranging from twenty-six to seventy-five dollars. One of these is especially striking—the enamel of a deep rich navy blue, and the bows large and full. The back has all the shimmer of a watered silk ribbon.

Among the numerous styles of scarf pins for men are college and club pins. They are in the shape of flags enamelled richly on fine gold, with the colors of the different colleges and athletic clubs.

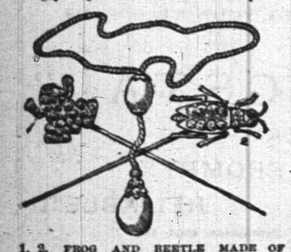
Another pattern of pin that attracts attention is also a bow-knot with a combination of diamonds and pearls.

A very decided novelty are scarf pins made to look like frogs. The green effect of the amphibian is obtained by enamel, and the eyes are of Uralian emeralds, better known as green garnets or demantoid. These frogs are also set with diamonds. Demantoid reflects light as the diamond does, and it shows a play of color which no other stone does except zircon.

There are pins set with precious stones cut in quaint and curious shapes. Some are shield-like, others are elongated hearts. They are in topaz, sapphire, hyacinth, ruby and emerald. The prices of these are from sixty dollars up to several thousands, but some of the prettiest designs cost from eighty-five to a hundred dollars, and are set with diamonds at that.

One of the latest things in signet rings is a gold ring for gentlemen with the signet in platinum or engraved on an oblong sapphire. Some of the signets of these rings are oblong, others shield shape and circular. There is an endless variety of new designs in ladies' rings—they are often very artistic, and most of them reasonable in price to suit the pockets of all. Some of them are as low as from two to ten dollars, and these latter are often set with carbuncles, pearls and spinels.

Bracelets are still as popular as ever, a very pretty bracelet consists of a pearl



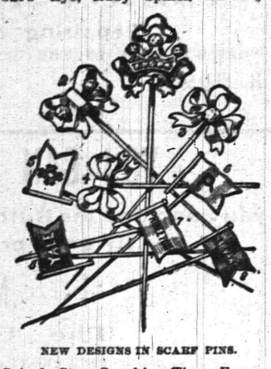
1, 2. FROG AND BEETLE MADE OF GREEN GARNETS.
3. PEARL CHAIN BRACELET.

that has been drilled with a chain running through it with a pendant shower of pearls. There are many varieties of bracelets constructed on the same principle. A choice and superb article and a novelty of novelties is a bracelet with a pink conch pearl, while there are others with chain and pendants glittering with rubies, pink sapphire—a most valuable stone—and spinel. The value of one of these taken up at random is two hundred and fifty dollars.

Going back to rings again—the ring that is particularly fashionable this season is the sapphire seal for gentlemen. Other stones and combinations that are favorites for rings of both sexes are essonite and diamonds, ruby and diamonds, almadine or purple garnets and diamonds. All of these are of the most attractive designs.

Many kinds of precious stones are now being used for jewel settings to a much greater degree than formerly. Some of the names of the stones are strangely unfamiliar to the wearer of jewelry. These fancy and precious stone rings mounted in various designs, single clustered and in combination, comprise an infinite variety of stones, including the following unusual ones:

Alexandrite, Asteria, Beryl, Bloodstone, Cat's Eye, Chrysoberl, Chrysolite, Conchshell, Demantoid, Golden Beryl, Hematite, Jacinth Jargoon, Jasper, Lapis Lazuli, Moonstone, Moss Agate, Olivine, Peridot, Rubelite, Ruby Cat's Eye, Ruby Spinel, Sardonyx.



NEW DESIGNS IN SCARF PINS.

Spinel, Star Sapphire, Tiger Eye and Zircon. In addition to these there are Chlorastrolites from Lake Superior, Jade from New Zealand, Moss agates from Wyoming, Phenacites from Siberia and Colorado, Rutile from North Carolina and White Chatoyancy. Every one of these may be used and are used for jewelry settings. The Spinel, which is fashionable this season, is a particularly beautiful stone. It is found in Ceylon, Siam and Burmah. It has more colors than the rainbow, an endless variety of tints, from ruby red, yellowish red, pink, purple and green. Not less exquisite is the Peridol, with its tint of olive green and yellow green, brown and cinnamon-colored. Australia and Ceylon are noted for these gems. Essonite is another name for the Hyacinth of Ceylon. It forms a setting for many scarf pins.

Rich and simple studs for gentlemen will be exceedingly fashionable, as the vests will be cut lower for evening dress. Gold key rings as anchors for gold key chains are much in vogue, and all the jewelry houses are supplying them. Earrings are worn more than ever—especially the more beautiful and expensive ones. Diamonds as usual are the most popular. English and foreign women often make the remark that it rather borders on vulgarity to wear earrings at all times. English women are loudest in their denunciation of the practice. The reason for this is not generally known. It is because the foreign jewelry is so vastly inferior to the American. Most diamond earrings possessed by English ladies will not bear the light of day. The stones are indifferently set and are frequently not of good quality. Diamonds for the American market must be up to a certain standard or they will not sell. If English women had as fine diamonds as American women they would be adorning themselves on every possible opportunity. American women do wear their jewelry at all times and not only on festive occasions, because they know it will bear inspection, being of the highest workmanship and finish.

NOVELTIES IN RINGS FOR GENTLEMEN.

Bracelets will also be much in favor. They will run chiefly to the form of a chain with pendants of pearls and precious stones as described. Pearls are being worn more this season than before. They are proving in some respects formidable rivals to diamonds, although the pearl and the diamond are often in combination.

A Laughable Blunder.

A very popular young preacher was the recipient of much attention on the part of the ladies of his congregation and one shy and blushing spinster, on the occasion of his birthday, chose for him a pretty inkstand. She gave to the clerk the following penciled inscription, to be engraved upon its base: "To my pastor, from his grateful Malvina S." The changing of an "m" to an "n," however, made all the difference in the world; and the astonished young clergyman read: "Tony Pastor, from his grateful, etc.," and naturally wondering what could be the connection between the theatrical manager and Miss S., whom he looked upon as one of the pillars of his church, he sent the package back to the jeweler's, to be forwarded, as he supposed, to its rightful owner. It was not until the young lady herself, wondering why her gift was not acknowledged, made inquiries at the shop that the egregious blunder was discovered.—N. Y. Tribune.

FLORENCE IS DEAD

The Genial Actor Succumbs to His Illness.

HE PASSES AWAY PEACEFULLY.

Encouraging Reports Had Caused His Friends to Hope He Would Recover.

Sketch of the Great Comedian's Career—His Debut in New York—The Great Success of Mr. Florence and His Wife in the "Mighty Dollar"—His Association With Joseph Jefferson—His Plans for the Future.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 20.—Actor William J. Florence died at his apartments in the Continental Hotel at 8:30 last evening. His death was a surprise to those in attendance upon him as all indications during the afternoon and evening pointed to a steady improvement.

Those present when the famous actor passed away were Mr. Florence's sister-in-law, Mrs Barney Williams, of Brooklyn, his sister, Mrs. Norman Wiard, of Washington, and Dr. Patrick Donnellan. Dr. Pancoast, who had charge of the case, left the hotel about 7 o'clock, secure in the thought that his patient was doing as well as could be expected. Mr. Florence's brother, Police Inspector Conlin, left for New York at six o'clock with the same impression.

Mr. Florence was very weak in the afternoon and towards evening he slept most of the time. Death came very peacefully. The patient made no sound whatever, and the first intimation the watchers had of his death was that he had ceased to breathe.

Mr. Florence's death was primarily due to double pneumonia. The immediate cause was heart failure. He had taken a severe cold about two weeks ago, and while he did not neglect it he failed to give it the attention that the gravity of the case demanded. The cold settled in both lungs, and within a week pneumonia developed. His condition became alarming on Tuesday, and on Tuesday night he suffered intense agony. It was then thought best to notify his brother, Inspector Conlin. A slight change for the better was noticed yesterday, and by night this was so marked, that hope was revived. The favorable symptoms continued all through the day.

Mrs. Florence, who is in London, and who had arranged to sail for home on Saturday, having been merely appraised of Mr. Florence's illness, was cabled last night the fact of her husband's death. Telegrams announcing the death were also sent to all of Mr. Florence's friends.

No arrangements will be made for the funeral before to-morrow.

Sketch of His Career.

It was at Albany N. Y., in 1831, that William J. Florence first saw light. His right name was Conlin. His earliest propensities were for the stage, and he joined the Murdock Dramatic Association when quite young. He made his debut as Peter in Kotzebue's romantic play of "The Stranger" in the Richmond Hill Theatre, in New York, December 6, 1849. Early in the next year he appeared at Niblo's Garden under the management of Brougham & Chippendale. He next played Macduff to Edwin Booth's Macbeth at Providence, R. I. He attempted Irish comedy with great success at Bingham's Lyceum Theatre, New York.

In 1856 he sailed for Europe with his wife, and in the Drury Lane Theatre, in London, they played a nine weeks' engagement. Mrs. Florence, who is a sister to Mrs. Barney Williams, was known as Mrs. Joseph Little. Her maiden name was Malvina Pray. She was remarkably successful, and three weeks ago Florence signed a contract with Frank L. Goodwin to tour the country with her.

A little more than two years ago Mr. and Mrs. Florence announced their retirement from the stage as joint stars. Mr. Florence concluded then what had been long talked of, the Jefferson-Florence combination, and on Oct. 15, 1889, they made their joint appearance at the New York Star Theatre in "The Rivals," Jefferson taking Bob Acres, Florence Sir Lucius O'Trigger, and Mrs. John Drew realizing Mrs. Malaprop. This was the last season Florence was to remain with this organization.

Mr. Florence was most successful as the Hon. Bardwell Sloat in "The Mighty Dollar," as Bob Brierly in "The Ticket of Leave Man," and as Obenreiser in "No Thoroughfare."

Police Inspector Conlin of New York is a brother-in-law of Mr. Florence. Mr. Florence leaves five brothers and sisters. His stepdaughter, Josephine Shepard, made her debut with Lotta at Daly's Theatre six years ago. She is now married.

Mr. Florence was beloved and respected. He was author of the "Florence Fables," a brochure of stories, and has been engaged writing another book called "A Game of Poker." As a story-teller Mr. Florence probably had no equal. He was of a lovable nature and won for friends all whom he met.

The Yale Eleven Ready.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 20.—Capt. McClung, of the Yale football eleven, had the team in the field yesterday for their last practice. He worked them hard for half an hour, after which he drilled them in all their tricks and signals. Special police surrounded the field and kept a sharp lookout on all passers-by. No one was allowed to get even a birdseye view.

Incendiaries Take Warning.

CORTLAND, N. Y., Nov. 20.—The barns on Newton's farm at Homer were destroyed yesterday by fire, which was probably started by tramps. The loss is $7,500. This is the second incendiary fire in the town inside of two weeks. The farmers are very indignant, and will take measures to prevent any other fires in the near future.

TO HOLD A CONVENTION.

The Confederated Industrial Union Decides to Meet February 22.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Nov. 20.—Yesterday morning was held the most important meeting that has yet occurred in connection with the Alliance conventions. This was the gathering of the Executive Committee of the Confederated Industrial Union, composed of the Farmers' Alliance, the Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association, Knights of Labor, Citizens' Alliance, Patrons of Husbandry, Workingmen's League, and kindred organizations, to consult about calling a convention of all these organizations on February 22.

The committee decided that this convention, looking to unity in legislative demands and political action, shall be held at some point in the Central States.

"This gathering will be the most important that has ever assembled in the United States," said Chairman Terrell of the executive committee. "There will be 18 or 20 organizations represented; it will not be a meeting for political purposes. The union will declare its principles, and then the political party that adopts a platform which conforms most nearly to our declaration of principles will get our votes."

THE CHARGES SUSTAINED.

Mrs. Dodge, of the Helping Hand Mission, Declared Guilty of Several Faults.

BOSTON, Nov. 20.—Mrs. Lizzie A. Dodge, of the Helping Hand Mission, who publicly thrashed Dr. John B. Andrews, a local physician, for alleged slander last summer, has recently been summoned to appear before the Washington Street Baptist Society, of which she is a member, to answer to charges of untruthfulness, profanity and conduct unbecoming a Christian. Mrs. Dodge was not apprised of the identity of her accusers, and she vigorously objected to what, in her opinion, would be an unfair and ex-parte arraignment.

Finally Mrs. Dodge, anticipating an honorable acquittal, was influenced to stand trial. It is now officially learned, however, that the committee of investigation will submit a report which states that the evidence appears to sustain the charges. This report will probably result in Mrs. Dodge's expulsion from the Baptist denomination. Mrs. Dodge's mission for several years past has been to save women on the road to ruin, during which time she accomplished much good.

Boston Home Market Club Banquet.

BOSTON, Nov. 20.—The Home Market Club's banquet in honor of the leaders of legislation at the Hotel Vendome last night was largely attended. Fully five hundred members and guests were present, among them being Gen. W. F. Draper, who presided, Gov.-elect Wm. McKinley of Ohio, Senators Aldrich and Hoar, Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge, Hon. Thos. B. Reed, Hon. A. W. Beard, Hon. Elijah A. Morse, ex-Gov. Alex. H. Rice, ex-Gov. Brackett, Hon. Alden Speare, Postmaster Hart and T. Jefferson Coolidge. Messrs. McKinley and Hoar made addresses.

News of Emin Pacha.

BERLIN, Nov. 20.—News of an authentic character has been received regarding the movements of Emin Pacha. It appears that Emin penetrated to the north of the Albert Edward Nyanza, south of the Albert Nyanza, having strengthened his force by recruiting a number of natives who had been soldiers in the German service. With these he encountered and defeated the Arabs, who were in considerable force in that region, and actively pursuing the slave trade.

Train Robber Arrested.

BARRE, Vt., Nov. 20.—Oliver Curtis Perry was arrested yesterday at Washington upon the charge of having robbed an express car on the New York Central Railroad near Utica, N. Y., on Sept. 30 last. The arrest was made by Detective Hinds of the Pinkerton Agency, who has been tracking Perry for some time, he having secured a clue through the pawning of a watch stolen from the express car. One thousand dollars reward is offered for the conviction of the robber.

Barn and Blooded Stock Burned.

DOUGLASSVILLE, Pa., Nov. 20.—The large barn of Daniel K. Flannery, a mile west of here, was destroyed by fire during the night. Thirty-two head of cattle, many of them registered stock, this year's crops and farming implements were burned. The carriage house, straw sheds and other buildings connected with the barn were also destroyed. Loss, $10,000.

Gov. Hovey Critically Ill.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 20.—Gov. Alvin P. Hovey is dangerously ill with pneumonia. He and his staff left this city three weeks ago on a special train intending to visit Mexico, and he was not due to return here until Nov 30. Sunday night he was taken down with a sudden cold, and has been very ill ever since. It is feared that his condition is very critical.

A Contest for Senator Brice.

YOUNGSTOWN, O., Nov. 20.—Judge King, chairman of the Ohio Republican State Central Committee, will contest Senator Brice's right to represent Ohio in the Senate.

BRINGING IN OPIUM

Sorry State of Affairs Along the Northern Boundary.

REPORT OF THE SPECIAL AGENT.

Seventy Thousand Pounds Smuggled Into This Country in One Year.

Not Enough Officers to Stop the Illicit Traffic—Chinese Crossing the Border by Thousands—Cunning of the Canadian Government—Decisions of the Courts Which Practically Defeat the Chinese Restriction Acts.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 20.—A. K. Tingle, supervising special agent of the Treasury Department, in his annual report to the Secretary of the Treasury, says on the subject of opium smuggling:

"One of the serious questions confronting the department in the exercise of its function of collecting the revenue is the great difficulty under the present conditions in enforcing the laws against smugglers who make the Dominion of Canada the base of their operations.

"There are but four collection districts upon the northern frontier between the Lake of the Woods and the Pacific Ocean, a distance of about 1,100 miles, each district embracing a large territory. The number of officers upon this line of frontier does not exceed 20, and the present customs appropriation will not admit of any material increase of this force.

"Although these officers are active and vigilant, making frequent captures of smuggled goods, it is apparent that their efforts to prevent smuggling are in a large degree futile. A similar condition of affairs exists upon the long boundary line between the United States and Mexico.

"The district of Puget Sound, comprising many islands within a few miles of British territory and a long line of water front, furnishes facilities for smuggling and the clandestine introduction of Chinese, against which the customs officers have vainly contended. The revenue steamer on that station, under its present energetic commander, has done good work in checking smuggling, but this vessel is unfit, on account of her size and want of speed, to render efficient service. It is believed that it will be necessary to employ a number of speedy steam launches to patrol the waters of Puget Sound in order to break up the illicit traffic.

"I am reliably informed that during the last year 125,000 pounds of crude opium were imported at Victoria, making about 70,000 pounds of the prepared article for smoking purposes, and that nearly every pound of it was smuggled into the United States. It is more profitable to take the risk of an occasional capture and confiscation than to pay the duty of $12 per pound, which is prohibitive of legitimate importations and is the essential basis of the smugglers' profit.

"But the smuggling of opium is not the only alarming consequence following the opening up of the railways through Manitoba and British Columbia. The various acts of Congress having for their object the exclusion of Chinese laborers from the United States are practically nullified by the clandestine introduction of Chinese coming direct from China through the Dominion of Canada. The steamers of the Canadian Pacific Railroad Company land Chinese at Vancouver by thousands. The Canadian government collects a head tax of $50 upon each Chinese person and gives a certificate which enables him to return to Canada without payment a second time, should he be detected in entering the United States."

"The law provides that any Chinese person found unlawfully within the United States shall be caused to be removed therefrom to the country whence he came, at the cost of the United States, after being brought before some justice, judge or commissioner of a court of the United States, and found to be one not entitled to remain in the United States. Inasmuch as nine-tenths of the Chinamen caught within our lines near the Canadian border come direct from China, although they enter by way of Canada, they have been treated, so far as this department is concerned, and in accordance with the views of the Attorney-General, as liable to deportation to China as the country whence they came.

"The act of September 13, 1886, which by its terms would seem to be operative until the exchange of ratifications of the then pending treaty between the United States and China (which was never ratified) contains certain provisions for an appeal from the decision of the commissioner in these cases to the courts. Such appeals have been entertained by the courts, and in several cases they have given the statute another construction from that of the head of this department and of the Attorney-General by deciding that Canada, and not China, was the country whence these Chinamen came, within the meaning of the law. The effect of this is that Chinese persons once returned to Canada again enter the country, and repeated instances of this kind have occurred. Thus the object of the Chinese restriction acts is practically defeated.

Death of Hon. I. R. Diller.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 20.—Isaac R. Diller, ex-United States Consul at Florence, died here yesterday from a complication of diseases. He was 72 years old and was born in this State, but for many years has resided in Chicago. He was appointed by President Buchanan, in 1858, Consul at Florence, and held that position for several years. In 1885 he was reappointed to the same office by President Cleveland, and remained there until a few weeks ago, when he was relieved.

MORE WAR RUMORS.

Doings of the Russian and Austrian Governments Cause Alarm.

VIENNA, Nov. 20.—The newspapers of the Continent are bristling with alarmist rumors, dark refefences and sensational intimations.

Prominent among these is the report, said to be well founded, that the Russian government has ordered a reinforcement of 40,000 troops to be dispatched to the frontier and that orders have been issued largely to increase the barrack accommodations at various points along the Russian frontier generally.

Coupled with this announcement is the report, believed to be correct, that the Austrian government, in addition to the reinforcements recently sent to the Galician frontier, has ordered a large body of troops to be dispatched to strengthen the frontier guards.

Tacked on to these significant statements is the fact that the German War Office has ordered a large number of portable tents to be manufactured for the use of the Eastern Army Corps, with the view, it is openly stated, of sheltering the German troops from the inclemency of the weather in the event of war this winter with Russia.

Additional barrack room is also being provided in many towns along the Russo-German frontier, and several cavalry corps have been strengthened in the military districts which would have to bear the first onslaughts of the Russian armies.

It is the general opinion that the Czar and his advisers are being driven to desperation on account of the famine troubles, internal political difficulties and financial complications brought to an acute stage by the recent failure to float the new Russian loan. That war would be a positive relief from these complications seems to be gaining ground rapidly, and may be the cause of the present uneasy feeling.

"The Russian Minister of War is said to have suddenly abandoned the project of purchasing new smokeless powder small calibre rifles in France and to have ordered the government ammunition factories to work night and day at the task, on hand for some time past, of filling old Berdan cartridges with smokeless powder.

Many veteran regiments are being transferred from Finland to the Austrian frontier, while the recruits alone are being sent to the Baltic provinces.

A DELUDED LOVER.

His Sweetheart Was a Wife When He Sent Her Money to Come to Him.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Nov. 20.—D. H. McIver, of Goodwin, Washington, is in a perturbed state of mind over the loss of $67 and his sweetheart, Mrs. William Kelly, nee McClure. Several months ago Miss McClure came here to visit relatives. She is a sister-in-law of McIver. She claims that some months ago McIver put up a job to abduct and marry her. Since she has been here she has received many letters from him, several of which contained money.

Last spring McIver claims in a letter sent to the Chief of Police, Miss McClure wrote him that she was ill, had no one to support her but an aunt. He sent her some money. Then she wrote him that she would come West, but did not have the money. He sent her a draft for $67 and that is the last he has heard from her. He requested her arrest, but as no warrant has been sworn out she will not be molested.

In January last Miss McClure married William Kelly of this city. Mrs. Kelly claims that the money, with the exception of the $67, was given to her. She expected to pay him as soon as possible. McIver has been notified of her whereabout, and it is probable that there will be some interesting developments.

An Actress Badly Hurt.

COHOES, N. Y., Nov. 20.—Mary Osborne, second leading lady of the "Nioba" Company, playing here, while crossing the tracks of the Delaware & Hudson Canal Company at 7 o'clock last evening was struck by a passenger train and thrown twenty feet to one side of the track. She was picked up and taken to the Miller House where it was found that she had had three ribs broken and received a severe scalp wound and internal injuries. Dr. Mitchell, who is attending her, says she will recover.

The Dead Faster Stratton.

CORTLAND, N. Y., Nov. 20.—News of the death of Faster Stratton in New York city reached here just as arrangements had been completed for giving him a rousing reception on his return. Stratton was employed as cook in the Messenger House and was unmarried. He had an eccentric fancy for curiosities, of which he had a large and valuable collection, which is still here. Stratton had no relations here, as far as known, and no arrangements have yet been made for the disposition of the body, which, it is thought, will be sent here.

Wheat Speculators Caught.

CHICAGO, Nov. 20.—Board of Trade men have lost heavily by a rise in the wheat market, caused by a forged telegram purporting to come from Charles Emory Smith, American Minister at St. Petersburg, stating that the Czar had issued a ukase prohibiting the exportation of the cereal. The directors will make a thorough investigation.

THE BRUTAL NIPSH MURDER.

Butcher Keck Ate Dinner With the Aged Couple Before the Shooting.

The Old Man Was Battered With an Axe and a Club—The Murderer Then Robbed the House, but Found Only Six Dollars—His Narrow Escape from Mob Violence—The Excitement Intense.

IRONTON, Pa., Nov. 20.—The brutal double murder of Jeannette Nipsh, and her husband, William, at Smokestown, near here, is the great and only theme of discussion. William Keck, the murder, is in jail at Allentown.

The aged couple lived in an old one story log cabin in an isolated part of the county. Keck, who had been on terms of intimate friendship with the old folks, went to their house Wednesday. He had with him a double barrelled shotgun and he said he had been gunning.

He was asked to remain for dinner, and did so. So far as is known there was no trouble between him and the old folks, and robbery seems to be the only motive for the crime. The story of the shooting is told by the husband, who, although mortally wounded, crawled on his hands and fees to the house of Henry Druckenmiller, who lives about a hundred yards away, and notified them of the tragedy.

After dinner, he said, Keck went to the corner of the kitchen where his gun was standing, and took up the weapon. Nipsh was sitting at the window looking at the chickens. Keck deliberately fired at him, the charge taking effect in the old man's back, near the right shoulder, felling him to the floor. Mrs. Nipsh went to her husband's assistance, but was hurled aside by Keck, who then went out to the wood pile, seized an axe, and returning struck Nipsh on the back of the head.

The old man tried to defend himself by holding up his hands, whereupon Keck, picked up a heavy piece of kindling wood and struck his victim a terrific blow across the head, making him insensible.

Mrs. Nipsh had run out to give an alarm. Keck followed and caught her, dragged her back into the house and threw her upon the floor. Picking up his gun, he shot her, the load taking effect in the back of her head, crashing through the skull and penetrating the brain.

Supposing that he had effectually disposed of his aged victims Keck went into the bedroom and from the top drawer of the bureau took all the money the aged couple possessed. It was about $6, mainly in silver. He then left.

It was two hours after the murder when Nipsh reached Druckenmiller's home. A party went to Nipsh's house and found Keck there. He had returned to see the result of his work. He was put under arrest, and under a guard was kept in the house until policemen from the city should arrive.

In the evening a hundred men entered the house and took Keck out, intending to hang him to the nearest tree. They were dissuaded, however, by Mrs. Joseph Masonheimer, a daughter of his victims, who besought them not to wreak their vengeance upon the murderer, but to let the law punish him.

Nipsh is not expected to live the day out. Squire Kelcner took his ante-mortem statement last night and it was presented to the coroner's jury. Charles Lebach testified that shortly after the murder Keck bought coal from him and in payment gave him silver, which, it is believed, he stole from Mr. Nipsh's house.

Keck says he is innocent, but refuses to give any explanation of his movements. He is 50 years old, has a wife, from whom he is separated, and a daughter. He served six months in Easton jail for threatening to kill his family. He served in the 81st and 47th regiments during the war.

Hawaii May Have a Revolution.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 20.—Mr. Celso Cæsar Moreno, of Washington, the American agent of the National party of Hawaii, is here on his way to try to find out from Secretary Blaine what attitude the United States would assume if Hawaii should become a republic. The Secretary will be asked to keep his hands off the domestic affairs of the Hawaiians and not to permit ships of the United States navy to interfere.

Griffin won the Fight.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 20.—The fight at the Olympic Athletic Club last night between Johnnie Griffin of Braintree, Mass., and James Larkin of Jersey City, N. J., for $2,000, was won by Griffin in the fourth round.

NEW JERSEY JOTTINGS.

Francis L. Tembroeck has been elected President of the Young Men's Republican club of Monmouth County.

Two Poles who were crossing the Pennsylvania Railroad tracks at Elizabeth yesterday were struck by an express and killed.

Three new cases of smallpox were discovered yesterday in the Italian quarter at Newark, making seven cases so far reported.

Eugene Lippencott, a church organist at Camden, was convicted yesterday of enticing little girls into his candy store for an immoral purpose and fined.

The Glen Gardner White Caps, accused of having tarred and feathered Julia Beam of that place, were yesterday held for trial after a preliminary hearing.

ALMY TOLD OF HIS FATE.

Much Affected When the Death Sentence Was Read—Scene at His Removal.

CONCORD, N. H., Nov. 20.—This morning, Frank H. Almy, the murderer of Christie Warden, who has been kept in ignorance of his fate until the official notice of his sentence came from Plymouth, was informed that the Judge had sentenced him to be hanged on the first Tuesday in December, 1892.

Almy was visibly affected when told the news, but manifested more composure than was thought likely, when his abject manner on the witness stand is considered.

Several hundred people gathered at the station when the train with Almy arrived from Plymouth. The prisoner was obliged to walk on his crutches from the cars to a barge in which he was to be conveyed to the prison, a distance of several rods. He walked with difficulty and had to stop two or three times and rest. He was surrounded by the police. As he approached the barge, cries of "Hang him," "String him up with a rope" and "Lynch him" were heard. After he got into the barge a fur coat was placed about his shoulders and the barge was driven to the prison.

The party was received at the prison by the warden and deputy and escorted to the room for the reception of prisoners. The usual questions from which the prison record is made were propounded and quickly answered by Almy. He was assigned to one of the murderers' cells. His nearest neighbor is Sawtelle, who is soon to be executed for killing his brother Hiram.

The Fight Didn't Come Off.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 20.—The Sullivan-Connolly fight, which was to have taken place in Dyer's Opera House last evening, did not come off, owing to the proprietor of the opera house refusing to allow the use of his premises. The Rhode Island Athletic Club had a lease of this hall for the fight. The club management are now hustling around to see if they cannot rent some other hall, and have their fight. Large amounts have been offered to the proprietors of halls for the privilege, but none have accepted as yet.

Street Railway Plant Damaged.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Nov. 20.—Fire badly damaged the Springfield Street Railway's plant last evening. The loss to the building is about $10,000, covered by insurance. The loss to tenants of the block will bring the total up to $13,000. The tenants had no insurance on their household goods and saved but few of their effects. The fire started from combustion in the oil room in the basement.

Threats Against a Mayor.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 20.—Upon the pleas that Mayor Wyman, of Allegheny, has been indulging in race persecution of Hungarians in that city under the pretext of raiding alleged disorderly boarding-houses, Max Schamberg, Consul from Austria-Hungary to Pittsburg, threatens to make an international example of the Mayor.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The cruiser San Francisco has arrived at San Francisco.

A straw paper trust has been formed on the Pacific Coast.

Influenza in a severe form has reappeared in Southwestern France.

The business portion of Edgerton, Mo., has been destroyed by fire. Loss, $50,000.

President Harrison returned to Washington from his Maryland shooting trip yesterday.

President Harrison is said to prefer Omaha as the place for holding the Republican National Convention.

Rev. Dr. Julius E. Grammer, for 28 years rector of St. Peter's Protestant Episcopal Church, Baltimore, resigned on account of ill health.

The steamer Elder, for which fears have been entertained, arrived safely at Northampton yesterday. Broken machinery was responsible for the delay.

Gov. Jackson, of Maryland, has appointed ex-Congressman Gibson to the vacancy in the United States Senate caused by the death of Senator Wilson.

Weather Indications.

—The wild African races, the cannibals, pigmies, fierce warriors, native hunters, are all fully described in "The Story of Man". From Africa the scene shifts to Asia, whose people may be ranked among the most interesting specimens of the human race. The wild hordes of Tartary, the little-known tribes of Thibet, the savage clans in Siberia, the glories of the ancient Assyrians, are all told about in that great book, a copy of which will be shown as announced in the advertisement in another column.

Trinity's Successful Tea.

A complete success, both socially and financially, was the tea given by the Ladies' Christian Work society of the Trinity Reformed church last evening, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Tier, Bank place. The attendance was larger than at any previous tea of the society. The house was thronged. A delicious supper, including Tier's famous ice-cream, was served. Vocal and instrumental music was provided, and hearty sociability prevailed. Mr. and Mrs. Tier received many congratulations on the success of the affair.

"ESMERALDA."

Admirable Performance of Mrs. Burnett's Play, by Clever Plainfield Amateurs.

SUPREME SUCCESS was the verdict given by the audience last evening concerning the production of "Esmeralda" by the Union County Country club. The Casino was filled to overflowing with representative people, who greatly enjoyed the amateur theatrical performance.

Mrs. Burnett's four-act play was the most ambitious that Plainfield talent had ever yet attempted, but the participants made a fine showing of their capabilities, and the histrionic triumph was complete.

The story of "Esmeralda" is not an intricate one. Old Man Rogers, his wife Lydia Ann, and their daughter Esmeralda, are found living on a North Carolina farm, which Mrs. Rogers, wearied of her life of drudgery, sells in partnership to George Drew, a scheming speculator in mining lands, who sees promise of much wealth from a vein of ore on the place. With the proceeds of the sale, Mrs Rogers takes the family to Paris, and runs them through a season of fashionable gaiety She is about to wed the unhappy Esmeralda to the fraudulent Marquis de Montessin when it transpires that the vein of ore on the farm is valueless, but that one of great wealth has developed on the farm of Dave Hardy, Esmeralda's true lover, adjoining the Rogers farm. Then Dave comes forward and takes the willing girl back to the little house he had built for her in former happy sweetheart days, and shares his plenty with the old man and the tamed virago, his mother-in-law. But if the plot is simple, the text is a charming blending of pathos and comedy, and dramatic incidents and opportunities for clever acting abound.

As had been predicted in these columns, Mrs. William L. Saunders proved herself a star in the title role. Her interpretation of the part was a most charming, unaffected and brilliant piece of acting—a genuine revelation. She made a lovely and winsome "Mountain Flower", and adapted herself to the difficulties of her part very daintily and artistically. There was a depth and sincerity of feeling in her acting that brought her admiring audience up to a pitch of enthusiasm.

The part of Lydia Ann Rogers, or "Mother", as the Old Man deferentially called her, afforded Miss Maude Agnes Bowers abundant opportunity for strong acting, and as usual Miss Bowers was received with marked favor. Her display of ability won sincere plaudits. She was at her best, and both she and Mrs. Saunders received many beautiful floral tributes.

William Pelletier did well in the character of Dave Hardy, the sturdy young mountaineer who all along loved Esmeralda, and who finally won her after much patient forbearance, self-sacrifice, and noble devotion. In the stirring emotional scenes in which he was prominent he ably demonstrated his powers.

Paul Estabrook, the artist, and easy-going, philosophical man of the world, was skillfully impersonated by William T. Kaufman. He acted his part excellently, and his love-making with Nora Desmond was one of the most natural and enjoyable of the side-issues of the play.

Without W. R. Cock, a play by Plainfield amateurs would be incomplete; and in the character of Old Man Rogers, the old-fashioned farmer, he was exquisitely funny and original. His benign simplicity and quaint mannerisms were greatly relished. His make-up was very clever, and he was in every way the star of the comedy element.

Mrs. J. Parker Mason, as Nora Desmond, the "flirtatious" and charming young painter of panels, infused a delightful flavor into the play; and Miss Maude Van Boskerck as Kate Desmond, the no less fascinating young painter of china, had many lovers in the audience though none scheduled in the list of characters in the play. Both of the Desmond sisters acted with much ingenuousness and animation.

William T. Pelletier, as George Drew, the scheming speculator, acted well his part; and Henry S. Blake of New York, who was "coach" for the company during their rehearsals, made a satisfactory villain as Marquis de Montessin, the adventurer and fortune-hunter, whose schemes were foiled as is usual on the stage.

Nanette, Miss Annie Corlies, was a rare Parisian, and the fleeting glimpses the the audience had of her made them eager to see her in a more important role.

The stage settings, light effects, and other mechanical devices, were very fine. The credit of designing and preparing the stage settings is due to J. Parker Mason, and Charles J. Fisk furnished the properties. The conservatory scene in the third act, when the stage was filled with a profusion of potted plants and palms, was especially beautiful. It was a treat to a Plainfield audience to hear good orchestral music. The guiding hand of William L. Saunders was visible in the stage arrangements. The most realistic bit of acting of the evening was when Hardy hurled Drew aside with such violence as to cause him to shed his wig.

The general effect of the performance on the audience was one of great enjoyment and satisfaction. The merit of the story and the excellence of the acting took firm hold of the people, and at times wrought materially upon their affections.

In the most real and pathetic passages some of the gentler sex were moved to tears.

EACH TEAM WON.

The Games Ran Very Close, and the Margins of Victory Were Small.

Two interesting bowling contests took place last night on the Crescent League alleys. Both games were very close, and in each the contestants tied towards the end. The first was won by the Crescents, and the second by the visitors from Somerville. James K. Arnold was referee. The scores:

"The Ideal Church". Such will be the theme of Dr. Lewis's sermon at the Seventh Day Baptist church, at 10:30 a. m., to-morrow. You will be welcomed.

The artists of the Manhattan building, 96 Fifth avenue, New York, of whom George Wharton Edwards of this city is one, will hold their opening reception to-morrow from two until six, and from eight until ten o'clock p. m.

The Catholic Young Men's Lyceum will open the new club-house Dec. 16, when a fine entertainment will be provided. Gov. Abbett will attend. The speaker of the evening will be the Hon. W. B. Gourley, prosecutor of Passaic county.

Beautiful Home Nuptials.

Standing in a bay window that was solidly banked with chrysanthemums from floor to ceiling, Miss Mary Brooks and Edward Cooley, of this city, were married last evening by the Rev. Cornelius Schenck, pastor of Trinity Reformed church. The bride is the daughter of John Brooks, head of the extensive works of the Potter printing machine company. The groom is connected with the large silk house of Burton, Price & Co., of New York. The ceremony took place at Mr. Brooks's home, 87 Broadway.

The entire house was profusely decorated with chrysanthemums in all colors and of all varieties. The guests included the members of both families and a number of friends from this city, New York, Brooklyn and elsewhere. H. Clifford VanEmburgh, a cousin of the groom, acted as best man and was untiring and most successful in his efforts to provide for the comfort and gratification of all.

After the ceremony supper was served, and the happy couple started on their wedding tour which will include a trip through some of the Southren States. The presents were many and costly. Upon their return, Mr. and Mrs. Cooley will reside in this city.

They Divided the Cake.

Celestial Crescent lodge of Good Samaritans and Daughters of Samaria, had a festival and cake walk at Reform Hall, last evening. The judges were Charles Barber, Bud Harvey and Jack Harris.

Miss Aretta Garretson, the buxom chef of the City hotel, with her partner, Alexander Cuff, took the cake. But Miss Annie Burley and Cy Binn, however, were also particularly stylish in their walk, so the cake was divided and the first half was awarded as first prize to Aretta and Alex, and the second half as second prize to Annie and Cy.

A Card.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—A greatly exaggerated account of yesterday's runaway accident appears in the Tribune, this morning. It is true that we were all thrown out and the carriage was completely wrecked; but neither Mr. MacDonald nor I received a scratch, while Mr. Shotwell was only slightly injured. He walks with a cane this morning. That the result was not more serious seems almost miraculous.

NELSON RUNYON.

Nov. 20, 1891.

Found Dead in Bed.

John Lane of Greenbrook was found dead in his bed, of heart failure, yesterday morning. He had resided in the house where he died, for the past 40 years, and was well known in this vicinity

THE WAGON TURNED A SOMERSAULT.

But Luckily None of Its Three Occupants Was Injured.

J. F. MacDonald, William H. Shotwell and Nelson Runyon had an unpleasant accident, at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. They were out driving, looking after some property belonging to the Latimer estate, on South avenue, near the Netherwood station. They had just reached the top of the hill leading to Westfield when the neck-yoke broke, letting the wagon-pole fall to the ground. The gentle but spirited team of Hambletonians were crowded down hill by the wagon, at rapid speed; and Mr. MacDonald, who was driving, to avoid a runaway ran the team into a ten-acre field alongside the road. The pole struck an obstruction on the ground, and the wagon and its occupants were thrown in a complete somersault through the air. The team broke loose from the wreck, ran about the field, and started out of it for the roadway. Mr. MacDonald made a grab for the trailing reins, but missed them. The horses ran against a telephone pole and were captured unhurt. Mr. Shotwell was the only one of the party injured, and he only slightly. He was indignant to find in the New York World and Sun this morning the statement that he was fatally hurt. The only one who supposed so was the imaginative scribe who sent the exaggerated despatch. The wagon was a most unsightly wreck.

Hope Chapel Hears the Phonograph.

A delightful entertainment was given to the members of Hope chapel and their friends last evening. The chapel was crowded to overflowing. The programme included vocal and instrumental music, and then Mr. Munger introduced Ernest Marx, who kept the audience in laughter with his phonograph. After the entertainment, coffee and cake were served to all present.

Successful Surgery.

Councilman Seymour G. Smith had a painful operation performed on his right hand by a New York physician yesterday, whereby about an inch of bone was removed from the back of the injured member. Mr. Smith will be confined to his home for some days in consequence of the operation, which was a successful one.

"A GOD SEND is Ely's Cream Balm. I had catarrh for three years. Two or three times a week my nose would bleed. I thought the sores would never heal. Your Balm has cured me."—Mrs. M. A. Jackson, Portsmouth, N. H.

I was so much troubled with catarrh it seriously affected my voice. One bottle of Ely's Cream Balm did the work. My voice is fully restored.—B. F. Liesener, A. M., pastor of the Olivet Baptist Church, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Shareholders are Excited.

GREENFIELD, Mass., Nov. 20.—Much excitement prevails among the shareholders of the Order of the Rising Sun in Florence, Athol, Orange, Northampton, South Deerfield, Brattleboro and other points over the disappearance from Lowell of Treasurer Smith. Most of the interest in the Order in these places was about two thirds paid.

The Gloucester Track to Close.

CAMDEN, N. J., Nov. 20.—President Thompson of the South Jersey Jockey Club, announces that he will close the race track at Gloucester on the 28th inst. This action is taken owing to the recent decision of the New Jersey Court of Errors and Appeals in the Passaic County case.

Fears for a General Strike.

SHAWNEE, O., Nov. 20.—The miners at the Standard Mines at Saltillo have struck because the demand for an advance of five cents per ton was refused. It is feared that all the miners on the Columbus & Hocking Railroad will strike. About 700 men are now out.

Double Scull Race Arranged.

TORONTO, Ont., Nov. 20.—A double scull race of three miles with a turn, was arranged last night between Teemer, Hosmer, O'Connor and Hanlan. The stakes will be $1,000 a side, and the race will take place the latter part of next May or the first part of June at some place to be decided on later.

Driver and Passenger Killed.

BUFFALO, Nov. 20.—A 'bus containing two passengers besides the driver, was struck by the West Shore passenger train at the Seneca Street crossing about 7 o'clock last night. The driver was instantly killed and one of the passengers fatally injured.

Four Years for Manslaughter.

WILMINGTON, Del., Nov. 20.—Howard Cooling, who killed his wife on Sept. 20, by striking her on the head with a mustard bottle, and who pleaded guilty to manslaughter, was sentenced to four years imprisonment.

A TRIP TO JAPAN.

Mr. Newman, of Orange, Tells His Impressions of That Country.

N the Y. M. C. A. rooms, last evening, Geo. A. Newman, of Orange, described a trip to Japan in an interesting and instructive manner. He spoke in part as follows: I am very glad to be with you to-night, and I will try to take you with me over some parts of Japan and also tell you of some of the things I saw there. It would be very hard indeed in half or three-quarters of an hour, or in fact an evening, to take you over about 18,000 miles of travel from the time I left my home until my return. I will simply start from San Francisco. We reached there on the 7th of July, 1890. The next day was the hottest day of the year—at least it was on the Pacific coast. We left in the afternoon at 3 o'clock on that day taking the good ship Rio de Janeiro for a journey of five thousand miles by water.

We arrived at Yokahama, which is the port of entry, on the 26th of July, sometime during the night, and when we awoke in the morning we found ourselves about a mile out from the city. Vessels cannot go up to the city of Yokahama because the water is not deep enough. They must anchor about a mile from the city. When I had dressed I went on deck. All around were Japanese boats ready to transport the passengers to the shore, and I think I am safe when I say I saw a thousand Japanese men and boys almost naked with just a strip of cloth about the loins. I don't think I ever felt more lonesome in my life. Presently, however, one of the officers came to me and said: "Mr. Newman I think there is a gentleman on the other side who wants to see you." I was very glad to find it was my friend John F. Swift, whom some of you no doubt know.

We then went ashore; and I would like to have you all see the city of Yokahama, for it resembles very much the approach to our Battery in New York. There is a large stone wall very much like the Battery, though the workmanship is not quite as fine and finished. The Custom House is the first you run into. A little nephew whom I have there—he was born in Yokahama—who rattles off Japanese faster than I can talk English, got us through the Japanese Custom House very easily indeed. He jabbered off something to the officers and away we went. The jinrikishas, a carriage drawn only by men, is the mode of traveling in Japan, and of course it was a very strange sight. There were five in our party and we had five jinrikishas. We got into these, one in each, and I assure you I never felt so foolish in my life. I thought everybody was looking at me and laughing at me. But I saw that everybody else was riding just as I was, and I rode a great many miles after that in these same vehicles. These jinrikisha men are wonderful runners. I want to speak of it now before I forget it. I think there are very few men that can equal them. One of the missionaries told me that on one occasion he wanted to go sixty miles. He started in the morning and two of these men took him over the country, sixty miles in one day and got him to his place of destination before bedtime. It sounds like a big story. It was told me by the missionary himself, and I do not suppose he told an untruth.

Mr Newman then spoke of the cosmopolitan character of the city's population. He said that the foreigners—that is the English, German, Scotch and Americans—led a pretty fast club life and although there are a good many good Christians there, the life of the average foreigner is not what it should be. He spoke about the magnificent stores there. He said he found in Yokahama street cars built by John Stevenson & Co., and conductors and drivers as we have them, though of course they were dressed a little differently; and there are electric lights and telegraph wires all over the city. He said Japan had a postal system that is equal to if not better than that of any other country.

A Fable—Picked Up in Plainfield.

A ragged man was walking along the highway one scorching Sunday morning. His tongue clave to the roof of his mouth. "Water, water everywhere", he murmured, "but not a drop of whiskey!" At length he reached a town, and pulling out the only nickle that remained from his last night's debauch, he eyed the various saloons as he passed them by. The blinds were up and the bars in full view, but alas! the doors were locked.

"So near and yet so far", continued he, in philosophic manner; when suddenly on turning a corner, he stumbled against a door that opened into a cellar. To his astonishment he beheld an apartment full of spirits kindred in every way to his desire, and so generously was he treated that it was far into the eventide before he had expended his fifth penny.

Moral—You may keep full of spirits even in prohibition hours.

Shiloh's Cough Cure

This is beyond question the most successful Cough Medicine we have ever sold; a few doses invariably cure the worst cases of Cough, Croup and Bronchitis, while its wonderful success in the cure of Consumption is without a parallel in the history of medicine. Since its first discovery it has been sold on a guarantee, a test which no other medicine can stand. If you have a cough we earnestly ask you to try it. Price 10c., 50c. and $1. If your lungs are sore, chest, or back lame, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by J. G. Miller, No. 10 East Front street, Plainfield N.J.

A COUNTRY PARTY.

Amusing and Instructive Description of Rural Bliss, by One Who Has Been There.

To dwellers in large cities who are socially inclined and who occupy a leading position in the swell set, the delights and pleasures of their country cousins in enjoying a country dance are unknown factors. They have among themselves their own rules of politeness governing such affairs, and the rural fashion is so utterly different from what the city people are used to that a city man at a country party would be at loss to know what to do. Dress suits, one might say, are unknown quantities, while decollete gowns are positively eschewed. Take, for instance, the manner in which a party is got up in the country.

The arrangements are probably made on some Sunday evening, when two or more "couples" are "sitting up" with one another. Two country boys are calling on their "best girls". Perhaps the girls are sisters; anyway, two of the girls manage to be together Sunday nights, and two boys call to "spark" them according to the peculiar rules of country etiquette.

After a few minutes' conversation about the weather and the crops, by mutual agreement the young folks separate each girl and her "feller" taking distant corners, or different rooms, to interchange their sweet, blissful views and hopes. Sometimes it happens that from force of circumstance one twain or the other is compelled to take the kitchen, but that makes no difference: as long as there is an old-fashioned lounge in the room both the young people are satisfied. It is cold weather—regular dancing weather; and perchance during the flow of loving words the subject is brought up of why not have a party at Mr. Cornstalk's during the next two weeks? The couple in the other room are consulted, they agree, and the fellows at once appoint themselves a committee to get the party up. As it is now late, the young men leave with the understanding that they shall call on Mr. Cornstalk the following night and get his permission. This they do, and get his consent to his house being used, he well knowing that it will cost him nothing except loss of sleep and that at the same time he can pay all of his social indebtedness to his friends. So far, so good. The next thing is to invite all the lads and lasses from miles around, so sometime during the same week one of the boys "hitches up" his horse and goes to the nearest printing office and leaves an order for a large number of cards. He looks at a great many samples and finally selects one, gay in color, and resplendent with vines, ferns, and flowers. The gaudier it is in appearance, the better it suits Mr. Countryman. He seems to think the success of the party depends largely on the effect of the invitation. These he sends to everyone he can think of in the whole country around, and thinking that if half of those asked accept he and his partner will line their pockets with enough of the mighty dollars to see them through the social festivities of at least one winter. This is one way the farmer lad has of paying for his dancing pastime. He never thinks of taking any of the hay money. That would n't do. The night of the dance approaches. For the last week the maidens' hearts have been in a flutter. Only the Sunday night previous each maiden's "feller" has asked permission to take her in his own buggy, and she has granted the favor willingly, to be sure, because if her own man does not take her she will remain at home. And so she has searched through all of the old boxes in the garret, and hauled over all of her old dresses, to find something suitable to wear. She must look well—as well, at least, as the other girls, and she knows that as in cities each feminine heart is full of hope that she will look the best.

Finally the night of the party arrives, and for the time being let us imagine that it is a bright moonlight. The invitation has said: Dancing at 8 o'clock. "Genta" assessed, and "Ladies" furnish. After supper John [perhaps that's his name] goes up and puts on his best Sunday suit. And it would be well right here to describe one of the ways that I have seen a countryman dressed for a dance of this kind. He wears a "boiled" shirt, but no cuffs; they are in the way, and only a useless extravagance. A celluloid collar encircles his neck, with a small satin bow for a cravat. Any pair of dark trousers will answer; they may be a little short at the bottom—but no matter. Cowhide boots, with an inch coating of grease, cover his feet. A sack coat, and a low cut vest displaying a great deal of shirt front, in the centre of which sparkles an uncut gem of purest plate glass, complete this unusual make-up; and Mr. Buckwheat is ready for the affray. To follow him now as he leaves home with his horse and buggy for the home of his girl, is now my intention. If there is one thing he is proud of in this world, it is his turn-out. It is of the best; and as he drives towards the object of his affections, he occasionally cracks his whip, upon the end of which is a bow of ribbon (his "girl's" favorite colors). He is deeply meditating upon the time when he can get "hitched up" to the afore-mentioned fair one, and find a farm to work on shares. Thus pondering, he drives up to his adorers domicile, to find that she is waiting all dressed, and deeply offended that he should be a few minutes late, as the invite says, "Dancing at 8 o'clock". It is now that time, and they have two miles to drive. This is certainly a breach of country etiquette, because all are supposed to be on hand at 8 sharp. There is no coming late at these affairs, where they name the hour; it is discourteous to come later; come as early as you please but not later. When they at last reach the scene of festivity, they find that the affair has been in full swing for at least an hour, and as they enter the front door they find a set in the hall and are compelled to dodge among the dancers to reach the upper rooms, where they remove their wraps, all the time feeling that they are the cynosure of all eyes for arriving so late.

By the time they come down stairs and mingle with the throng, speaking to this one and that one, the dance has been finished, and the rooms are all quiet again. The girls and boys sit around waiting for the music to start up again. The music is usually a fiddle and a banjo. Never a piano; such a thing is not to be had in farmer's houses. The organ holds supreme sway, not because of its cheapness, as many suppose, but because of the religious fervor which all of the farmers possess. As the night wanes, and 12 o'clock approaches, supper is served — and such a supper! The countrymen may be slow in many things, but certainly not in the eating line. He provides a plenty, and good enough for a king. Oysters, cold meats, salads, sandwiches, coffee, cake, fruit and ice-cream—all are there. And how they do eat! The exercise of dancing has done its work, and the lads and lasses, as well as the elder people, do full justice to the spread. Supper finished, the men all rush up stairs. They know what is coming. The committee do not ask pay in advance, but are willing to receive their pay when the party is half over. So when the men reach the coat room, for the time being, they go down into their pockets and bring up whatever assessment the committee have seen fit to put upon them. If a great many are there, fifty cents is usually the amount; but it is oftener one dollar—surely enough to pay for the music and leave a good bonus beside. Then the men smoke—and such cigars!—always cigars of the vilest kind; they can't be beat; well, perhaps cabbage is used instead: but anyhow the odor is enough to drive the lover of a good cigar almost to distraction.

All this time the "women folks" are down stairs killing time as best they may, and awaiting the pleasure of their liege lords. By ones and twos they drift back into the different rooms, and again the dance is in progress—to last until the early morning hours.

Many of the old-time customs are drifting into decay, such as throwing the arms around the girl when the call "balance corners" is made.

The man who calls off is usually a character, in his way—big, strong, deep-voiced, to stand the strain. He generally bawls out in the same sing-song way the whole night through.

When, with the approach of the early morning hours, the dance breaks up, everyone goes home congratulating himself on the good time he has had, and each wondering when the next dance will be held.

Thus is one of the social enjoyments of country life. While there may not be quite the form and style about them that there is about some of the town affairs, still who can doubt that all do thoroughly enjoy themselves?

The Story of the New Play at Proctor's Theater.

The Lost Paradise, which received its initial performance at Proctor's theater, New York, last Monday evening, is one of those cleverly constructed dramatic productions which appeal to every passion of the human feeling and holds the interest of the auditor enthralled until the last line of the play has been spoken. It deals with the problem of labor and capital and the characters representing both sides of the much mooted question are brought into contact during the action of the play in a manner that not only shows consummate skill on the part of the author but gives a play of unusual exciting interest.

Reuben Warner, a young man of social position by birth and by breeding but of an inventive inclination, to further his opportunities of researches has taken the position of superintendent in the Knowlton Iron Works, which are located near Boston. By daily association with them, he becomes interested in the troubles of the workmen of the country and more particularly in those of the men directly under him. From time to time, their grievances have been made known and righted by reason of his counsel and in this way he has frequently been called to confer with the owner of the works, Andrew Knowlton, at his residence, where he has often met his employer's daughter Margaret. Unconsciously he has learned to love her and she as fully unconsciously has encouraged him to consider her more than ordinarily interested in his welfare. On one occasion he speaks of his love and asks her to become his wife, declaring that his sole incentive for the study and work he has been pursuing for some years past was because of the encouragement he had received from her smiles, and of an ambition to make himself worthy of her love.

She rejects his advances and dignifiedly reminds him of the disparity in their social positions, and of the fact of his being a workman in her father's employ. She then engages herself in marriage to Ralph Standish who becomes a partner of Knowlton, and who succeeds him in the management of the business. Standish being of an impulsive nature and inexperienced in business affairs, is not long in causing a "strike" to be made, by refusing to consider the demands of the men at the works. Warner pleads harde for his men, but Standish is inexorable, and the act ends by the stopping of all the massive machinery and the quitting work of all the employes, Warner going out with them. This scene was a most powerful and impressive one, and its perfect enactment was rewarded by storms of long continued applause.

In the last act, Warner's counsel prevailing, the men return to work. Standish accuses him of dishonesty and of destroying papers belonging to another, which being denied, necessitates an explanation when it is discovered that the papers destroyed were proofs of Warner's ownership of some valuable patents used in the works, and which have hitherto been supposed to belong to Margaret's father.

When she learns of the sacrifice he has made for, and of what he has endured from Standish's unjust treatment, she dismisses the latter's suit, and the play ends happily for all concerned.

Nothing but the highest praise can be given to the production, which is one that does credit to even Proctor's where one is always sure to see the best. THE PRESS cordially congratulates both the management and the author upon having given to the public an unexceptionally brilliant success.

The Notorious Female Fire-bug.

Emma Day, the Summit firebug who won a little notoriety by falsely "confessing" guilty participation in incendiarism in Plainfield, some time ago, has been trying to kill herself. She turned up in Newark a day or two ago, and made two unsuccessful attempts at suicide by poison. Each time she took an overdose. At the hospital she gave the name of Fanny Wilson of Liberty Corner, but finally acknowledged her true name.

Sick Headache.

I have used Dr. Deane's Dyspepsia Pills for Headache, and since I have taken them I have been perfectly free from it. I can cheerfully and conscientiously recommend them to any and all who suffer from the same. MISS M. E. LEES, Stenographer and Typewriter, Room 92, Evening Post Building, N. Y.

A Rainbow Supper.

The rainbow supper held at Duñellen last evening was largely attended. Many families patronized it instead of dining at home.

The basement of the church was profusely decorated with the colors of the variegated emblem of security against flood, and a large rainbow was placed over the platform. The net proceeds, which were considerable, will be divided equally among the three Christian Endeavor societies of the borough.

All the druggists sell the Tudor Whiskey. Some of the other dealers do not. They say it pays too small a profit. PURE whiskey never does yield a large profit. It is the adulterated stuff which makes the money. Do you want to pay your dealer an exorbitant profit on an adulterated article, or do you prefer genuine old Whiskey which is sold at a moderate profit? Decide for yourselves. The TUDOR WHISKEY is WARRANTED ABSOLUTELY PURE and TEN YEARS OLD.

National Horse Show at Madison Square Garden, N. Y.

A Fashionable Fad with a Big Utility—Who the Patrons Are—Prizes and Classes—Cultivation of the Hackney—Bright Prospects.

[COPYRIGHT, 1891.]

The chrysanthemum show will hardly have come to an end when the Madison square garden will be given up to another fashionable cult—this time to one in which the element of utility has a fair share. The horse show will begin there on Monday, November 16, and will last the entire week. It will be the seventh exhibition given by the National Horse Show association (limited), and the managers expect and are preparing for the biggest kind of success, both from a social and equine standpoint.

New York's four hundred are very horsey these times. The fad has been growing for years. It is not only English, ye know, but also good in itself. It not only catches the Anglomaniac dudes but also the more solid and sensible elements of the social world. There is money in the cultivation of fine horses, and pleasure, too. Besides, there is no fad that admits of so much fashionable display. Every woman who can afford to keep them is proud of her high stepping carriage horses. If Mrs. Hantton feels that her beauties raise their knees an inch higher than those of Mrs. Beau Monde, she is a truly happy woman. If her daughter rides better and looks trimmer and shaplier in her habit than her rival's girl, then she is in the seventh heaven. The fad has a thousand ramifications, from four-in-hand coaching down to pony phaetons by the seaside, and everybody who is anybody is either devoted to it or pretends to be.

So the horse show has been steadily increasing in favor year after year. The devotees of fashion have not only patronized it as backers and exhibitors, but have also gone there in swarms to see the horses and each other. It is said that over a hundred thousand persons visited the garden last year, and this year even a greater crush is expected. Of course, thousands who don't care a button for society swell the throng. They go because they love horses, just on the same principle that the dealers and breeders who live at the very antipodes of the four hundred are among the most prominent exhibitors. Pretty nearly all classes help to swell the success of the shows, and perhaps that is one of the best features of it.

In the day time the show is not especially exciting. The judging goes on in the ring. The horsey element predominates in the attendance, which is not very large. Such experts as S. D. Bruce, of the Spirit of the Times; David Bonner, James R. Keene, J. H. Bradford, of Boston; A. J. Cassatt, the Pennsylvania railway magnate; Col. G. E. Waring, of Newport; Dean Sage, of Albany, and Col. W. Edwards, of Cleveland, are in charge of the awards. They divide the work by classes, according to their special qualifications, and they keep at work all day in a business-like fashion, which is only interesting from a business point of view.

But when the gas is lit the scene changes. Gilmore floods the place with music; the gay crowd flocks in. The garden is one mass of life and color. Then are given all the fancy exhibitions. The parade of the mounted police, the trials of the fire engine horses, and the national guard exhibitions. All these are picturesque and beautiful displays. Then there are hurdle riding and high jumping, and this latter was pushed to such a point last year that there has been much talk of setting a limit of Leo's marvelous record of seven feet—a record which has only once been beaten. In any show, not more than one of the horses would be found to equal that, and if there were two, it is proposed to make the award on the basis of style and readiness in taking the jump. The strain of this exercise on the spectators is almost incredible. Several times last year, and even men turned pale. Several times there have been ugly accidents to the daring riders.

Among the best of the jumpers—features of last year's show and probable winners in this—are Mr. H. L. Herbert's heavy-weight hunter Transport, Miss Bird's hunter Merry Boy, the handsome mare Maud owned by Moorehouse and Pepper, of Toronto, good for a high jump of seven feet, Mr. Thomas Hitchcock, Jr.'s hunter Good Times, S. S. Howland's Leo, and Ontario, and Mr. Elliott Zborowski's chestnut mare Countess.

Mr. Prescott Lawrence's hackney stallion Fashion is after another prize, and will meet his old competitor, Dr. Webb's Sprotboro Fashion. Alcantara of the Highland farm and C. J. Hamlin's Mambrino King will be among the leading trotters on style. They alternate in first prize winning and the contest is always sharp. The handsome saddle horse Beauty, a first prize winner, belonging to Mrs. Charles L. Hyde, will again be a candidate for honors.

This year there is to be added a new fancy attraction in the shape of Haute Ecole, or high school riding. This is the training of horses in fancy accomplishments, such as dance steps, kneeling to pick up his master's whip and a dozen other tricks. Some persons do not favor this class of exercise, regarding it as savoring too much of the circus ring; but others consider it the highest development of training, as showing the greatest development of intelligence in the horse, and of sympathy between him and his trainer.

Last year there were 1,100 entries made by about 500 horses. This year there are about 700 horses and the total number of entries is nearly 1,400. The animals are divided into 111 classes, including 81 regular and 30 special. The prizes offered by the association aggregate over $20,000 in value. They range from $500 to $100 for first prizes and from $250 to $25 for seconds and thirds. The entrance fees range from $25 to $5. The special prizes amount to about $5,000 more. They are offered by the Coaching club, the Tandem club, the New York Riding club, a few dealers, and by a few rich individuals such as Mr. B. Fulton Cutting, Mr. John A. Logan, Jr., Mr. J. R. Roosevelt, Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Mr. Prescott Lawrence and Mr. Reginald W. Rives. They are generally designed for the indulgence of some personal fad such as high-stepping, long-tailed ponies or "shire" draught horses. Sometimes they are made to include whole rigs, such as "coach and four-in-hand team," "brougham and pair," or "best pair of roadsters and road rig." Mr. Theodore W. Havemeyer offers one for the best professional coachman.

The eighty-one regular classes are grouped under the following main heads: Thoroughbreds, Arabs, trotters, roadsters, Clydesdales, Normans, hackneys, coaching stallions, horses in harness, carriage horses, tandems, four-in-hand teams, cobs and ponies in harness, saddle horses, galloways, cobs and ponies under saddle, pony stallions and brood mares, hunters (including jumping classes), police horses and national guard horses. Of course the subdivision is endless. There are classes for horses, mares and foals, and separate opportunities for gentlemen riders and drivers and professionals. Professional horsemen will be on hand to show off ladies' horses.

This year the sire horses only figure in one special class. The hackneys promise to be a feature of the exhibition from a strictly horsey point of view. The entries are very numerous, and there are thirty-two prizes offered for them, aggregating $4,300. They were introduced last year at the instance of Mr. Seward Webb, and last year's display has greatly increased the interest in them. All entries must have pedigrees recorded in the hackney stud book, of England. The horses are all imported and vary in value from $5,000 to $12,000. It is said that the aggregate value of this year's entries in the hackney class exceeds that of the Garden itself.

In past years, the horses entered have come chiefly from scattered states. This year, the management caters to the west. Arrangements have been made with the trunk line railroads by which all exhibited horses returned to the west unsold within thirty days of the close of the show will be returned free to the point whence they came, their transportation thus costing their owners only the full fare one way.

Among the horses exhibited will be a set of Irish hunters, recently imported by ex-Mayor William R. Grace, of New York. The celebrated Tenny will also be on exhibition. All the big stables and stock farms, both of gentlemen and breeders, will be represented, and it is believed the collection of horse flesh will be the finest ever seen in this country.

GIRLS WERE SCARCE

That Caused the Woodhaven School Board's Action.

THE TEACHERS UP IN ARMS.

Declare They Will Fight the Order Making Them Live in the Town.

The Trustees Say the Place Was Going to the Dogs Because of a Dearth of Society Young Women—The Fellows Had Organized an Old Bachelor's Association—Heroic Measures Had to be Adopted to Save the Town.

WOODHAVEN, L. I., Nov. 21.—Politics, the Chilian question and all such affairs appear as nothing to the citizens of this place, in comparison with the great fight between the 16 pretty school teachers of the town and the school trustees. If, as has been hinted, the girls strike or take their case to the court, the town will be in an uproar. It is all the result of a rule passed by the trustees making it obligatory on the teachers to reside in Woodhaven. There are three schools here, and of the 16 teachers 12 have been living at Brooklyn, Williamsburg and Long Island City.

President Kirkland, of the Board of Trustees, says: "This school district pays about $7,500 in salaries to teachers, and I think this money should be spent in the village. If the teachers reside away from the village they are liable to be late at the morning session and also in a hurry to depart in the afternoon. Besides, this place has long needed a suitable number of educated young women as an addition to society. Last spring the young women organized an "Old Maid Society," and later the young men organized an "Old Bachelors' Consolation Association." When things come to such an issue it is time something should be done for society in the village; so I conceived the idea of having the teachers reside in the place. I think the young men of the village should feel grateful to me. We have selected as teachers young women who are both handsome and accomplished."

At the request of the Board of Trustees all the teachers signed an agreement to reside in Woodhaven. This soon became very irksome to the girls who had resided elsewhere. They did not want to live away from their parents' homes. Finally one girl, Miss McKenna, of Long Island City, hired a room in Woodhaven. Her brother, James McKenna, ran on the Democratic ticket for Assemblyman, and was defeated by Mr. Weeks, a republican, of Hempstead. Although Miss McKenna rented a room in Woodhaven she went to her Long Island City home every night. The other young women tried to give the impression that they lived in Woodhaven, although they, too, went to their homes in other places, and did not go to the expense of hiring a room as Miss McKenna did.

President Kirkland and his fellow trustees are reported to have visited the Woodhaven churches at all of the services on Sunday. They did not see the young teachers there. They inquired pleasantly of the teachers, when they met them afterward, if they liked the church services. The teachers all replied "Yes," but the trustees showed that they knew that the young women had not been to church in Woodhaven then. The trustees told the teachers that they must abide by their contracts. The young women held caucuses, and voted the whole board of trustees "perfectly horrid creatures," and positively declared that "they never, never would submit."

But they did submit. Within the last week all of them, except Miss McKenna have moved their property to Woodhaven and now reside there. They are free to go home on Friday nights and remain till Monday, but some of them declare that "just for spite," they will not take advantage of that privilege. They are a very angry lot of young women and declare that they will never speak to any of the Board of Trustees unless they must.

"We have no place to go in the evenings when our school duties are over," said one of the pretty teachers yesterday. "The rates of board are very high and our salaries are not. We believe the whole scheme has been concocted for the benefit of the boarding house keepers. Our hard earned money is needed in our homes. It is very uncongenial here. We obey the new rule only under compulsion. We are afraid we will be discharged if we do not, and we cannot afford that."

School Commissioner John B. Merrill says he thinks that the contract between the trustees and the teachers would not hold good if the teachers chose to rebel. The trustees, he says, are created by statute and have only such power as the statute gives them. There is no claim on the teacher's time after school hours, for school purposes. He maintains that the same rule which deprives the Board of jurisdiction over the school children after they leave the school yard applies equally to the teachers.

School Superintendent Smith, who has charge of the Woodhaven schools and is the immediate superior of the teachers, said that the contract gives the parents an opportunity of meeting the teachers if they so desire, and the knowledge of this had a good effect upon the scholars. When the teachers resided out of Woodhaven there were too many cases of tardiness among the scholars, and it was difficult to reprove the children for this when the teachers set so poor an example. Mr. Smith says it is his duty as superintendent to enforce the contract and he intends to do so.

Not a Question of Money.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Nov. 21.—Mrs. Annie Dunn, who was married to a penniless youth named Henry, is 40 years old, a niece of General Forrest, of the Confederate Cavalry fame and worth a quarter of a million of dollars in her own right. Mrs. Dunn was also engaged to marry one of her plantation managers. She took her husband to New York.

THE DEAD ACTOR.

Arrangements for Florence's Funeral—Reminiscences of His Life.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—The body of William J. Florence lies at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, where the comedian had made his home for the past thirty years. It will remain here until Monday at 11 o'clock, when the funeral will take place from St. Agnes' Church. The interment will be in the family vault at Greenwood. Mrs. Florence is now on her way home, having sailed on the Aurania.

There is no end now of stories about Mr. Florence and the pranks he played. Florence, Ned Sothern, Nelse Seymour and Dan Bryant were a quartette who made fun wherever they went.

At one time Florence and Sothern were both playing in St. Louis—Florence in "The Mighty Dollar" and Sothern in either "Dundreary" or "Brother Sam." In the midst of one of Florence's best scenes who should appear on the stage but Sothern, who had taken advantage of a half hour off in his own play to make a public visit to his friend.

The next night Florence called upon Sothern in the same way, and both audiences saw a double performance much to their delight. At another time, when Florence knew that Sothern was to be in St. Louis, he advertised for 1,000 bulldogs to be left at Dundreary's door.

Florence used to say the first practical joke that was ever played on him was the means of getting him out of a scrape, and he felt kindly toward that form of wit ever since.

It was when he was a lad, playing minor comedy parts in a Broadway theatre at $10 a week. He thought he was madly in love with a young actress at work for the same stipend. During the play one night he invited her to take some oysters after the performance. Then he rushed to his lodgings, changed his clothes, met her and took her to an oyster house.

His bill there was $1.90, but unfortunately he found he had left his money in his other clothes. The waiter and the proprietor both said his story was too diaphanous, and made him give up his watch and his father's ring that he wore. Just then a whitehaired, benevolent-looking old gentleman came out of one of the private dining compartments they used to have in those days and thundered at the proprietor:

"Give that youth back his watch and chain and ring. Let me pay his bill. You ought to be asnamed, sir. Anyone can see this is an honest youth and his companion is a perfect lady. [The girl was in tears.] I will pay the bill and never set foot in your place again."

Out in the street Florence was overcome with gratitude.

"Give me your address, sir," said he to the kindly old gentleman. "I will return you the money to-morrow.

"Oh, never mind," said the philanthropist, "that was a counterfeit $20 bill I handed to the old fool. It was worth nothing, and he gave me $18.10 change for it. That's the way I make my living. Good night."

The Mayor Ran the Elevator.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 21.—Mayor Joseph B. Sargent, who had a narrow escape from a horrible death during the afternoon while endeavoring to run the elevator in the City Hall in the absence of the regular attendant is not seriously hurt. The Mayor entered the car and ran it to the third story. Here he passed out of the car and attempted to send it back to the first floor by pulling the cable. He forgot about the automatic sliding door, and before he could regain the landing he was caught. His face and body were badly bruised, but he was very fortunate in escaping instant death.

Opposed to the Reorganization.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Nov. 21.—There is considerable opposition among depositors over the reorganization of the Ulster County Savings Institution, due to the fact that Superintendent Preston of the State Banking Department in his plan does not mention whether the old trustees will have charge of the mangement of the institution, and that the petition circulated for depositors to sign petitioning the court to make an order allowing resumption, omits mention of trustees. There is talk of a meeting of depositors to petition the court to remove the trustees. The signers to the petition for resumption are few.

NEW ENGLAND BRIEFS.

Gen. Ben Butler's physician says his patient's illness is painful but not dangerous.

Owing to inability to conduct their business at a profit the Gilmore-Eustis Rolling Mills, at Cambridgeport, Mass., have shut down permanently.

The condition of Rev. Thomas Hill, ex-president of Harvard College, who is lying ill at the residence of a friend in Waltham, Mass., is very critical.

As a result of the football games between Williams and Amherst Colleges at Amherst, Mass., Friday, in which neither side scored, the two teams are tied for the championship.

John A. King, who was arrested in Brooklyn, N. Y., and brought to Boston, charged with attempt to defraud the John Hancock and New York Life Insurance Companies, was held in $5,000 for the grand jury.

CHILI COOLING OFF

The Fiery South Americans Quit Talking War.

HAVE HEARD OF OUR NAVY.

Willing Now to See Justice Done to the Assailants of U. S. Sailors.

They Have Also Discovered England Will Not Help Them in Case of Hostilities—Captain Schley's Conduct Meeting With Great Praise—Chili Hasn't Much of a Naval Force Anyway.

VALPARAISO, Nov. 21.—A correspondent has made special inquiries to ascertain the condition of public feeling on the subject of the difficulty with the United States, and finds that the fiery sentiment which prevailed against Americans has considerably cooled down. The Chilians talk more rationally as to the American request for redress, and just now there is a growing disposition to see that justice is done to those who assaulted the American sailors, and killed two of them.

Undoubtedly the report telegraphed from New York of the formidable fleet said to be on its way to Pacific waters has something to do with the change of sentiment in Valparaiso, at least. The people here are not anxious for a bombardment. They have come to the conclusion that the United States is in earnest, and the more intelligent, among them have taken pains to ascertain something about American power and resources. They understand now that if Americans should decide upon a bombardment, they would not be deterred by interference of other nations in behalf of Chili, and that the Chilians would have to take care of the mselves.

When the war furore was first raised here, Englishmen went about in swashbuckling fashion giving the Chilians to understand that the British fleet would never permit Americans to damage Valparaiso. This had much to do with the defiant attitude of Chili. Now that it is evident that the only British ally would be the correspondent of the London "Times," to whose commands the American admiral would probably not pay much attention, the situation is different, and Valparaiso has concluded not to court a bombardment. Consequently Americans are treated with more respect, and there is no disposition to do violence to American officers or seamen.

Capt. Schley's conduct meets with universal praise. He has been calm and deliberate under the most provoking circumstances. This combined with dignity and firmness has won him the respect even of the lower and less intelligent as well as the superior class.

NOT MUCH OF A NAVY.

Chili's Ships Greatly Overrated, Says a United States Officer.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 21.—One of the officers of the San Francisco, which has just returned, declared that the Chilian navy had been greatly overrated. Said he:

"They have several good vessels, but not one is a match for the Baltimore or San Francisco. They have nine and ten-inch Armstrong guns, but the gunners are so unskilful that they do no effective work.

"For instance, I witnessed the bombardment of Fort Vina del Mar by the Almirante Cochrane and the Esmeralda. Both have the best equipment, but at a distance of 2,000 yards not a single shot hit the fort. Only one shell fell at the foot of the embankment in front of the fort, and did no damage. At such a distance with proper handling of the guns the fort ought to have been dismantled in 15 minutes."

Did Milkman Hidley Kill His Wife?

TROY, N. Y., Nov. 21.—The sensational poisoning story made public a few days ago by Charles Fiets of this city, and his charge that his wife desired him out of the way because she had become infatuated with Milkman George Hidley of North Greenbush, has turned attention to the latter, and he is likely to become prominent by connection with the case. His wife died under somewhat peculiar circumstances a few months ago, and an investigation is about to be made to ascertain whether she died from natural causes.

PENNSYLVANIA BRIEFS.

Judge Silas M. Clark, of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, is dying of blood poisoning.

James H. Klemmer has been appointed postal note agent at Philadelphia, vice C. C. James, appointed division inspector at New York city.

Major E. A. Montooth, representing Senator Quay, has entered suit against the Pittsburg "Post" for $100,000 damages on the charge of libel.

Nine buildings were destroyed by fire and 50 acres of timber land, the property of the Brown Coal Company, were burned over at Monongahela City, involving a loss of $50,000.

FOUGHT IN COURT.

The "French Colonel" Faints at His Trial, Then Attacks the Officers.

LONDON, Nov. 21.—The trial at the "Old Bailey" on the charge of blackmail of the mysterious individual known as the "French Colonel," as "Le Grande," as "Brissony Grant," as "Captain Anderson" and as "Charles Grant," was one of the most remarkable in the history of British jurisprudence.

The distinguished criminal's real name is not known. He says he is a Dane, but the police believe him to be a well-known American criminal, who has "worked" both the United States and Europe for years past, and who has made large sums of money by his operations as a "Knight of Industry."

There were a number of charges piled up against the "French Colonel," but the one upon which he was tried was that of threatening to murder Baroness Boisover, who resides in one of the most aristocratic quarters of London, and with also threatening the murder of Lady Jessel, the widow of the late Master of the Rolls.

After the testimony had been taken the French colonel fainted in the dock. When revived he engaged in a furious fight with the police around him. A dozen policemen, assisted by a number of prison wardens, seemed unable to restrain him. There was a tremendous sensation in the court room. A number of ladies fainted and others screamed in terror.

Judge Hawkins was unable for a long time to restore order. Finally the jury found the prisoner guilty on both charges.

The Contest Will Not be Affected.

CHATHAM, N. Y., Nov. 21.—Senator Deane, who is dead at Copake, Columbus County, had been the Republican Senator from the Fifteenth district for two terms of two years each, and was at the time of his death claiming election over E. B. Osborn, Democrat, for the third term. The contest for the seat in this district, or its determination, will not be affected by Senator Deane's death, as the Board of Canvassers must issue the certificate to Deane if it be found that the returns show his election. The Governor will, however, be notified that there was a vacancy caused by death and will have to order a new election.

Almost Pure Iron.

DULUTH, Minn., Nov. 21.—A new and very valuable ore is reported from the west end of the Mesaba iron range. It is said that several pits put down are bottomed in clear ore, one being already 18 feet in iron. This discovery is thought the more valuable, as it shows the trend of the range west, and also that its extent is much greater than was formerly supposed. At least half a dozen new iron locations on the Mesaba have resulted from the explorations of the last three or four months, and steps are now being taken to put a railroad through the country, so as to open the mines up.

Colored Miners Forced to Work.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 21.—One hundred colored men, brought from Virginia under false representations, are held as prisoners in the Spowden mines and compelled to work by armed guards, who discharge revolvers at the poor fellows to intimidate them. The men are handcuffed and kept busily at work. The company claims that the men owe the corporation money. One man who tried to escape was shot dead, and his terrified companions driven back to work with pick handles.

Threw His Wife Through a Window.

BOSTON, Nov. 20.—During a family row, William Geary, of 36 Trumbull street, threw his wife Elizabeth out of a third-story window, and she landed on a shed. Her kneepan was broken, shoulder dislocated, and she received other injuries that may prove fatal. The couple have had frequent quarrels. William was locked up and their three children were sent to the Home for Destitute Catholic Children.

The Decree May Come Soon.

BERLIN, Nov. 21.—Although the Russian government has not yet decreed the prohibition of wheat export, there are gathering indications of what is to come. A significant incident is reported from Revel, on the south side of the Gulf of Finland. A steamer from Lubec was loading there with wheat, when the authorities interfered, and put a peremptory stop to the operation. The people of Revel generally applauded the action taken.

Dr. Smith's Funds Attached.

LOWELL, Mass., Nov. 21.—An attachment for $35,000 has been placed on the funds belonging to Dr. S. P. Smith in the Railroad National Bank. Dr. Smith is the missing Supreme Treasurer of the Order of the Rising Sun, who is alleged to have improperly loaned $50,000 of the funds of the organization.

BORDENTOWN, N. J., Nov. 21.—John Parnell, a brother of the late Charles Stewart Parnell, who resides at West Point, Ga., is expected here in a few days to pay a visit to his aged mother, Mrs. Delia T. S. Parnell. Mr. Parnell will accompany his mother to England and Ireland.

Dr. Nelson Accepts.

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Nov. 21.—The Rev. Dr. C. Kinlock Nelson, who was last week elected Bishop of the Episcopal Church of Georgia, has informed the diocese of his acceptance of the high office. The consecration will take place on January 25 in St. Luke's Cathedral, Atlanta.

An Italian Absconder.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 21.—Giacinto Epifairio, an Italian, who has for several years past conducted a steamship agency and banking business among the poorer class of his countrymen, has disappeared and is thought to be an absconder to the amount of $50,000. It is believed he has gone to California.

Most Baking Powders Contain Ammonia or Alum; Cleveland's does not—

It is made only of pure cream of tartar and soda, with a little flour added to keep the strength, nothing else. That is why Cleveland's baking powder is perfectly wholesome, does the work better and keeps food moist and fresh.

PROCTOR'S REPORT

The Secretary of War Reviews Military Affairs.

PROBLEM OF COAST DEFENSES.

Recommends an Annual Appropriation of $500,000 for Sites for Forts.

New York and Other Ports to be Made Impregnable—Indians Make Good Soldiers—Heavy Ordnance Now Made in This Country—Efficiency of the Army Increased—Expenses of the War Department.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21.—The annual report of Secretary of War Redfield Proctor has just been issued. It briefly reviews the new legislative and administrative measures affecting the Department which have been inaugurated during the present Administration, and gives many interesting details regarding the Department, showing that a great improvement has been made not only in the coast defenses, but in the regular service in all its branches.

The Secretary gives the Indians the credit for showing themselves capable of becoming good soldiers. The progress made recently in rifled cannon and small arms is also detailed. Generally, the work shown by the report reflects credit on the Secretary and Government.

On the subject of coast defenses Secretary Proctor says:

"The problem of adequate coast defense has practically been settled. Fortunately it is not a question of party politics. Our coast cities, which in 1860 were well protected, in 1890 were defenseless.

"Sites for new fortifications have been selected and engineering work has been begun on batteries for mortars and emplacements at New York, Boston, San Francisco, Hampton Roads and Washington.

"Two appropriations of $500,000 each for the purchase of sites for fortification and sea coast defenses were made by the last Congress. Allotments have been made under these appropriations for sites for gun and mortar batteries at Glover Cliff in Boston Harbor; Point Comfort, Fort Wadsworth, Plumb Island, and Sand Point in New York Harbor; Laguna Merced in San Francisco Harbor, and Sheridan Point on the Potomac. Proceedings of condemnation have been commenced to obtain other sites near Fort Wadsworth and Fort Hamilton in New York Harbor; Willoughby Spit in Hampton Roads and Point Lobos in San Francisco Harbor.

"Over one-half of the entire appropriation has been allotted and about $350,000 expended. I recommend that an appropriation of $500,000 be expended annually until the important sites are secured. It will require this amount for several years to pay for sites as rapidly as they will be needed for use, and it is economy to acquire them as quickly as possible after their location has been determined upon."

"The point has now been reached when by the continuance of the present rate of appropriations for coast defenses, which have been moderate, the work can be carried on systematically and judiciously. To stop or check the work now would be to lose much that has been done; to continue will be both safety and economy. Each year some part of it can be completed so as to become available, and thereafter every gun mounted will add to its efficiency. The Board of Ordinance and Fortification in their report say: 'Four years' continuance of similar legislation and activity and it can no longer be said that the United States is defenseless against foreign powers.'"

Alluding to the experiment of employing Indians as soldiers, the report says: "I have had an opportunity to personally inspect some of these Indian cavalry troops and received full reports showing the condition of others. In good conduct, drill and military bearing, attention to duty, observance of courtesies and care of horses, arms and equipment, clothing, barracks, mess rooms and kitchen, they are at least equal to soldiers of other races of no greater experience. Satisfactory reports have also been received of the progress of the Indian infantry companies."

The report also touches upon desertions, post-traders, militia, national cemeteries and other interesting topics. A memorandum of expenditures, appropriations and estimates shows that the department spent during the year ending June 30, 1891, $51,450,764.68, received $9,183,425.05, and looks forward to spending $45,975,603.37 during the current year.

Accuses Himself of Burglary.

BOSTON, Nov. 21.—Frank Kelborne, who surrendered himself to the police during the day, said he had recently broken into the postoffice in a town near Middletown, Conn., and had stolen a large number of postage stamps and two registered letters. Kelborne was turned over to the United States Commissioner who placed him under $1,000 bonds. Kelborne says he came from Liverpool when 13 years old, is a professional thief and has served a term for burglary in the State prison at Columbus, O. Chester, Conn., is believed to be the town where he robbed the postoffice.

A Noted Smuggler Dead.

CHICAGO, Nov. 21.—A special dispatch from Sand Beach, Mich., says: George Wetzel, who has borne the reputation among United States Treasury agents as the keenest smuggler in the business, has just died at the home of his parents here. He had many aliases, but his principal one was George Thompson, a name given him by Harris, the noted opium smuggler. He was thirty-one years of age at the time of his death, and had been in the smuggling business about fifteen years, but was in the Government employ since last year.

Was a Noted Turf Man.

PETERSBURG, Va., Nov. 21.—O. P. Hare, for many years a prominent druggist of this city, who is dead here, aged 83, was at one time the most prominent turf man in Virginia. He was engaged in breeding and racing thoroughbred horses, and also owned the famous Newmarket race course near this city, which was in its glory from 1838 to 1850. He was the best informed man in the State about old-time races and race horses.

An $800,000 Claim Against an Estate.

BOSTON, Nov. 21.—The petition of C. J. Hambo & Co., London bankers, to have $800,000 reserved by the executors of the estate of the late Royal M. Pulsifer in order to meet a claim for that amount alleged to be due said firm was heard in the Middlesex Probate Court before Judge Brooks, and is now under consideration. The claim is alleged to be due for breach of guaranty executed by Mr. Pulsifer in his life time. He agreed to guarantee the completion of the construction of the Marietta and North Georgia Railroad out of the proceeds of the mortgage bonds which the petitioners claim to have negotiated in London.

Mercier Prefers Criminal Charges.

QUEBEC, Nov. 21.—Hon. H. Mercier, Premier of Quebec, has sworn out criminal charges against J. P. Whelan, the contractor for the Quebec City Court House, who is alleged to have stated that he had to pay heavy sums to Mr. Mercier and several members of the latter's government to secure the contract to do certain work. The Premier has also made charges against several newspapers.

The Yacht Race is Off Until Spring.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—W. R. Hearst, owner of the Vamoose, having telegraphed East that she would race only during weather suitable for the Norwood, inquiry was made at the office of Norman L. Munroe regarding the race. It was said that owing to the fact that smooth water did not prevail at this season of the year the race would have to be postponed until spring.

THE PRESS PRINTS FOR ALL.

It has become necessary for THE PRESS to again disclaim all personal indorsement of any expressions of political sentiment, or criticisms of municipal officers or candidates, that appear in these columns in the form of communications or interviews. They are given for what they are worth, as merely the assertions or opinions of certain individuals.

Take, for instance, the communication in Thursday's PRESS speaking of a "Kean Funnel" at 6 East Front street. It is to be hoped that no one charges THE PRESS with being in sympathy with the spirit or views of such articles. But the columns of this paper are open to the people, and are open to an expression of the opinions of all sides. The tickets of both political parties, also, are to be found above.

MRS. PARTRIDGE WINS HER SUIT.

He Was a Gay Deceiver and Accused of Living in Plainfield Once With Another's Wife.

The City Court jury of Brooklyn, in the suit of Mrs. Matilda Partridge for $10,000 damages for breach of promise of marriage against Andrew A. Joyce, yesterday, brought in a verdict of $800 damages in favor of the plaintiff. The first witness yesterday was the defendant.

He was asked to explain his leaving his family for four months and coming to this city to live when his son was a baby, and was asked if one of the customers of his butcher shop did not leave her husband and come here too. He said "No." He never heard that the woman afterward wrote to her husband asking to be forgiven and that she went back to live with him, or that the woman wrote to his wife offering to return the silver that he took away with him when he left home. He was asked if he was ever a Baptist minister. He said "No."

Mrs. Partridge took the stand and said the story of Mr. Joyce's visit to New Jersey was told to her by his daughter, and she repeated the charges in detail. She said that Joyce had told her he was sixty-nine years old, though he swore on the stand the day before that he was only forty-nine. Miss Joyce denied the truth of Mrs. Partridge's testimony and said she knew nothing of her father's visits to Plainfield. The jury retired at 12:15 p. m. and brought in a verdict in about two hours.

BY THE WAY.

—A cake and apron sale will be held at the First Baptist church Tuesday evening.

—The foot-race between Anderson and Dufrane, at the Crescent rink last night, was won by Dufrane.

—The Ladies' Aid society of the Monroe Avenue chapel are making arrangements to hold a fair on Tuesday evening, Dec. 8.

—A young Plainfield law student ruined a light overcoat by rubbing against a newly-painted red letter-box yesterday afternoon.

—Morning prayer and sermon will be held at Grace church, Thanksgiving Day, at 11 a. m. The offering will be for the widows and orphans of the clergy.

—When the fire broke out in the house corner of Ninth street and Park avenue, a servant rushed to the nearest letter-box, lifted the lid and shouted "fire" in it a dozen times.

—Pierson Hardware company have just received an invoice of 500 pocket-knives and 300 pieces of granite ware, which they are offering below the market price, and they guarantee every one.

—The complete schedule of all the games to be rolled in the American bowling tournament, in which the Crescent League is entered, was exclusively published in THE PRESS of the 7th inst., and in the Constitutionalist of the 12th.

—India, "the pearl of the east", the land of fables, distinguished for its credulous people, receives generous attention in "The Story of Man", which gives a complete history of the religions of the Brahmins, Hindoos, Parsees and lower castes, including descriptions of their ancient temples, their bejewelled gods, sacred animals, human sacrifices, self-immolations, towers of silence, flagellations, self-torture, and wonderful exhibitions of jugglery; in fact, all that learned research has found of the ancient customs of the East Indian races. A copy of the work will be shown as announced in the advertisement.

Rubbish-Heaps Bad Things in the House.

Fire started in a heap of rubbish in a wood-bin in the cellar of Mr. Middleditch's house at Park avenue and Ninth street, at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and the department turned out in response to an alarm rung in from box 13. The flames were confined to the cellar and one room overhead, and were soon drowned out. The house was damaged $200. The gas meter, which was directly above the wood-bin, was burned away, and the house was filled with suffocating gas and smoke, so that the firemen were greatly hampered in their work. There was considerable needless delay in sending in an alarm. Two streams were used—one from an engine, and one direct from a Water Supply company's hydrant. The hydrant stream was quickest procured, and was the more serviceable and more easily handled of the two.

A Thanksgiving Appeal.

The Relief association asks for donations of poultry, vegetables, fruit, etc., for the Thanksgiving dinners which as usual are to be distributed among the poor of Plainfield. Last year eighty-two families were provided for, and this year it is hoped that the number may be increased. Gifts should be sent on either Tuesday afternoon or Wednesday morning next, to the Relief rooms, 45 West Second street.

Secretary.

ROSEVILLE LED ALL THE WAY.

The Crescents Drop Their First Game in the Championship Series.

Plainfield played its first game in the American Bowling union last night at Roseville, and lost by a margin of 90 pins. The Rosevilles started with a big lead, and the Crescents never got near them except in the third frame, when they were six pins behind. VanEmburgh distinguished himself by making never a strike. With his six spares, his score was only 139, the lowest of the evening, and much less than he is accustomed to put up. The score:

PARTICULAR MENTION.

J. A. Smith, the West Front street grocer, is quite ill at his home.

Mrs. Sarah A. Dunn is recovering from serious illness at her home on Central avenue.

A number of Congregationalists thoroughly enjoyed themselves at the home of John M. Whiton, last evening.

Miss Laura J. Runyon, formerly of Elmwood place, has removed to 116 Front street, corner of Washington avenue.

Phœbe E., wife of William Messerschmidt, died this morning at the age of 40 years. Funeral services will be held at her late residence, 27 Washington street, Monday afternoon at 2:15.

The Rev. J. B. Cleaver has found, there is no place like Plainfield. It is said that he is only waiting for a respectable offer for his place near Bound Brook, when he will sell out and return to this city.

There will be a subscription dinner at the Union County Country club-house, this evening. The table, in the shape of a horseshoe, will be laid for 76, and the Club steward is given carte-blanche to spread himself.

Robert P. Wilder, the well-known missionary worker, brother of William Wilder of this city, is lying seriously ill of nervous prostration in London. He was at work there among the college students soliciting recruits to go with him to India.

A social gathering of the members of Mrs. M. C. Dobbins's Sunday-school class took place yesterday afternoon, at her home, 7 Elmwood place. A pleasant afternoon was spent, with games, music, etc., after which refreshments were served. Miss Laura J. Runyon and Miss May E. Howlett assisted in the entertainment.

A very enjoyable evening sociable was held at the residence of A. B. Carpenter, East Front street, last evening. About 100 people were present, including a number of Mercury Wheelmen who were guests of George H. Bockafellow. The evening passed most charmingly, with music, dancing and refreshments. A feature of the event was the piano playing of Miss Carrie Ellis.

Yesterday afternoon Miss Clara S. Hellwig gave one of her instructive and interesting French afternoon teas at her home, 240 East Front street. Among those present were: Miss E. W. Goddard, Miss Augustine Lisignolo, Miss Juliette Murray, Miss Martha Borsum, Miss Leila Howard, Miss Trotty Smith, Master Wickham Corwin, Master P. Rodgers, and Miss Bertha Schuckher of Westfield.

The Rev. Robert Lowry's latest service of scripture and song, has just been issued. It is a Christmas service called "The Lord's Anointed," and contains a solo and quartette, "Murmuring Winds", and seven choruses the music of all of which will rank high among even the sweetest and most original creations of the author of "Shall We Gather at the River." The choruses are entitled: "He Comes:" "Bethlehem Fair;" "Unto Us;" "O Zion, Wake;" "Peaceful the World;" "Behold the Dayspring," and "Room for the Lord's Anointed."

To Open Peace Street.

The township committee of North Plainfield will meet in Spencer's Hall Monday evening to consider the Peace street project. All citizens interested are requested to attend.

JUSTUS H. COOLEY,
Chairman last meeting.

A Worthy Plainfield Enterprise.

A representative of THE PRESS spent a very interesting hour, yesterday, at the establishment of Charles M. Ulrich, 25 West Front street. After examining the fine and large assortment of meats, both fresh and cured, with which Mr. Ulrich's retail store is stocked, the reporter was shown through the manufacturing portion of the establishment.

Mr. Ulrich has a neat and powerful little engine driving his sausage mills night and day. Great hogs are brought in, and speedily and skillfully dissected; their flesh is cut into chunks the size of a man's two fists, and these are put through a mill which cuts them up into lumps the size of hickory nuts. These are in their turn forced through small tubes from which they emerge in thin continuous rope-like streams of meat. Then this mass is put into a huge churn and mixer, which distributes through the meat the proper proportion of spices, and the substance comes out fresh and pure sausage-meat, ready for the market. Then there are bologna and liverwurst machines, and a huge vat of scalding water and steam, where the bolognas are deliciously cooked, and another huge ice vat where they are cooled. There is a big smoke-house, and a cellar full of barrels of brine where meats are pickled, and a lard-trying machine, and many other interesting things. Mr. Ulrich's lard is the finest, sweetest and purest on the market, and his cured meats and hams cannot be surpassed. He deals in all kinds of pork, and has a beef department in charge of an experienced Washington market butcher. His employes are experts in the business, and his wares are most attractive and wholesome. He is doing a big business—the result of his keeping the best of goods, advertising in THE PRESS and selling at low prices.

Sold Her Liquor Without License or Prescription.

A druggist in the southern section of the city, was arrested yesterday by Officer Giese for selling whiskey to a woman. The officer caught her as she was coming from the store with the bottle of liquor in her possession. The druggist was arraigned before city Judge Codington, this morning, and waived examination. The judge will name the fine next Tuesday.

The police say it is not the first time the druggist has sold liquor without a prescription. But he says it is the only time, and he sold it then because the woman pleaded severe sickness and as she had done the washing for the druggist's family for months, and he knew her to be an honest and sober woman, he let her have a medicinal dose of the whiskey in a small phial.

The greatest pain annihilator of the age is Salvation Oil. Price only 25 cents.

If you value your children's health and comfort, you must guard them against croup. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is the best preventive known. It is an infallible cure and costs but 25 cents.

Welcome Donations From Generous Church Women.

The good women of Trinity Reformed church have been doing some noble work lately. They have toiled unselfishly and untiringly for the good of a less favored church and its pastor, with the following most satisfactory results:

The Ladies' Christian Work society has sent to the Rev. J. Meulendyke, at Grand Rapids, Mich., a box of clothing, valued at $137.50; and to the Eighth Reformed church of that city, a silver communion service and a chandelier.

The Whatsoever circle of King's Daughters also, has sent to the Rev. Mr. Meulendyke 36¼ yards of carpet for his home, and to the church a full set of fine linen for the communion table.

FALSE ACCUSATIONS REFUTED.

And Mr. Spangenberg Presents the Great Issues of the Coming Election, With Much Force.

The interview with Councilman Spangenberg, published in THE PRESS of Thursday—in which he stated that E. B. Pope was responsible for the deal of last year when a Democrat was chosen as President of the Council for the sake of making J. B. Coward clerk, and told of other very interesting matters of public interest—created so much general excitement and was so greatly in demand that hundreds of extra copies of the paper were sold, therefore a PRESS reporter was assigned yesterday to secure another bit of history from him.

At first Mr. Spangenberg refused, as before, to say anything for publication. But when his attention was called to the falsehoods and misrepresentations of the organs of his enemies, which he had not seen, he said:

"That article regarding the sewer contract, is a lie of whole cloth. It reads that three arbitrators are to be chosen, one of which is to represent the city and the other two the Low company. I quote the exact words of the Low contract that the people may know the whole truth:

In case the said City of Plainfield shall become desirous of purchasing said sewer system and sewer works, it may do so at the expiration of ten years from the time said sewerage works are completed by giving notice of such intention in writing six months before the expiration of said ten years, and in like manner at the expiration of any subsequent period of ten years. In case the parties cannot, in case of sale agree upon price and terms of payment for a purchase and sale, the same shall be fixed by arbitration—two arbitrators to be chosen by each party—and in case of their inability to agree they to name a fifth arbitrator, the decision of the majority of the five arbitrators to be binding on both parties and the sale to be consummated in ninety days after the report of said arbitrators.

I don't propose to pay any further attention to these lying articles that appear from time to time, as they are not worthy of notice. I could refute them all, but shall leave the public to judge from the lying article just quoted what the character of the author of them is.

The "Big Six" has been accused of "Star-chamber" proceedings in regard to the water and sewer contracts. The accusation is false!

The water committee invited all the council to discuss the water and sewer question in the committee room, and the minority fought the majority—the "Big Six"—like cats and dogs, opposing these contracts. I made up my mind then and there that the minority were working in the interest of the Plainfield Water Supply company and did not want another company to come in. Now all these gentlemen in the minority say they don't want to bond the city, but I ask them, how are they going to get the sewer without bonding the city? You cannot get a sewer company to put in a sewer without water, as the former would be at the mercy of the latter as to the price to be charged for flushing the sewers.

The two great issues for the people to decide in the next election are: Do you want the bosses of Plainfield and Elizabeth to rule the city, bond it, and use their monopolies for their pecuniary benefit? Or will you support the six gentlemen that have fought this combine for the past two years in the city's interest? If you wish to support the former, then vote the Republican ticket. If not, then vote the Citizens ticket, which is supported by the people irrespective of party politics.

I mention a few things for the people to think about: Who stopped the great waste of the taxpayer's money on the streets? Who put in the Gamewell fire alarm? Who bought the fire horses? Who made the low price for the electric light contract? Who obtained the lights for the council chamber free of charge? Who stopped buying sand to cart on the streets at $1, per load, and four dollars to cart it?

The "Big Six".

The street committee can show just where every dollar has been expended. Whereas, in 1889 the street pay-roll book shows no names entered on it for nine months.

Robbed of Sixty Dollars.

Last Saturday night George Anulo, who works for the Central railroad at Dunellen, went to visit some friends who board with John Lisowsky, on Van Kueren avenue. They treated him with beer and whisky and got him drunk. They started to dance and began to fight. John Kerutz, who already had a black eye, took Anulo to his home, one of Mrs. Jackson's houses, on Vosseller avenue, and put him to bed. When Anulo awoke Sunday morning he missed $60 from his inside pocket, which was there the night before. Monday afternoon Anulo asked Morris Fox to accompany him to Justice Brampton's office, for the purpose of getting a warrant, but after advising with the 'Squire and going up to Lisowsky's house it was considered best to await developments. Mr. Fox has never studied law but perhaps knows as much as some folks who think themselves very smart.—Bound Brook Chronicle.

An Institution Worthy of Your Support.

One of the most worthy institutions in New Jersey is the Training school for feeble-minded children which is located at Vineland. It has been in existence three years. It is at present caring for and training 140 pupils. The managers are just now putting forth a special effort to awaken sympathy in behalf of this charity by making Thanksgiving Day a "donation day" when they hope to receive gifts of money, clothing, household goods, provisions, etc., from all parts of the State.

Their circular says: "If you cannot send new goods, very often nice second-hand supplies will serve us. If you cannot get your donations ready by the 26th send them as soon afterwards as possible. We hope many friends will be found, either to solicit money or make up boxes of supplies in their respective neighborhoods. Carefully mark all boxes and ship them by freight to Vineland at our expense. All gifts will be acknowledged in our annual report."

Subscriptions and contributions of money may be sent to either of the following persons: William G. Tyler, treasurer, 4,420 Spruce street, Philadelphia; S. Olin Garrison, superintendent, Vineland, N. J.

The New Sanitarium.

Ground is broken and work has already commenced on the Brookside Sanitarium building, that J. H. Cooley, M. D., T. S. Davis, M. D., and T. S. Burr are erecting on Somerset street, nearly opposite the entrance to Johnston's Drive. It is intended to provide therein private confinement with the best of nursing and medical attendance for those suffering from brain or other troubles. The owners have formed a company and filed articles of incorporation.

The architect of the building is A. L. C. Marsh who is striding rapidly forward to the head of the list of the most employed and most satisfactory of architects whose works grace Plainfield. The building is to cost about $20,000 and will be completed early in April 1892.

"A Fair Rebel."

Harry P. Mawson's effective military drama, "A Fair Rebel", will be the next attraction at Music Hall. It will be produced here exactly as in New York—the company bringing every piece of scenery used.

The thrilling episodes of the war story, the scenes of pathos and romance, and the many dashes of bright comedy are admirably carried out by a strong company of well-known actors and actresses. The leading parts are finely played. Edward R. Mawson gives a manly and direct performance of the part of Colonel Ezra Mason, and Miss Fannie Gillette's sympathetic rendering of the role of Clairette Monteith is one of the great successes of the production.

A Fanwood Lad's Composition.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—The men of Fanwood are tearing down the ruins of the well-known MR. George Kyte the Bishop of Fanwood.

Some of the boys of Fanwood were in the ruins of the house on Monday afternoon after school and broke big holes in the floor.

It is his old house and belongs to Mr. Ackerman.

It is a very old house. It was once a very handsome place. It has a very large yard and has an archard which the boys tak apples off of.

It has nice apples in it.

Ninety Days for Emma Day.

Emma T. Day, the young Plainfield woman who on Wednesday night attempted suicide at Newark by taking laudanum, and Thursday morning repeated the attempt, and who was twice taken to the hospital, turned up at the Newark police headquarters Thursday night in fairly good health.

She applied for lodging and was permitted to sleep in the witness-room. Yesterday morning she asked Captain Corbitt to have her sent to jail. In compliance with her request justice Hayes committed her for ninety days.

Water-spout at Bound Brook.

A small-sized cyclone swept over the upper portion of Somerset county, Tuesday, and did considerable damage to buildings and fences. In Bound Brook little harm was done, but the curious phenomenon of a water-spout was witnessed by a few persons. The whirlwind passed over the river and sucked a volume of water out of the stream in the shape of a funnel. Several trees below the river bridge were twisted off like pipe stems, and a Port Reading shanty on the meadow was unroofed.

The Produce Company Incorporated.

The Plainfield Produce company filed articles of incorporation yesterday at Elizabeth, with the clerk of Union county. The business will be carried on at Plainfield, with a capital of $25,000. The incorporators and stockholders are William S. Potter, Somerville; Aaron D. Thompson and Hobart E. Rider of Plainfield.

Shiloh's Cough Cure

This is beyon question the most successful Cough Medicine we have ever sold; a few doses invariably cure the worst cases of Cough, Croup and Bronchitis, while its wonderful success in the cure of Consumption is without a parallel in the history of medicine. Since its first discovery it has been sold on a guarantee, a test which no other medicine can stand. If you have a cough we earnestly ask you to try it. Price 10c., 50c. and $1. If your lungs are sore, chest, or back lame, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by J. G. Miller, No. 10 East Front street, Plainfield N.J.

Get the Genuine.

If you suffer with lame back, especially in morning, ALLCOCK'S PLASTERS are a sure relief.

If you cannot sleep, try an ALLCOCK PLASTER, well up between the shoulder blades—often relieves—sometimes cures. Try this before you resort to opiates.

If any of your muscles are lame—joints stiff—feel as if they wanted oiling—or if you suffer with any local pains or aches, these plasters will cure you.

If you use them once you will realize why so many plasters have been made in imitation of them. Like all good things, they are copied as closely as the law allows. Don't be duped by taking an imitation when it is as easy to get the genuine.

If you always insist upon having ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS and never accept a substitute, you will not be disappointed.

Detailed Routes of the Pennsylvania Railroad's "Golden Gate Tours."

The tours to California under the Pennsylvania railroad company's personally-conducted tourist system have excited considerable interest. The routes traversed are very diversified and interesting. On the first the Pullman vestibule train will leave January 13, going via St. Louis, Kansas City, Las Vegas, Hot Springs, and Santa Fe.

Returning, after six weeks in California, via Sacramento, Salt Lake, Glenwood Springs, Leadville, side trip over Marshall Pass, Colorado Springs, Manitou, Denver, Omaha, and Chicago.

Rate from Philadelphia, $300.

The second tour leaves February 24, going via Cincinnati, Mammoth Cave Montgomery, Mobile, New Orleans (Mardi Gras festivities), Galveston, Houston, San Antonio, and El Paso.

Returning, after four weeks in California, via route of first tour.

Rate from Philadelphia, $335.

The third tour leaves March 24, going via St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Colorado Springs, Manitou, side trip over Marshall Pass, Glenwood Springs, and Salt Lake City.

Returning, after four weeks in California, via Mt. Shasta, Portland, Tacoma, Seattle, Spokane, Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Chicago. Rate from Philadelphia, $360.

The fourth, April 20, will run west via Chicago, Denver, Colorado Springs, Manitou, side trip over Marshall Pass, Glenwood Springs, and Salt Lake City. Tourist will return independently within six months.

Rate from Philadelphia, $235; via Portland, $25 additional.

The rates fixed for the first three tours cover every necessary expense en route in both directions, including hotel accommodation and several carriage rides, and trains for all side trips in California, while rate for fourth tour covers every necessary expense as above west bound only, all side trips in California, and trains only returning via route selected. This particular tour is designed to accommodate those who desire to visit the Yosemite Valley and Yellowstone Park prior to their return to the East.

All the druggists sell the Tudor Whiskey. Some of the other dealers do not. They say it pays too small a profit. PURE whiskey never does yield a large profit. It is the adulterated stuff which makes the money. Do you want to pay your dealer an exorbitant profit on an adulterated article, or do you prefer genuine old Whiskey which is sold at a moderate profit? Decide for yourselves. The TUDOR WHISKEY is WARRANTED ABSOLUTELY PURE and TEN YEARS OLD.

"Seeing is Believing."

And a good lamp

must be simple; when it is not simple it is not good. Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. All metal, tough and seamless, and made in three pieces only, it is absolutely safe and unbreakable. Like Aladdin's of old, it is indeed a "wonderful lamp," for its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light and more cheerful than either.

Look for this stamp—THE ROCHESTER. If the lamp dealer has n't the genuine Rochester, and the style you want, send to us for our new illustrated catalogue, and we will send you a lamp safely by express—your choice of over 2,000 varieties from the Largest Lamp Store in the World.

The Helping Hand.

DR. GREENE'S NERVURA.

(Guaranteed Purely Vegetable and Harmless.)

THE GREAT STRENGTH RESTORER.

A Sure and Positive Cure

For Nervousness, Weakness and Debility, Nervous Debility, Weak and Shattered Nerves, Tired Feeling, Sleeplessness, Poor Blood, Heart Failure, Headache, Dyspepsia, Constipation, Despondency, &c.

The Great Nerve, Brain and Blood Invigorant.

DR. GREENE'S NERVURA is the most successful remedy ever discovered. Its sales are simply enormous. It cures more cases of disease than any other known medicine, and has saved thousands upon thousands from Paralysis, Insanity, Nervous Prostration, Heart Failure, Physical Exhaustion or Death. It is beyond all question the greatest health restorer in existence.

Use this wonderful remedy if you wish to get well, for it is a sure and positive cure. For sale by all druggists; price $1.00 per bottle. Refuse all substitutes.

Is This How You Feel?

If you are weak, tired and nervous, with lifeless feeling and no ambition to work, it will restore your strength, vigor and energies. If you are sleepless and wake tired mornings, with dull head, bad taste in the mouth, no appetite, depression of mind and extreme nervousness, it will clear your head, tone up your nerves, invigorate your blood and put vim and life into you.

Dr. Greene, the famous lecturer and specialist in the cure of nervous and chronic diseases, can be consulted free at his office, 35 West 14th St., New York, personally or by letter.

BELL AND HIS "PHONE."

The Man Who Controls the Telephones of America.

What He Looks Like and How He Pushed His Way to Fame and Fortune—His Invention the Result of Thoughtful Experiments.

There are many persons of adult age and holding responsible positions in life, to whom the telephone has always been, so to speak, a matter of course. It came into use before they were old enough to take special note of such matters, and it has always been at their command since they first had occasion for its services. But to people of longer memories it is still new—a thing almost of yesterday. Twelve or thirteen years of familiarity with its powers has not, with them, wholly destroyed the sense of novelty or the feeling of wonder which it first aroused. It is one of the commonplace miracles of the time which never ceases to impress the reflecting observer, especially if he can look back to the days when such an achievement had scarcely been dreamed of by the most daring inventor.

The litigations that have attended the introduction of commercial telephony would, it is stated, form a library of such extraordinary magnitude that it would seem that the matter must have been probed to its very bottom in the vast researches that have occupied the attention of the reading public for the last dozen years and that but little chance remains for further additions. Everybody has heard of the Bell telephone controversies, and in view of the immense utility of the invention of Mr. Bell, realized in the practical everyday use of his "phone" among countless thousands, a feeling of interest in the inventor must naturally be felt, and no doubt a corresponding desire to see his portrait.

Our picture, taken from the Mechanical News, shows Mr. Bell in the full prime of manhood, he being but forty-four years of age at the present time. He was born at Edinburgh, Scotland, March 3, 1847, and his inventions and discoveries are so universally known that but little need be here said regarding them. Both his father and grandfather were teachers of languages, etc., and came from good families. Mr. Alexander M. Bell, the father of the subject of this sketch, who is still living, long enjoyed a reputation in the field of philology and linguistics, being the deviser of ingenious systems of "word speech" and "visible speech." His intention was that his son should follow his profession and he early taught him the anatomy of the vocal organs, their functions and the different branches belonging to the science of vocal physiology. It is due to this early training that we of today enjoy the practical results of Mr. Bell's inventive genius. While he was still a child his father told him of the invention of an automaton speaking machine and in theory at least the present Bell telephone had its origin in this incident. In August, 1870, the Bell family emigrated to Canada, from whence, in April of the following year, Mr. Bell proceeded to Boston to carry on a series of experiments with his father's system of "visible speech" with which he was no doubt more or less successful. Mr. Bell had, however, long cherished the idea of speech transmission and when, in 1880, he removed to the south, locating in Washington, he practically abandoned everything else that his chosen field of investigation might not be interfered with. It was during the centennial year that the first real results that promised ultimate success were realized, and it was during and at the memorable exposition of 1876 that the public first had an opportunity of witnessing the marvelous speech machine. From this point the public has divided its time between watching the ultimate successful career of the famous inventor and the many arising litigations that at most only temporarily delayed the superior telephone system of to-day.

Weight of 141,120 Flies.

A southern grocer, being greatly annoyed by flies, distributed twenty-one sheets of sticky fly-paper about his store. In the evening he gathered them up and, noticing how much heavier they were, concluded to weigh them. He accordingly placed the twenty-one sheets with their loads of dead flies upon the scales; they tipped the beam at exactly seven pounds. Then he placed twenty-one fresh sheets on the scales and found that they weighed but four pounds and four ounces. Thus the flies were shown to weigh two pounds and twelve ounces. He next commenced to figure on the matter and found that there were twenty flies to each square inch of the fly paper; each sheet had 336 square inches and 6,720 flies; the twenty-one sheets containing in all 141,120 flies. Thus it is plain that one can easily ascertain the exact weight of a single fly; for if 141,120 flies weigh two pounds and twelve ounces it is easy to calculate what one would weigh.

HE IMITATED BRODIE

Frank McCarey Tried to Jump from Brooklyn Bridge.

STRUCK THE WATER LIKE A LOG

His Body Carried Off by the Tide, and Has Not Been Recovered.

Hundreds Saw the Act—McCarey Had Talked the Matter Over With Steve Brodie, and Had Been Laughed at—Half Intoxicated When He Leaped—Other Bridge-Jumping Tragedies.

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—Francis McCarey, a foolhardy fellow who has been boasting about this city and Brooklyn for several days that he would soon startle New York and let all the people know that he was a man of nerve, plunged off the East River Bride at 2:30 yesterday and was drowned. He was half drunk when he made the leap.

Some time before election McCarey, who had been an iron molder in the Lewis & Fowler car shops on Walworth street, Williamsburg, but who was discharged five weeks ago for inebriety, read that "Steve" Brodie had bet $3,500 on the result of the election. He asked some of his friends how Brodie accumulated so much money, and was informed that he got his start by jumping off the bridge.

That set McCarey thinking. He made up his mind to win fame and fortune by doing likewise. He confided his intentions to Mrs. McCuskie, with whom he boarded, and to Peter Kelly, a saloonkeeper of Walworth street. Some small Bets were made in Kelly's on the result.

On Thursday last McCarey went to Brodie's place on the Bowery and told him that his title as champion would be gone soon.

"I will jump off the bridge myself," he said, "and show the world that I am the jumper of America."

There were fully 300 promenaders on the bridge when McCarey, with his head bare, his coat and shoes off and the foolish confidence of overweening bravado evident in every movement, climbed laboriously out from the south side drive into the main cable, and with the parting exclamation, "Here goes!" leaped to death 150 feet below.

The falling body of the unfortunate man fell, tumbling over and over in its descent, until with a great splash it struck face downward the surface of the water and sank, leaving a smother of crimson tinted foam to mark the spot. Once, and once only, did he rise, the limbs stiffly sprawled out and the head thrust downward and forward.

Then the sank, and the crowds of watchers on the bridge and the searchers who put out from the shore in rowboats saw no further trace of the reckless jumper, whose death must have been instantaneous. The circumstances connected with the case are peculiar, and would appear inexplicable except upon the basis of insanity.

Since May, 1885, five men have jumped from the bridge. Professor Odlum, the first, killed himself. Brodie was the next. After him was Larry Donovan. A painter fell from the bridge, and was injured so badly that he died. A German named Poach jumped successfully, and some time afterward shot himself. A lovesick Staten Island youth got six months for jumping, and McCarey lost his life.

FAMINE-STRICKEN RUSSIA.

Count Tolstoi Says There Will be a Revolution—His Daughters' Generosity.

BERLIN, Nov. 23.—Count Lyof Tolstoi, the great Russian social reformer, has published an energetic demand that the government declare without delay whether the stock of grain is sufficient to last through next summer. Count Tolstoi advocates the purchase of corn in America in time to protect the country from famine and the terrible social disturbance that is certain to attend such a condition of affairs.

Tolstoi contends, from his own personal calculation, that the stock of grain will not be sufficient, and that the government reply guaranteeing enough to feed the people until the next harvest, if falsified, will lead to a revolution, in which Tolstoi says he will aid.

Count Tolstoi's daughters, Lations and Marie, have opened a free refectory for the famine-stricken near his chateau. All those persons who are in dire necessity here get a good meal, but they are forbidden to take food away with them

McGlynn on the Latest Ultimatum.

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—Cooper Union was packed last evening with thousands who had assembled to hear the reply of Dr. McGlynn to the offer which the Propaganda at Rome, through Archbishop Corrigan, had made him. Doctor McGlynn affirmed his conscientious belief in his anti-poverty doctrines, and declared his intention to adhere to them. If he is relieved from excommunication and suspension, he will submit to the judgment of Rome, but he will not do so under any other circumstances. His remarks were frequently interrupted by applause and cheers.

Prominent Mohawk Valley Citizen Dead.

CANAJOHARIE, N. Y., Nov. 23.—Hon. Joseph Spraker, a prominent and wealthy citizen of the Mohawk Valley, died yesterday, aged 82. The deceased was vice-president of the National Mohawk River Bank, and a director of the National Spraker Bank, which he founded. One brother, aged 93 years, the last of six, survives him.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

A SENSATIONAL ARREST

Contractor Shepherd, Missing for a Year, Returns, and is Held to Heavy Bail on a Charge.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 23.—The arrest of W. H. Shepherd, the wealthy contractor of this city, whose mysterious disappearance from home last January created a sensation throughout the country, has caused much excitement. He arrived here Saturday night, after eleven months' absence. His coming was awaited, but in some manner he eluded those who were watching for him and went quietly to his home.

At 5 o'clock yesterday morning he was aroused from his slumbers by three detectives. He was at once placed under arrest and taken to the office of Justice Davidson, where he was charged with alienating the affections of Mayor Sutton's wife. The prisoner refused to make any statement, and was held in $10,000 bail for trial.

The arrest has caused a decided sensation. For five months after Shepherd's disappearance it was thought that he was dead and had been the victim of foul play. One day in May last he startled the whole community by sending a telegram to a friend here, stating that he was alive and living in Indianapolis.

A friend went to that city and found Shepherd lying ill at one of the hotels. Then it began to be whispered that there was a woman in the case, which fact, as well as the cause of his long absence, has been made apparent.

IT MADE HER MAD.

A Woman Who Believed in the Words of a Fortune Telling Contrivance.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 23.—The Catholic priests of this city have come out strongly against a popular "talking board," or mechanical contrivance for telling fortunes, by which Mrs. Eugenia Carpenter, of Myrtle avenue, who placed faith in it, has lost her reason.

Although only 28 years old she has her share of trials. When quite young she married a drinking man who soon after deserted her. Of late she had been receiving the attentions of a young brakeman. A few weeks ago they quarrelled and he has not called since. Mrs. Carpenter grew melancholy.

She heard of the "talking board" and purchased one. With a friend two nights ago she plied the mysterious oracle with questions. Mrs. Carpenter learned, or thought she learned, that her husband would never return. This was as she supposed, but she looked again and read that she had also lost her brakeman's love.

Soon after she retired, complaining of a headache. Early the next morning a neighbor found her wandering in the street, her hair down her back, and clad only in her night clothes. Throwing his overcoat around her he led her home, where the physician who was summoned found her reason had flown.

The Striking Miners in France.

PARIS, Nov. 23.—The striking miners met yesterday to consider the proposition of the Government that three mining engineers, appointed by the State, should arbitrate upon the issues between the striking miners and their employers. The meeting was held at Lens, and in addition to the 132 delegates, an immense number of miners and their families were assembled in the place to learn the decision arrived at. Notwithstanding the advocacy of the Government proposition by several of the speakers, the delegates voted not to accept it. They insisted on nominating the arbitrators themselves, and chose five miners for that purpose. It is thought that there is very slight prospect of the mineowners accepting this form of arbitration.

Abducted Girl Found.

ROCKVILLE, Conn., Nov. 23.—The missing Ryan girl, 16 years old, who was enticed from her home in Middletown a few days ago by the notorious J. Wesley Edmonds, an agent for a number of New York dives, has been returned to her home in Middletown through the good detective work of Capt. Cady of the Rockville police. She was found in Hartford, having been deserted by the man with whom she left home. The girl says she received a number of letters from Edmonds, who wanted her to go to New York with him, saying that she would not have to work and could live on the fat of the land.

Think She Murdered Her Husband.

ALBANY, N. Y., Nov. 23.—The police think that Mrs. T. J. Finnegan is the murderer of her husband, who was found dead Saturday morning. His head was crushed in at the base of the skull, apparently with a blunt instrument. The wife said that her husband had fallen over a rocking chair, and that he would not allow her to call in a physician. Later an axe was found on the premises covered with blood and hair, and upon this evidence the coroner ordered the arrest of Mrs. Finnegan on suspicion of having committed the crime.

Shot Himself While Practicing.

LANCASTER, Pa., Nov. 23.—John Bowman, aged 12 years, accidentally shot himself in the abdomen yesterday afternoon, inflicting a fatal wound. Bowman, with a number of other boys, were shooting at a mark with a revolver.

MAY BE A LONG FIGHT

The Contest for the Republican National Convention.

CLAIMS ARE NOW BEING HEARD.

The Meeting Was Called to Order at 11 O'clock by Chairman Clarkson.

New York, San Francisco, Omaha, Detroit and Minneapolis Still Confident of Winning—The Metropolis Claims 22 Votes on the First Ballot—Detroit Men Have Assurances of Second Choice and Argue in Optimistic Vein.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 23.—Shortly after 11 o'clock this morning the National Republican Committee was called to order by Chairman Clarkson, and the great fight of selecting a place to hold the Republican National Convention of 1892 had begun.

The meeting is held in the big banquet hall of the Arlington Hotel, and all the available space is packed full of people, as the hearing of the claims of the various cities is open to the public.

Gen. Clarkson was made permanent chairman, and at this writing the credentials of the representatives are being presented. The vacancy from Pennsylvania caused by the resignation of Senator Quay may be filled by the State chairman, Watres, or Secretary Frank Leach. A contest is likely over the representation of Utah, which is claimed by both Judge McBride and Judge Bartch.

One hour is allowed each city for speeches in its behalf, but in several cases it is not thought likely that the hour will be consumed. A ballot will be taken this evening.

It is regarded as very likely that the contest will be a prolonged one and that a great number of ballots will have to be taken before the result is reached.

The claims of New York will be presented by Senator Hiscock, seconded by Senator Hawley, of Connecticut. Chauncey M. Depew will be unable to attend. The speakers for Minnesota well be Reading Clerk C. W. Johnson of the Senate and Senators Sabin and Washburn.

Ex-Governor Foraker will speak for Cincinnati. Secretary Foster refusing to take part in the fight because of his connection with the administration. Congressman McKenna will plead the cause of California, General Palmer and Congressman Allen will argue for Detroit, and Judge C. R. Scott for Omaha.

The Detroit committee report a very encouraging outlook. They have assurances of second choice and they think there is now no first choice and that New York, San Francisco and Cincinnati are out of the race, and in the event of New York dropping out they hope to gain strength from that quarter. San Francisco, they say, will, on account of the trans-Mississippi deal, favor Omaha if they see they cannot win.

Mr. H. De Young, of the San Francisco Chronicle, feels very much enthused over the prospects. The question of distance, he says, has entirely disappeared in the hands of the delegates, and the offers made by San Francisco and the cheap rates from all points of the country makes San Francisco a desirable city for the next convention.

The Minneapolis people feel certain of receiving not less than 14 votes on the first ballot and have no fear of falling below that number at any time. They have been putting out feelers among their Western competitors for a good second place, in case the fight becomes a long one, and in that event they hope to make a sortie on their enemies and come out victors. They consider Cincinnati their most dangerous rival, but do not think New York cares much for the convention.

The New York delegation give out as an estimate of their strength on the first ballot, of the 48 members of the committee, 22; on the second ballot, 27; while on the third they expect Cincinnati's strength to come to New York.

Reward Offered for Incendiaries.

CORTLAND, N. Y., Nov. 23.—The board of trustees of Homer offer a reward of $500 for the apprehension of the perpetrators of the recent incendiary fires at that place. The streets and suburbs were patrolled from darkness last evening until daylight this morning by members of the recently organized vigilance committee. The general impression is that these crimes have been the work of boys, to get the fire department out.

Jersey Baker Assigns.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Nov. 23.—The assignment was announced yesterday of John S. Taylor, the largest restaurateur and baker in this part of New Jersey. The liabilities will run up into the thousands, he being indebted to Groff, Trilley & Co., the most extensive grain and flour dealers hereabouts, to the extent of $8,000, and to other firms in proportionate amounts. His assets have not yet been announced.

THIRTEEN BITTEN.

A Mad Dog in Newark, N. J., Makes Work for Pasteur's Institute.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 23.—Thirteen men, women and children were bitten by the big Newfoundland dog which ran wildly through the eastern section of this city for two hours Saturday evening.

The animal, which no one seems to own, was finally stoned to death, and the wounds of all its victims were cauterized by druggists and physicians.

While most of them are only slightly hurt, one, Mrs. Liblein of Bowery street, had her clothes nearly torn off and her thigh badly lacerated by the brute's fangs.

She was attended by a physician, and all day yesterday had a high fever.

The advisibility of sending her to the Pasteur Institute in this city was discussed, and it was decided to wait until to-day for further developments.

The dog was first seen in Bowery street, running along and snapping at everything in its path. There were many people in the thoroughfare, but they broke and ran in every direction when the animal approached.

It first bit Michael O'Brien, an old man living in Polk street, in the thigh, and when shaken off ran to Michael Brown of Oxford street and lacerated his hand.

By this time the crowd was chasing the evidently rabid animal and endeavoring to kill it. By doubling and running through side streets it escaped until at Madison and Ferry streets a brick hurled from the crowd laid it low. Then it was stoned and clubbed to death by the excited crowd.

THREE ALLIANCE LOBBYISTS.

They Will Each Get $2,000 Per Year for Work at Washington.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Nov. 23.—The Supreme Council of the Farmers' Alliance, which adjourned at midnight Saturday night, determined to establish a legislative or lobbying council of three at Washington, each member to draw a salary of $2,000 per year.

The most important action was a resolution pledging the Alliance to stand by the decision of the February conference of the Federated Union. As the conference will declare for independent political action this resolution practically pledges the support of the Alliance to the People's Party. Thirty delegates to this conference were elected, but they only have 26 votes. The third party people have a big majority in the delegation.

The First Alliance Boycott.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Nov. 23.—The boycott brought about by General Lecturer Wright Saturday is the first official boycott ever established by the Farmers' Alliance. He presented the case of the Rochester, N. Y., locked-out garment workers, who were in the employ of the 27 combined firms at that point, and declaring the purpose of the Alliance to patronize the co-operative store established by the 13,000 locked-out garment makers at Rochester. The adoption of this resolution is also the first act of co-operation between the Alliance and the Knights of Labor.

Brought the Body from Mexico.

CLARION, Pa., Nov. 23.—The body of Daniel Yengling has been brought here by his brother. Yengling was superintendent of the Guggenheim Mining Company at Monterey City, Mexico, and was murdered a week ago by three discharged Mexican employees. The assassins entered his sleeping apartment, and after securely binding and gagging William Davis, his roommate, attacked Yengling, stabbing him 23 times. Yengling fought desperately, but was overpowered. When found in the morning Davis was still bound and Yengling was alive, but died soon after. The authorities have taken the matter up, and 14 Mexicans are now in jail awaiting identification.

Dillon and O'Brien Talk.

DUBLIN, Nov. 23.—John Dillon and William O'Brien addressed a large audience yesterday at Mitchelstown. Mr. Dillon declared that 1,400 evicted families were still dependent on the contributions of the friends of the Irish cause for support in this wintry weather, and they were shut out from the benefit of the Paris fund by the shameless treaty which John Redmond and his supporters had entered into. William O'Brien declared that Timothy Harrington and his party had made the National League a thing of the past. The country had only subscribed £2 for the League in four weeks.

Blizzard in Kansas.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Nov. 23.—A blizzard is raging over the whole State of Kansas. Last night it was snowing heavily, and the wind was still blowing almost a hurricane, driving the snow and sleet into drifts in every direction. Reports come in slowly from Kansas, as the wires are down in every direction. Trains on the Union Pacific, Santa Fe, and Southern Kansas roads are from three to five hours late. It is feared that the roads will undergo a complete blockade.

Wreck on the New York Central.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 23.—The fast Eastbound express on the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad, which leaves this city at 8 p. m., ran into the rear end of a freight train about a mile and a half east of Canastota shortly after 9 o'clock yesterday evening. Engineer Thomas E. Park, of the express, and his fireman, Edward Baird, were badly injured but not fatally. The engine of the express was wrecked. The wreck took fire and two of the express cars were burned.

Stabbed by Armenians.

LYNN, Mass., Nov. 23.—In a street quarrel Saturday night, two men, John Comer and William Cross, morocco dressers, were badly cut by a party of Armenian morocco workers. Cross received severe cuts in the face, and Comer was stabbed six times around the back, neck and head, but neither is fatally injured. Although pursued by a large crowd their assailants are still at large.

SPEAKERSHIP CHAT

A Close Contest Between Messrs. Mills and Crisp.

NEW YORK VOTES MAY DECIDE IT

What Springer, McMillan, et al. Depend Upon to Give Them a Chance.

They Would Like to See a Prolonged Fight Between the Leaders—Farmers' Alliance Men Will Probably Support Colonel Livingstone—Mr. Springer and the Ohioans—The Contest for Clerk of the House.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 23.—Within the past two days an impression has arisen that New York votes will settle the Speakership contest, and the trips of Messrs. Mills, Crisp and Springer to the metropolis have done much to strengthen this impression. Whether it is true or not that the delegates from New York will vote as a unit, the fact that the vote of one State is likely to determine the issue shows how close and uncertain the fight is at present.

The friends of Mr. Mills maintain their confidence, saying that in any event he will secure enough of the unpledged votes to give him the nomination in caucus.

There is no doubt that the chances of Springer, McMillan, Hatch and Bynum depend largely upon a prolonged contest between Mills and Crisp. Of the 236 votes that will be cast in the caucus on the first ballot, in the neighborhood of 150 will be cast for Mr. Mills or Mr. Crisp. Hence, if a nomination is made on the second or third ballot, these minor candidates will have little opportunity to form combinations.

They are, therefore, encouraging as much as possible a protracted contest between the two leaders. If this bitterness can be fostered, and it has already been partially developed, it is possible that neither of the two leaders mentioned will secure the caucus nomination.

However, certain people who are on the right side of the ropes and know exactly how the fighting is being done, are pinning their faith to Crisp, one of these saying this morning: "Crisp will be Speaker. Write that down and let it stand."

There seems to be some misunderstanding about the Ohio delegation. The friends of Mr. Mills and Mr. Crisp both claim ten votes in that State, which has only fourteen altogether in the Democratic caucus. Mr. Springer, it is stated, has in his pocket letters from two of these assuring him of their support, which shows that there is a mistake somewhere.

Mr. Springer has always been especially friendly to the Ohio Democrats, and he thinks that this will be reciprocated when the break comes in the caucus. He was chairman of the committee sent to Cincinnati in 1888 to investigate the alleged irregularities of United States Marshal Lot Wright in the October election, prior to the Presidential election in that year, and whenever the subject has been brought up on the floor of the House in hot political debates Mr. Springer has always defended the Cincinnati and Ohio Democracy.

The report from Indianapolis that the Farmers' Alliance Congressmen will flock by themselves has not produced any startling effect upon the candidates already in the field. This fact has been foreshadowed by recent utterances of President Polk and Jerry Simpson, and hence its effect has been largely discounted.

Neither Mr. Mills nor Mr. Crisp are liable to suffer thereby, it having been conceded that if the Alliance members supported any straight Democrat it would be Mr. Hatch, of Missouri. Having declared that they will support one of their number, it is probable that that individual will be Colonel Livingstone, of Georgia.

There are only four Alliance members credited in the unofficial list, although there are some 40 members who have been elected through Alliance influences. From 12 to 26 of these are expected to follow the Alliance leaders rather than participate in the Democratic caucus, but no advantage will be gained by them in that way.

Next to the Speakership the warmest contest has heretofore been over the Clerkship of the House. This contest has been considerably simplified by the Governor of Maryland appointing ex-Congressman Gibson to succeed to the vacancy caused by the death of the late Senator Wilson of that State.

Mr. Gibson has been one of the prominent candidates for the clerkship and divided with John B. Clark of Missouri, a large proportion of the Southern vote. Mr. Gibson having notified the Governor of Maryland that he will accept the appointment, is therefore voluntarily retired from the race. Although his Senatorial term may not be a long one, it has some advantages connected with it. He will receive the salary for the full time elapsing since the death of Senator Wilson, which occurred nearly a year ago.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

Edward R. Wright, general agent in Brooklyn of the Equitable Life Assurance Society of New York, committed suicide last night.

Hon. John Nix, M. P., addressed the Boston Central Branch of the Irish Federation last night on the condition of affairs in Ireland.

Olivet Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, was damaged to the extent of $5,000 yesterday by fire, which originated in a defective heater.

Fully 20,000 people witnessed the Yale football eleven defeat Harvard by a score of 10 to 0, in an exciting contest at Springfield, Mass., Saturday.

WAR IN CONGO.

Villages Attacked by the State for Refusing to Furnish Men.

BOSTON, Nov. 23.—A letter from the Rev. Dr. Small says that the Congo State is making war upon the natives of the Upper Congo. Several months ago the government expedition for the suppression of slavery started up the river under command of Mr. Vankerckhoven. He was instructed to punish all men engaged in the slave trade, and to enlist men from each town in the Congo State service.

Two large steamers filled with troops went up the river, intending to put a stop to slave raids on the Lomami and Aruwimi rivers. Many of the large towns, including Chambiri, Bolobo, Irebu and others, refused to supply the men required of them. They said they could not understand why foreigners should not only claim the ownership of the country, but should also demand the services of the ablest and strongest men.

They consequently ignored the commands of the State, sent their women and children away, brought out their powder, guns, spears and knives, and fought desperately against each company of soldiers sent to attack them. Of course they were defeated in every instance. One of the large steamers, however, was pierced in more than a dozen places, and some wounds were inflicted upon the State soldiery; but the military training of the Soudanese and Zanzibari and their superior weapons left no hope for the natives.

At Bolobo fully 100 natives were killed and 60 strong fellows were taken as a war indemnity. The people of Irebu fled into the jungle after a dozen of their warriors had been killed, and their large and flourishing town, covering an area of about three square miles, was burned, and nothing was left of it but blackened grass, burnt sticks and fallen trees. The Congo State soldiers took away fowls, goats, sheep, bananas and all other provisions they could find, and there is now a scarcity of food among the people. The wildest excitement prevails all over the country, and the natives are nursing a spirit of savage revenge against the European residents.

A Barbed Wire Trust.

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—A suit instituted against the Elmer Manufacturing Company of Newburgh, N. Y., by the Columbia Patent Company of this city, for infringement of patents, has brought out the first authentic announcement of a "barbed wire trust," composed of the leading barbed wire manufacturers of the country, including the Washburn-Moen Company of Worcester, Mass., and the Olivers of Pennsylvania. The Columbia Company claim to own practically all patents covering the manufacture of barbed wire, and machinery used in manufacturing it, and have instituted suits against small concerns in all parts of the country for infringement thereon.

Actor Florence's Funeral.

NEW NEW, Nov. 23.—The funeral of William J. Florence was held from St. Agnes' Church at 10 o'clock this morning. The following were the pall bearers: Edwin Booth, John C. Heckshcr, William N. Vitas, A. M. Palmer, Clayton McMichael, C. J. Foaring and John Russel Young. The burial was in the Florence plot in Greenwood.

A Proclamation by Fonseca.

RIO JANEIRO, Nov. 23.—President Fonseca has issued a proclamation stating that the elections for Congress will be held on February 29, and that Congress will meet on May 3, 1892. He also announces that among the reforms which he desires to see adopted is an amendment to the constitution establishing an independent judiciary, and safeguards for the President's veto, as well as a limitation to the powers of Congress, and a reduction in the number of representatives.

The Influenza in Hamburg.

HAMBURG, Nov. 23.—Great dismay exists in this city over the spread of influenza, which is fatal in many instances. The number of deaths in the past week was 280 above the average, and there is no present sign of an abatement of the epidemic. The symptoms are said to be in many respects similar to those of the grippe. As to the origin of the disease some claim that it was brought here from Russia, and others from America. The authorities incline to the Russian theory, and there is talk of establishing a quarantine against Russian emigrants coming to Hamburg.

Cotton Planters Organize.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Nov. 23.—The planters of Sea Island cotton in this State have organized the Sea Island Protective Union, the object being to secure the passage by Congress of a tariff on long staple cotton. Similar unions will be organized in Georgia and Florida. During the past summer an effort was made to form a combination of Carolina planters to prevent the sale of seed to Georgia and Florida planters, but this failed, and the present "combine" seems to be the outcome of the former effort.

Fatal Railroad Collision.

JACKSONVILLE, Ill., Nov. 23.—Yesterday the express on the Jacksonville & Southeastern Road, bound for St. Louis from Chicago, collided with an engine taking water at a water tank on the main line. The fireman of the express jumped in time to save himself, but Charles Hairgrave, the engineer, was fatally crushed between the engine and tender. The passengers were considerably shaken up, but none were hurt. The accident was caused by the engine taking water on the express' time. The crew of the engine escaped unhurt.

Anti-Civil Service League.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 23.—An organization to be known as the "Anti-Civil Service League" has been organized in Washington, with C. Solon Stevenson as president, Robert X. Russell as secretary, and L. D. Westbrook as treasurer. The object of the organization, which is non-partisan, is the repeal of the Civil Service law.

THE PRESS PRINTS FOR ALL.

It has become necessary for THE PRESS to again disclaim all personal indorsement of any expressions of political sentiment, or criticisms of municipal officers or candidates, that appear in these columns in the form of communications or interviews. They are given for what they are worth, as merely the assertions or opinions of certain individuals.

This paper is open to the people, and is open to an expression of the opinions of all sides. The tickets of both political parties, also, are to be found above.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—Moy's Hot Soda—None Better.

—Israel Jones has been engaged as janitor to the new Park club.

—Howard Woolston badly sprained a wrist in a game of foot-ball, Saturday.

—The boys that belong to the Acorn social club of Somerset street ought to be more careful and not yell at the people that pass by on Sunday.

—A dispatch this afternoon states that a big fire is raging in Brooklyn and that the engines are helpless to prevent its spread, as there is not a drop of water in the mains.

—Another drawing card has just been announced by Williams the druggist. At his West Front street store he is selling cod-liver oil emulsion, with hypophosphates, at the low price of 50 cents a bottle.

—James McGinley, an aged resident of East Third street, corner of Church, was knocked down by Michael Weber's horse, on the street, Saturday. His head was cut, and he was insensible some time, but is recovering.

—C. E. Kellogg, Plainfield's veteran milk dealer, has purchased of J. B. Kline his creamery business at 221 North avenue. Mr. Kellogg needs no words of commendation from THE PRESS. He has served the people faithfully for 22 years with the purest of milk in full measure.

—To-night at 8, the Bible normal class will meet in the primary department of the First Baptist church. "A review of Genesis, with an Introductory Study to Exodus" will be the lesson for this evening. A Bible reading will be also given on the book of Genesis. Those interested in Bible study will be welcome, either as visitors or members.

—The removal of all the fences on the west side of Grove street from Prospect place up to Mercer avenue has greatly beautified the neighborhood. Now that the days are past when cows and horses drifted whither they listed in the streets, there is no reason why the ugly fences should not be generally abolished—excepting, of course, places where the man next door keeps chickens.

TO BREAK HER FATHER'S WILL.

A Contest in Prospect that Will Revive the Story of an Eccentric Life.

Exclusively in THE PRESS, the other day, was told the fact that Mrs. Theresa Radin of this city had begun proceedings to break the will of her father, Charles J. Deferriere of Wampsville, N. Y., by which she, his only child, is disinherited. The property in dispute does not exceed in value $8,000 or $10,000.

The story is a most interesting one. A nephew, Charles Cobb, lived at Wampsville, near Mr. Deferriere, and to him the old gentleman left the whole of his property by a will dated 1860. He stated in the will that he considered his daughter properly provided for by a sum of $50,000, which had been set aside for her use at the time of his divorce, and given in trust to Edward A. Whetmore of Utica. Mrs. Radin says the deed of trust was set aside and she never received anything of this 50,000 and knows nothing of it. Mr. Whetmore is dead.

Mr. Deferriere was a very eccentric character, ank Mrs. Radin alleges that the nephew used undue influence to cause her father to leave the property to him. The case will be tried in Oneida on Dec. 19. She says that witnesses will then testify that her father had frequently said he had made another will, giving the property to her. Mrs. Radin is about 52 years old, and it is said that he has inherited some of the eccentricties of her family. About seven years ago she was married to Philip Radin, a carpenter of Scotch Plains. Five years later they separated, and she has since resided in this city. She has an income of about $165 a month from property left by her mother, in trust of a lawyer of New York city named Clopton. Under the will she receives only the income of the estate, and the property goes to Clopton at Mrs. Radin's death. The income is derived from dock property in New York.

Mrs. Radin's father was a high liver, but his father, Col. Angel Deferriere, kept him furnished with money. He soon spent his portion, and then his mother helped him with more money. Charles married Miss Theresa Bedloe, who came of a wealthy New York family, her father owning Bedloe's Island. She was an aunt of the Bedloes of New York. She brought him about $200,000. They went to Utica, and their summers were spent at Saratoga. Mrs. Deferriere brought suit for divorce, and her husband made no appearance. He had spent $50,000 of her fortune. Charles drew on his mother and spent several years in Paris. He made two trips to France. When his mother died he took all her property and went to live on the old place near Wampsville.

He was a familiar figure in Oneida. A Frenchman of the old school, none could outdo him in courtesy. In his younger days he had been a decided dandy and an expert horseman. In later years he drove a blooded horse in a light-colored, two-wheeled cart. His dress was always striking, black silk hat, high collar, with large tie and black frock coat. Every school child knew him. For fifteen years he had lived with his housekeeper, Mrs. Curtis. She went to a neighbor's, and on her return found Deferriere dead in his chair.

Ten Years in State Prison.

George Stiles, John Allen, and Thomas Hill, the New York burglars who were caught at Elizabeth with revolvers and masks and a kit of cracksmen's tools in their possession after plundering the store of Henry Gessner of Linden, were sentenced to ten years each in State prison, Saturday.

Thanksgiving Day Sport.

The members of the Acorn Athletic club will have a cross-country run, Thanksgiving Day, for a solid silver medal. They will start at 10 o'clock from their rooms, 11 Somerset street, and will go to the paper mills at Scotch Plains and return. Frank Meeker will be referee.

BY THE WAY.

—A cake, candy and pie sale will be held in the Y. W. C. T. U. rooms, corner of North avenue and Peace street, all day Wednesday.

—The lecture of Miss Alice Azeez, a native of Syria, which was postponed from last Monday evening, will be given to-night, in the W. C. T. U. rooms, at 8.

—Seventy-five members of Franklin and Somerset councils, Jr. O. U. A. M., attended service at the M. E. church last night, and heard a fine sermon by pastor Mitchell.

—Reform Hall will be the only place of amusement open Thanksgiving Day. Cushman, the humorist, vocalist and elocutionist, will give one of his inimitable entertainments.

—Otto Weir, who stole a horse blanket from the stable of Mrs. Williams at Westfield, pleaded guilty, at Elizabeth, Saturday, and was sentenced to State prison for a term of one year.

—A cake sales will be held under the auspices of the Young Ladies' Mission band of the First Baptist church, in the class rooms, to-morrow afternoon, from 2 to 6. This is a fine opportunity to get a home-made Thanksgiving cake.

—Let disbelievers in spontaneous combustion scoff no longer. A well-known Plainfielder awoke at 3 o'clock Sunday morning to find his house filled with smoke, and in danger of burning up. Flame had generated in a heap of oily rags thrown into a corner of the cellar Saturday afternoon. A few buckets of water put out the fire.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

A Mission Night With the Baptists.

The missionary song service held last evening in the Park Avenue Baptist church was well attended, the church and part of the chapel being filled. The missionary committee of the Y. P. S. C. E. joined with the music committee of the church in arranging a programme which was no less attractive than previous song services and yet was missionary in character. Those whose hearts were filled with missionary zeal, and those who care for none of these things, joined in singing the grand old missionary hyms; and surely all must have caught some inspiration which they had not before. All were glad to welcome Mrs. Spicer again, and she sang two beautiful solos. Very sweet was the anthem by the choir at the offertory. Would that the missionary, Mrs. R. M. Luther, who made the address, could have spoken with the voice of a trumpet and reached every ear in the city of Plainfield. It was such a talk as one is rarely privileged to hear. She told of what she had seen, not what she had read; of what her own personal experience had been, for she is the daughter of one whose name is known and loved to this day by every Burmah and Karen Christian. She herself was born in Burmah and has passed most of her life among the Karens, whom she lovingly calls "My own people".

Strange Emma Day.

Another chapter in the story of suicidal Emma T. Day, the Summit firebug who twice attempted self-destruction in Newark on Wednesday, was developed by her uncle, Saturday. He visited police headquarters in Newark to ask about the girl, and said she had been living with him at Blairstown for a year and had behaved well, but at times was not quite right in her head, he thought. A short time ago she answered a matrimonial advertisement in a New York paper, and began a correspondence with a man who sent her $5 to enable her to meet him. It was with this money she left Blairstown. He did not know whether she met her correspondent or not.

A Plainfielder Makes an Assignment.

Samuel E. Birdsall, whose residence is at 116 Broadway, Plainfield, and his partner John E. Jones, composing the firm of Birdsall & Jones, ship chandlers and grocers at 203 West street, New York, made an assignment Saturday to Andrew J. Newbery, giving preferences for $7,735, the largest being to the First National Bank of Jersey City, $4,500; New York National Exchange Bank, $3,000. They were formerly in the same line of business at Boston, and began in New York in 1881. They formerly claimed to have about $10,000 in vessel property. Besides the general assignment of the firm the partners each made an individual assignment.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Ass Collier is at Providence, R. I., for a few days.

Ellsworth McGrey, of Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, is visiting Mr. and Mrs. J. Hervey Doane.

The wedding of James McCarthy and Miss Mary McGlynn is announced for Thursday afternoon.

The pulpit of the Crescent Avenue church was occupied yesterday morning and evening, by the Rev. F. F. Ellinwood, D. D., secretary of the Presbyterian board of foreign missions.

Mrs. Fred R. Haberle of 31 West Fifth street, has gone to Brooklyn to attend the funeral of her father, Robert H. Falls. Only last week she attended the funeral of her brother, Richard Falls, at Brooklyn.

Mr. and Mrs. William Rogers Chapman, of Fordham Heights, will give a large musicale on Saturday evening. Among those who will appear are: Mme. Ritter-Goetze, Miss Dora Becker, Miss Ines Carusi and Miss Olive Fremstad. Mr. Chapman is the leader of the Melopoia of this city.

The artists, twenty in number, having studios in the Manhattan building, corner Fifteenth street and Fifth avenue, gave a well-attended studio reception Saturday afternoon and evening. Among the studios are those of George Wharton Edwards, of this city, William Bradford, Thomas B. Craig, J. Wells Champney, Granville Perkins, Agnes D. Abbott, A. M. R.; Douglas Hamilton and L. Fagan.

A delightful "stag" dinner was served at the Union County Country club-house, Saturday night. It was the first members' dinner yet held, and was a complete success. Covers were laid for 75, and at 7:30 the feast began. Dinner was served at a large horseshoe-shaped table, and was a shining example of what the club steward can do. In the absence of president Runkle, who was kept away by a death in the family, first vice-president Rowland Cox presided. Speeches were made by Mayor Gilbert, W. L. Saunders, Mr. Peckham of Westfield, S. St. J. McCutchen, and Mr. Ritchie of Trenton, father-in-law of Mr. Fisk.

A Warrenville Farmer's Death.

William Brown, a farmer at Warrenville, fell from the top of a stack of cornstalks, last Wednesday, and broke his back. He lingered in agony till Saturday afternoon, when he died. Doctors Zieglio, Matthews and Davis attended him. He was 35 years old. His widow and two children are in destitute circumstances.

—Watson Whitney has transferred to William Hunter land on the south line of Leland avenue. The date of deed is November 16, 1891, and the consideration $225.

NO. 6 EAST FRONT STREET.

One Man Accused of All of Plainfield's Woes, Even to Carrying Her Street Railway in His Pocket.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—A gentleman desiring to enjoy the comforts of a country home, and at the same time have all the modern improvements, comes to Plainfield and calls on a firm of real estate agents and states his wants. They of course have just the house he is looking for, but it only has plumbing in for gas. They explain how easily electric lights and water can be put in. The gentleman is satisfied, and arrangements are made for one year with the privilege of buying.

He then moves in and has electric lights and water connected.

The first bill he gets is for gas at $2.50 per thousand. He looks to see where he shall go to pay it, and it says: E. R. Pope, No. 6 East Front street.

His next bill is for electric lights. He looks to see where he shall go to pay that and finds it's to E. R. Pope, No. 6 East Front street.

The next bill is for water. It says pay it to E. R. Pope, No. 6 East Front street.

At the end of the month his servant desiring to deposit some of her wages, asks the gentleman if he knows where the savings bank is. He says "No! but I will inquire." Upon inquiring he is directed to go to E. R. Pope, No. 6 East Front street.

Again, he is desirous of sending a postal order. He goes to the post-office and procures one. In looking it over to see that it's correct, he finds it's signed E. R. Pope, Postmaster.

He says to himself "What does all this mean? One man power!"

Having been previously informed by the real estate agents that there was to be a street railroad established here, he makes inquiries and asks what has become of the railroad. He is quietly informed that Mr. E. R. Pope, No. 6 East Front street, has got it in his pocket, and declines to allow it to be put down until his demands are complied with.

He also asks what it is about bonding the city. The explanation he gets is that the present water-works company, having their works partially established here without any method of disposing of the waste water and sewerage; and the people not being inclined to take the water to any great extent without there is some means provided for disposing of the sewrage; and the company being aware that a system of sewerage is not a paying institution, they are shaping things for the next common council so that the city will have to bear the burden of putting in the sewers.

Not desiring to have a mortgage on his house, the tenant decides not to purchase, and leaves Plainfield. S. G. S.

Catarrh in New England.

Ely's Cream Balm gives satisfaction to every one using it for catarrhal troubles.—G. K. Mellor, druggist, Worcester, Mass.

I believe Ely's Cream Balm is the best article for catarrh ever offered the public.—Bush & Co., druggists, Worcester, Mass.

An article of real merit.—C. P. Alden, druggist, Springfield, Mass.

Those who use it speak highly of it.—Geo. A. Hill, druggist, Springfield, Mass.

Cream Balm has given satisfactory results.—W. P. Draper, druggist, Springfield, Mass.

They'll be Pleased to Show You Around.

A cold wave is predicted, so you should take time by the forelock and pick out the carriage robes and rugs you will need, before the elegant assortment at L. M. French's establishment on Somerset street is all sold. While there take a look also at the fine line of harness, whips and other handsome furnishings he is offering. It is a pleasure for his salesmen to show you his fine goods, and they consider it no trouble even if you do not want to buy right away. As to carriages—there is no emporium in the State that has that has such a display as at L. M. French's building stretching from 16 to 22 Somerset street, and four stories high.

A PLAINFIELD DELEGATE'S REPORT.

Interesting Review of the Great W. C. T. U. Convention at Boston.

The eighteenth convention of the National W. C. T. U. held in the "Modern Athens of America", from Nov. 13 to 18, inclusive, was acknowledged by everyone to be the grandest and most glorious known to this country, or to the world. The World's W. C. T. U. convention held in connection with the National brought together prominent women from all over the globe, and it was worth traveling from one end of the continent to the other to listen to such wonderful women as Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset of England.

The opening session of that notable day, Nov. 13, witnessed a scene never to be forgotten by those present. Tremont Temple was packed to its utmost capacity, and hundreds of unfortunate ticket-holders wandered around the corridors or vibrated between the Temple and the Park street and Bromfield street churches (where overflow meetings addressed by noted speakers were held), vainly hoping to gain entrance.

The noble strains of the organ, the exquisite vocal music as conducted by Mrs. Harris, the "White Ribbon Prima Donna", the beautiful silken banners, the mottoes and emblems, the profuse and artistic floral decorations, all added to the attractiveness of the occasion and the hour; but the great centres of attraction were always and to every one "America's Queen" and "England's Titled Lady". Of commanding presence, yet gracious and gentle in every movement and utterance, Lady Henry Somerset, a cynosure of all eyes, shared equal honor with Miss Willard. And what shall I say of "America's Queen"—the peerless Frances, leader of the World's and the National Unions? What wondrous inspiration there is in the poise of her classic head, in the very attitude of her figure drawn up to its fullest height as she stands when delivering her annual address, and, through the five business days of the convention, the controlling power of that vast assemblage! And as the crisp, ringing sentences, pointed with ready wit, follow promptly the decisive rap of her gavel, hushing her vast audience into silence and holding it in sympathetic control, is it surprising that statesmen pronounce her the greatest American parliamentarian?

Bringing, as did the world's delegates, reports of the progress of reforms from almost every know quarter of the universe; inspired by the presence and the words of such women as Mary Clement Leavitt, "Round-the-world-missionary"; the Crusaders, Mothers Stewart and Thompson; the bright little Japanese lawyer Tel Sona from the Mikado's Empire; Mrs. Frances E. Harper, organizer for the colored people, with her true orator's magnetism; Anna Gordon, (Miss Willard's right hand); Mrs. Hannah Whatall Smith of London; Mrs. Woodbridge with her magnificent voice and perfect enunciation, Mrs. Lathrop, Mrs. Benjamin, Clara Hoffman, Mrs. Bottome, Caroline Buell, Matilda Carse, Madame Angelina of Italy, Mrs. Bishop Simpson, and others: Boston, though the acknowledged "Hub of the Universe", must have left the impress, the power, and the elevating influence, of such an organization in its midst, and every representative delegate and visitor must have received a spiritual blessing and an inspiration which should be productive of better and more faithful work for all the years to come.

SUSAN B. ADAMS,
Press Supt., W. C. T. U. Work.

DUNELLEN DOINGS.

Interesting Items from a Thriving Borough, by Our Own Correspondent.

Yesterday was set aside by the members of the Jr. O. U. A. M. to attend church services in a body. William G. Holton Council and Friendship Council joined and went to the First Presbyterian church in the evening. About 75 members met at the Council rooms in the new school hall in Dunellen and marched over to the church. The Rev. A. I. Martine made a very able address.

Miss Maud Benton and Miss Susie Peck, who were delegates to the State convention of the Y. P. S. C. E. which was held at Newark, read their reports to the congregation at the Presbyterian church last evening.

Ed Covey left Dunellen yesterday, to take up his residence in New York State, near Albany.

The friends of A. J. Reddin of Tarrytown, formerly of this place, will be sorry to learn of the death of his oldest son, Alfred. While living here the boy visited some of his schoolmates in New Market and while playing a large Newfoundland dog jumped upon him, knocking the boy to the ground. Upon examining his injuries, it was found that a hole had been cut through his upper lip, but as it was supposed that it had been done by the dog's nail nothing was thought of it at the time. Mr. Reddin examined the animal, which belonged to Mr. Hallock, and was satisfied that he was not mad. A week ago the boy began to show signs of hydrophobia, and after two days' suffering he died in great agony.

The Rev. A. J. Cubberly of New Market is visiting friends in Ohio.

Last evening as the good church people were going home from church the electric lights went out, leaving the town in darkness. They were afterwards lighted, but were of no benefit to pedestrians on their way from church. This is not the only time they go out. Very late in the evening they are often out for hours. Are the tax-payers going to pay for this kind of light?

IT'S DILL'S TURN NOW.

The Conduct of Stirling's ex-Parson is Being Investigated by a Committee of Two Presbyteries.

A. Cushing Dill, as he signs himself, was first brought to wide-spread public notice through the columns of THE PRESS. He was then parson of Stirling, a little village almost adjoining North Plainfield. The story of his tribulations as shepherd of the Stirling church flock was to some proper extent printed in these columns. It was said that he boarded with Miss Catharine Boyd, who eventually deeded him her house and continued to live with him, which shocked the sensitive Stirlingites. Then, too, the young men said, pastor Dill took to calling on the young ladies and reading poetry to them. This angered the young men, and one night, while he was calling on a young woman, the boys treated his horse to a coat of paint in red, white and blue, which the parson said took six pounds of lard and the services of two female parishioners and himself two days to remove.

After THE PRESS' story had been copied and enlarged in the press of the entire country, Mr. Dill called at this office and requested that the name of the paper's informant be given him. This was, of course, refused. He afterwards wrote and demanded the name, closing his letter with these words:

My four lawyers, representing as many firms, are awaiting your reply.

However, he and his four lawyers, representing as many firms, received no reply, and that is the last THE PRESS heard from him. But, as already told in these columns, he had the young men who painted his horse, arrested, indicted and fined. Now they have turned the tables on him.

Saturday a committee of five, appointed by the New Jersey and Orange Presbytery to inquire into the rumors circulated about him, met at the Presbyterian church in Summit. Throughout the day they sat with closed doors, examining many witnesses.

The committee consisted of the Rev. Theodore S. White, chairman, pastor of the Central Presbyterian church of Summit; Theodore Lytel, a Morristown lawyer; the Rev. Albert Erdman of the South Street Presbyterian church of Morristown; Jeremiah Baker, a layman, and the Rev. Dr. Green of the Orange Presbyterian church. The latter was the only member not present.

The Rev. Theodore S. White managed the affair in a successful manner so far as secrecy was concerned. He requested the reporters to remove their presence from the chapel yard. He threatened other things which he did not do. He thought after he looked over his field of proposed action and contented himself with thinking. The committee sat as a grand jury, and even Parson Dill was not allowed to be present, nor to be represented at the meeting.

Late Saturday evening the meeting adjourned without having reached a decision. Their verdict, which will be a sealed one, goes to the Presbytery at an early day, and if a true bill is found Mr. Dill will have ten days in which to answer and prepare for trial.

It is said that among those who testified before the committee Saturday, were the young men arrested for painting the parson's horse. They testified to what they knew about the actions and moral character of Dill, as did Wm. Euston, of Freedom, Mr. Dill's old parish. Two women were also examined. Mrs. Alexander Cooper, whose husband is insane, for which state of affairs Mr. Dill is alleged to be in a measure responsible, was examined as to what Dill had to do with her husband's arrest for assaulting a young girl.

Miss Carrie Halliday, whom Parson Dill described as "a maiden of several summers whose gray hairs peeped from beneath her wig," testified to her relations with the pastor, who had among other things told her of a certain garden in wicked Paris. Dill said he had simply quoted from one of Henry Ward Beecher's sermons. Depositions were put in evidence from other former female parishioners of Dill.

This is the gist of all the evidence produced. Young Gray Torrey introduced the affidavits of all the young men who confessed to their part in the White Cap raid. They claim that these confessions were fraudulently obtained. The feud between the Dill and anti-Dill factions is becoming very bitter.

Dill is now taking a course at the University of the City of New York and pursuing a post graduate course at the Union Theological Seminary. His successor in Stirling is doing good work at the munificent salary of $5 a week.

One of the anti-Dill faction explains that their only motive now is to depose and humble their former pastor. The matter is not yet ended, and developments of a highly sensational character, it is said, may be expected at an early day.

A Thanksgiving Appeal.

The Relief association asks for donations of poultry, vegetables, fruit, etc., for the Thanksgiving dinners which as usual are to be distributed among the poor of Plainfield. Last year eighty-two families were provided for, and this year it is hoped that the number may be increased. Gifts should be sent on either Tuesday afternoon or Wednesday morning next, to the Relief rooms, 45 West Second street.

CAMERA PRIZE WINNERS.

Interesting Exhibition of Views by Local Amateur Photographers.

The fourth annual exhibition of the Plainfield Camera club opened Saturday night, at the club rooms, and will continue through Dec. 5. A charming collection of views has been artistically arranged by the various exhibitors, and a delightful evening may be spent in examing them.

The committee on prizes—Messrs. Guillermo Thorn, William Montfort and Franklin Smith—have made the following awards:

Landscapes—First prize, Harold Serrell ("The Bridge"). Second, Curt S. Gotthell ("The Old Mill").

Portraits—First prize, J. Hervey Doane (Mother and child). Second, Harold Serrell (child).

Marines—First prize, Harold Serrell. Second, S. C. Crane ("Return of the Fishermen").

Interiors—First and second prizes, George H. Babcock.

Animals—First and second prizes, C. S. Gotthell ("His the Spoils" and "Chewing the Rag").

Composition and grouping—First prize, J. Hervey Doane ("Boys Digging in Cedar Brook"). Second, Harold Serrell ("Luncheon in the Mountains").

Instantaneous work—First prize, C. S. Gotthell ("The Commuters' Friend"). Second, Harold Serrell (The Ducks' Outing").

Hand camera work—First prize, Harold Serrell. Second, Clinton Crane.

G. Harry Squires received first honorable mention for his photo-engravings.

Harry Coward, John E. Stewart and T. E. Hazell deserve great credit for their displays, which would probably have won prizes had they been entered in time.

Mr. Babcock has a fine sample of "all night work". The negative was a flash-light, and the picture was printed by lamp-light.

There are excellent examples of all styles of work.

Plans of the B. and O.

The statement has been published that the Baltimore and Ohio railroad has obtained a terminus in Jersey City in order to make through connections from the South to New England points. It is said that right of way has been obtained from Droyer's Point on Newark bay to Canon Point in New York bay, with the object of building a pier at Canon Point, whence boats will carry cars to the foot of Thirty-ninth street, South Brooklyn. Thence by the Long Island railroad and by the Housatonic railroad New England could be reached. This would mean the abandonment of all the Baltimore and Ohio's facilities on Staten Island.

Several persons who would naturally be interested in the movement were seen, but nearly all made an outward show of either ignorance or reticence. W. H. Starbuck, president of the Housatonic road, one of those who are reported to have attended the meeting when final arrangements were made, said that he could make no public statement. He would neither affirm nor deny that such a meeting was held, and did not understand how the story got out.

An official both of the Baltimore and Ohio and of the Staten Island Rapid Transit company was much inclined to doubt the whole affair. He said that the Baltimore and Ohio could now transfer its cars by boats just as it could by the proposed new route.

"If any such step has been taken,"—he said—"I am sure that no Baltimore and Ohio people on Staten Island know of it."

Erastus Wiman said that he doubted the whole story. The Baltimore and Ohio company, he said, had invested much money on Staten Island. It had a long line of valuable water front, and had endorsed $2,500,000 worth of bonds of the Rapid-Transit company. If the Baltimore and Ohio adopted the new route, Mr. Wiman thought some other road would be glad to take its place and do business over the Staten Island road.

Notes of the Boys' Club.

The average attendance last week was 67 per evening, the largest being 76, and the smallest 48. The number of visitors was 15. Five boys joined during the week.

Next Wednesday evening takes place the club's Thanksgiving entertainment, for the boys. It is hoped that every member of the club will be present to enjoy the evening. The entertainment will consist of two farces given by the Four-Leaf Clover dramatic club, vocal and instrumental music, and a "Silent Drill" by twelve members of the Edwards Zouaves. All friends of the club are invited to be present.

There will be a rehearsal of the Edwards Zouaves members who take part in the "Silent Drill", this evening at 8:30.

The rooms will be open as usual Thanksgiving evening, from 7 to 9.

The Wheaton Club.

In parlor D R at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York city, Saturday afternoon, were gathered a number of ladies who heard addresses on different subjects, music and recitations, and talked about school days at Wheaton Female Institute, at Norton, Mass. It was the second meeting of the year of the Wheaton club, composed of the alumnæ of the institute living in and around New York city.

The Wheaton club is five years old and has about fifty members. Several years after its formation the New England club, an organization of the alumnæ in Boston, was formed, and the younger sister now has about 200 members. The Wheaton club meets every third Saturday during the winter months. The president is Mrs. Kate Upson Clark.

Among those present Saturday was Mrs. Goddard of Plainfield.

A Swimming Resort for Asbury Park.

A great attraction is being planned for Asbury Park next summer. It is to be a swimming resort that will cast in the shade John Hoey's pool that proved such a success last summer at Hollywood. The site which has been chosen for the resort is in Third avenue within a block of the sea. The building will extend 350 feet along the line of the electric railroad. The swimming pool will be at least 300 feet long, and will be fitted with all gymnastic appliances and all the requisites for racing and exhibition swimming.

The dressing rooms will be large, carpeted, and supplied with all conveniences.

The most beautiful woman in New York said that she "ascribed her good health and rosy cheeks to the occasional use of a tablespoonful of pure whiskey before meals. It increased the circulation, sent a warm glow through the system, and gave her a hearty appetite." That is the experience of all who drink pure whiskey moderately. A. R. Tudor's Rye Whiskey is warranted absolutely pure and ten years old.

STYLES IN NOVEMBER

The Winter Begins and There Are Fine Things to See.

An Afternoon Among the Shops, with Notes of the November Novelties—Costumes, Cloaks and Millinery—New Dress Materials.

[COPYRIGHT, 1891.]

It's a cozy thing and a cheerful thing to be at home again rubbing our hands, all of us about our respective fires, coming and going and giving our cheerful greetings and talking over all the things that have happened since last spring. I like the bustle of preparation that comes with the autumn, the planmaking—yes, and the dressmaking, especially when the frocks are as dainty as some about which I have in mind this morning to tell you.

Yesterday afternoon I spent some two hours in the shops making mental notes of the pretty things. My description of them may assume the appearance of a catalogue before I finish, but I am reasonably sure of awakening a fair degree of interest at the start if I begin with a blue-gray serge walking gown which had many to do it honor in its recess hung with plush curtains in a sixth floor "costume parlor," where the carpet was warm and thick and women in furs and feathers chatted and lounged on velvet divans.

It was a simple frock to look at, with its plain skirt and plain long bodice laced with dark blue cords down the middle in front, but the outdoor coat that went with it was most picturesque-looking, with its very full folds hanging straight from the shoulders, its deep, gathered ruff at the throat and its wide, straight sleeves. It was lined throughout with pink silk of a pale rosy shade, and the hat that lay on the low table beside it was a flat black velvet affair with clustering tips of black ostrich feathers.

Much more striking than this, but certainly no prettier, was a smart gown of pale biscuit-colored cloth that had an hour's prominence in a Twenty-third street window. It was braided in an original, but, it must be said, most inartistic fashion, in a combination of gold and black cord and braid, which went round the bodice and waist and tight sheath skirt, as the artist has shown it in the illustration, bringing out the lines of the figure in a way in which it is not at all advantageous in one case in a million to have them displayed. The sleeves were of black velvet, with puffings at the shoulders, and from the shoulders across the bosom were draped strings and pendants of jet beads. A black velvet hat with plume decorations gave the finishing touch in the manner which is this fall most customary.

In the next window to the one displaying the biscuit and gold and black combination was a charming dress of pale gray Venetian cloth with a plain and tight-fitting gored skirt (not so charming) lined with gray silk and edged all about the hem with a narrow plaiting of black velvet ribbon, headed by an embroidery of small beads in jet and gold. The greater part of the bodice, both back and front, was composed of a kind of cuirass of gold galon, covered with an applique of gray cloth edged with jet embroidery. The medieval sleeves were particularly striking, with their full puffs of black velvet at the elbow, bordered with the dainty embroidery in jet and gold.

In that holy of holies, the sanctum of the designer of perhaps the most fashionable of all the establishments, were three or four things that call with a loud voice for their meed of praise. There was, for example, the coat that is figured with the biscuit gown. Its fabric was a fawn-colored Venetian cloth, and it fitted the figure with a certain affectionate snugness quite allowable at the approach of cold weather. It was edged with a narrow beaver border of a beautiful quality of the fur. Across the front were quaint knots of beading, such as it has become the fashion to call "brows' toes." The high collar was of beaver and reached to the ears.

There was also—though this was quite a change of subject—a sea gown, more artistic than anything else to be found in a week's hunt through the ateliers, so soft and graceful were the lines of its flowing draperies. Its material was a pale, rose-colored cashmere, with a front of ivory white silk crossed over the bust and at the waist by pointed bands embroidered in shaded silk, harmonizing perfection with the beautiful shades of the cashmere.

There was an afternoon gown, too, in a sheer black wool—it's curious, isn't it, what an astonishing quantity of black is worn this winter, with a pink silk stripe, full sleeves of black velvet and graceful trimming of small chains of jet, caught across the figure with jetted clasps. And another in a silvery gray Vienna with raised silk stripes in pale hyacinth blue. The stripes were quaintly arranged in front so that the lines pointed upward and met at the waist in the middle. The long bodice opened over a vest of hyacinth blue velvet, with smart pointed cuffs of blue velvet also.

Of course I looked at hats, more because they are queer than because any cultivated taste can find them admirable. Queer is the only word that expresses them adequately. Look, for instance, at the one with a diamond-shaped crown. As I saw it, it was in brown velvet, with a beaver edge and fawn-colored wings. It is not especially unbecoming, not more so than three-fourths of the shapes which are accepted without question, but it is queer. Look also at the minute bonnet which sets back on the crown and has plumes thrusting themselves forward over the hair. It, too, is queer. It was in dove gray felt with bands and strings of dark gray velvet and dark gray plumes. Consider, too, the terra cotta felt out of which a jewel-headed pin erects itself so aggressively. There is, perhaps, no reason why a hat should not take just this shape if it feels so minded, but on the other hand there is no conceivable reason why it should do so. It has an extremely narrow edge of astrachan about crown and brim, bows of black velvet and bunches of cocks' plumes. Then there is the dark blue felt that forms the fourth figure of the illustration. It has a broad black velvet band about the rather high crown with a silver buckle in front, a turned over frill of cream-colored lace and a bunch of straggling black plumes.

I went to see Mrs. Kendal last night, and though I never find her especially interesting, there was an evening mantle that was put on in the box at the right of the stage as the performance ended which some people who are fond of evening cloaks might have thought worth the price of admission for a minute and a half's observation. It was of turquoise blue velvet, no hint of whose luster and color comes out in the picture given. It was draped a la Grecque, and had velvet cloth revers and lining.

In a neighboring box was a slim, red-haired girl, who wore a picturesque cloak of chestnut brown velvet that was almost as interesting. It was lined with silk in a delicate shade of pale blue, had an edging of rich fur, and, like everything which can possibly find an excuse for so doing, it had a long and extremely pointed train. The dress worn below it, of which some hint is given in the picture, was of pale blue bengaline caught on the left hip with a brooch of diamonds.

Scattered through the audience I noticed a number of hats with quite soft Henri Deux crowns of velvet, the effect of which in some cases was very pretty. A hat just in front of me, for example, had its crown of folds of bright crimson velvet, edged with small curly tips of black ostrich feathers.

The Marie Antoinette hat is one of the newest models, and is a clever reproduction of the chapeau seen in some of the portraits of the unlucky queen. Its soft, round crown, as I have once noticed it, was of black velvet, lined underneath with pale pink satin and having a narrow black velvet brim, bordered with fine black lace, and an aigrette of small black ostrich feathers on one side.

The genuine old-fashioned poke bonnets in black velvet and black satin are beginning to be numerous, and really they are comical with their small round crowns fitting closely to the head at the back and their deep, cavern-like brims.

Among the new dress materials, the corduroy cloths, with embroidered flowers in colored silks, are about as popular as any. Long haired cloths and astrachan stripes hold and increase their favor, and in tweeds the great pointed chevron stripes are fashionable. The new gowns are cut pretty much upon one model, with gored skirts, tight about the hips, and trains cut by the cross so as to lie on the floor or like a fan. In the house they are graceful enough, but out of doors they are simply intolerable. ELLEN OSBORN.

SWEPT BY CYCLONE

Storm of Wind and Rain Does Immense Damage.

A NUMBER OF PEOPLE KILLED.

Part of the White House Crushed by a Fall of Stone Coping.

WHOLE BUILDINGS BLOWN AWAY.

A Huge Cylinder of Molten Iron Exploded at Binghamton With Awful Effect.

Wagon Factory at Hanover, Pa., Wiped Out of Existence—Wonderful Escape of Several Workmen in Baltimore—Business Suspended in Pittsburg—Damage to Craft Along the Hudson River—Railroads Washed Out and Wagon Roads Impassable.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24. — A terrible cyclone, accompanied by a cloud burst, struck the city yesterday afternoon. It lasted for ten minutes. It was preceded by several minutes of almost utter darkness, and left havoc in its path.

Metzrott & Co.'s new unfinished Music Hall, in the centre of the city was blown to the ground, and with it a portion of the adjoining buildings.

George White, a fashionable ladies' tailor, was crushed to death, and one of his work-women was killed. Six girls in the establishment were dangerously injured, but have been taken out of the ruins.

It is believed that several others are still buried there and the whole of the police and fire departments are now engaged in searching for the bodies.

About two tons of stone coping on top of the White House was blown down on the porch on the east side of the building, crushing it in. A window in the east room was also blown in. The flagstaff on top of the White House was snapped off.

Throughout the city houses were unroofed, trees uprooted, windows broken, gas lamps blown down, all the telegraph and telephone wires disabled and street cars and carriages overturned. After the storm the sun shone out brightly, and the temperature was that of a summer day.

Ida White, daughter of George White, was taken from the Metzerott Building with a broken leg. A German girl was also removed slightly injured.

The firemen found the mangled body of George White, the habit maker, after an hour's work, and the physician in attendance stated that he had probably been dead an hour. Several others are still missing.

Nine iron workers on the Metzerott Building had a marvellous escape. They were all at work when the storm struck the building, but all escaped. A colored hod-carrier working with them is still missing, and it is thought he is buried beneath the debris.

BALTIMORE HIT HARD.

Ruin and Wreck in the Wake of the Storm—Many Narrow Escapes.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 24.—A disastrous storm passed over this city at 1:15 o'clock yesterday afternoon. It came up suddenly and was over in a few minutes. But it left ruin and wreck in its wake. There have been no deaths reported but several persons were injured, some of whom may die.

In the central portion of the city the rain poured down in torrents and the wind blew a gale. The roof of the Maltby Building at the foot of West Falls avenue was torn off and dropped 80 feet away. The upper floor of the structure was occupied as a sail loft by Thomas Gibbons, who had 13 men at work at the time the roof was carried away. All of the men escaped unhurt, except Frederick Lambert, the foreman, S. E. Mitchell and Howard Yearly. They were badly cut up. Yearly's experience was a startling one. He was lifted up bodily and thrown into the river, 40 feet below. The debris of the wrecked roof was falling all around him as he descended, and a heavy piece of timber struck him as he fell, cutting his head severely and lacerating his shoulder. A passing tug rescued him.

The upper part of the building is a total wreck and looks as if it had been struck by an avalanche and decapitated. Several telegraph poles and a lot of wires were knocked down by the flying debris. The escape of the men from death is regarded as miraculous. The building rocked violently as if an earthquake had struck it. Within a few minutes the streets in the vicinity were thronged with excited people who believed that several of the men had been killed.

Several other cases of damage in the nature of demolished chimneys, broken roofs, crushed signs, etc., are reported.

THE CYLINDER EXPLODED.

Several Men Killed by the Bursting of a Tank of Metal in Binghamton.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Nov. 24.—A cloud burst deluged the city at 3:30 yesterday afternoon, filling the main thoroughfares with water and causing several sewers to burst. While the storm was at its height a terrific explosion jarred the northern portion of the city, the detonation breaking window glass and shaking dishes from shelves.

From the Parlor City Boiler Works came a cloud of smoke and the odor of burning flesh filled the air.

The cupola of the foundry consisted of a huge cylinder containing ten tons of molten iron, extending through the roof the building.

The bottom of the cupola was fastened by braces from the ground, and underneath was the fire used in heating the metal. The terrific downpour of rain had caused a stream of water to follow the pipe down through the roof, washing out the earth around the braces supporting the door of the cupola.

Six workmen were in the furnace. They stood in a circle around the cupola waiting for the release of the molten metal. Without the slightest warning the braces gave way, allowing ten tons of the fluid metal to fall into a large pond of water.

Instantly there was a fearful explosion, and the heated metal was thrown through the sides of the building a distance of 300 feet, and the rear of the structure was wrecked.

When aid arrived it was found that not one of the employes had escaped. John McMahon was found lying near the retort literally roasted. The melted iron still clung to his body, and when picked up the flesh dropped off, exposing the intestines and portions of the thigh bone, while he was otherwise fearfully mangled.

John Gilroy was found lying near the door moaning in pain, the iron having completely destroyed the sight of both eyes. Martin King was badly burned about the face and upper portions of his body, the flesh being literally roasted. John Nolan, sr., and John Nolan, jr., were terribly burned about the head and face, but the physicians hope to save their eyesight. Michael Halloran was seriously burned.

Business Suspended in Pittsburg.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 24.—Heavy rains and a cyclone prevailed in this city yesterday. Several houses here were demolished, and also one at Temperanceville, which buried a woman beneath it. In the east end of the city great damage is reported. Finley's Run, which flows into the Allegheny River at Brilliant Station, was transformed from an insignificant river into a raging torrent and several houses near its mouth were carried away bodily or shifted from their foundations. At Soaly Side, in the 20th Ward, the water came down from the hills, covering the streets several feet deep with mud and water, and bursting in the sewers in several instances. At Soho the water rushed down Second avenue in such volumes as to stop the electric cars, and in the lower part of the city, near the point, business was entirely suspended.

Two School Houses Blown Down.

CARLISLE, Pa., Nov. 24.—A terrific rain, wind and thunderstorm passed over this section of the Cumberland valley yesterday afternoon, doing considerable damage to property and, perhaps, causing a loss of life. In the surrounding country the storm was much more severe. Many buildings are blown down, roofs blown off and trees uprooted. While school was in session at the Graham school house, the roof was blown a distance of 80 feet and the walls fell in. Many pupils were injured. The "Sunnyside" school house was partially blown down, and a number of the pupils were more or less injured.

Roads Washed Out.

CORTLAND, N. Y., Nov. 24.—The storm here yesterday was unusually severe and was the heaviest of the year. The downpour of rain was terrific and was accompanied by lightning and a high wind. The storm was at its height at four in the afternoon and raged with undiminished fury for fully half an hour. The streets were flooded, some being ankle deep in water. Many country roads have been temporarily rendered impassible, while several washouts have more or less delayed railway traffic.

Great Damage at Bethlehem, Pa.

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Nov. 24.—The most severe wind and rainstorm of the season struck this place at 2:30 yesterday afternoon. The wind, which came from the south-southeast, was terrific in its force, and took fences, trees, signs, telegraph and telephone poles and wires to the ground. Many houses are unroofed in the country districts along the Lehigh & Lackawanna Railroad and the damage is very heavy. Telegraphic communication is almost entirely cut off in the valley.

Wagon Factory Blown Down.

YORK, Pa., Nov. 24.—A terrific storm visited this vicinity yesterday afternoon, Hanover, this county, seemed to be the centre of the storm. A number of dwellings were damaged and the Kstener Wagon Works were completely destroyed. The employes were all caught in the wreck and were more or less seriously injured. Howard Carbaugh was so badly injured that he died within a short time after his removal from the ruins.

The Storm on the Hudson.

NYACK, N. Y., Nov. 24.—A terrific rain storm and gale prevailed along the lower Hudson River yesterday afternoon and caused much damage to property. J. O. Davidson's steam yacht Princess and many smaller craft were sunk. The steamer Raleigh, from New York, was unable to make a landing on the west side of the river, owing to the strong east wind which threatened to dash her to pieces.

Damage at Cape May.

CAPE MAY, N. J., Nov. 24.—The heaviest blow this fall occured yesterday afternoon. The lower deck of the ocean pier was washed away by the breakers. The surf is beating heavily against the beach at Cape May Point, and is cutting down the bluff.

IT IS MINNEAPOLIS

The Republican National Convention to Be Held There.

JUNE 7 SELECTED AS THE DATE.

The Twin City Captured the Prize on the Seventh Ballot.

Cincinnati Men Stood Firm to the Last — Able Presentment of the Claims of the Different Cities—Clarkson Succeeds Quay and Barbour Replaces Dudley—General Satisfaction Expressed at the Selection.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—Minneapolis has won the prize. The Twin City captured the next Republican convention on the seventh formal ballot, which stood: Minneapolis, 29; Cincinnati, 15; New York, 3. Total votes, 47; necessary to a choice, 24.

The long hours of speech making came to an end at 11 p. m., when the committee went into executive session. The ballots were secret. Of the 48 members of the committee the only absentee was New Mexico's representative. The following tabulated account of the ballot tells its own story:

Omaha	3	4	4	4	3	4	..
Detroit	1	..	..	..	..	..	..
Minneapolis	14	11	13	13	17	20	29
Cincinnati	8	12	11	15	15	15	15
New York	3	11	10	7	7	5	3
St. Louis	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
San Francisco	6	7	7	8	5	3	..
Chattanooga	4	..	..	..	..	..	..
Pittsburg	1	..	..	..	..	..	..

The date of the convention was fixed for June 7.

The main features of the day were the extreme outside interest shown in the question before the committee and the reception given to more prominent leaders in the recent local elections. The session of the committee began at 11 o'clock, but from that hour until midnight the Arlington Hotel was almost blockaded with the crowd of interested listeners and onlookers.

Gen. Clarkson was chosen chairman of the committee to succeed Senator Quay. Garrett A. Hobart of New Jersey as vice chairman and William Barbour of New York as treasurer, to succeed W. W. Dudley. Dennis T. Flynn was selected as delegate from Oklahoma.

The heroes of the day were Chairman Clarkson, who received a hearty greeting when he took the chair; Judge Thurston, who was the temporary chairman of the last National Convention; Fassett, of New York, whose plea for New York was the speech of the day; Major McKinley, who was received with an ovation when he rose to present the claims of Cincinnati, and Foraker, whose phrase, "Ohio's grand old John Sherman," excited a storm of applause.

The case of New York was strongly presented, first by Colonel Shepard, who made an earnest plea; then by Senator Hiscock, whose argument was urgent and eloquent; next by Senator Hawley of Connecticut, who was brief, but forcible; and finally, by Fassett, who was given all the time he wanted, even when New York's limit had expired.

GOV. HOVEY DEAD.

Indiana's Chief Magistrate Expired Yesterday at Indianapolis.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Nov. 24.—Gov. Alvin P. Hovey died at 1:20 o'clock in his room at the Dennison Hotel. His last moments were peaceful and conscious, and his last words were an inquiry for a favorite granddaughter, Mary Menzies.

All immediate members of his family were present. The direct cause of his death was heart trouble, superinducing failing respiration.

Divorce, Assault, Attempted Abduction.

NEW MILFORD, Conn., Nov. 24.—Mrs. Emma Stockder, a well-known young married woman of this town, recently sued her husband for divorce. The couple separated some months ago and the husband was anxious to gain possession of their child. On October 10 he caused his wife's arrest on the charge of improper conduct, and a day or two ago brought suit for divorce on statutory grounds. He is now in jail on a charge of assaulting his wife. The wife alleges that Stockder and two companions called at her house, assaulted her, and attempted to abduct the child. The mother clung franctically to the child and Stocker did not succeed in his attempt.

Awful Deed of an Insane Man.

WILMINGTON, Del., Nov. 24.—Amer H. Burnett, an insane man, yesterday with an axe split open the head of Frank Shields, a young man who was lying on a lounge in Burnett's house. Shields had been sent for to quiet Burnett. Shields died in the afternoon.

A Forger Arrested.

NORRISTOWN, Pa., Nov. 24.—Jonathan H. Gerhard, a cigar manufacturer of Douglass township, being short of money to pay his hands forged endorsements for $675 worth of notes on the Farmers' National Bank of Pennsburg. He was arrested and is now in jail.

TUNNELLED TWO YEARS.

Three Convicts Who Escaped from Prison and Were Recaptured Shortly After.

WAUPUN, Wis., Nov. 24.—Robert N. West, John Stagg and Ferdinand Mack, the three life convicts who tunnelled their way out of the penitentiary and were recaptured 24 hours later, have just been released from the solitary cells where they were placed after their return. All three men were employed in the prison wash house. In the west end of this building is the boiler, at the south end of which is a brick wall open 12 feet deep.

The men began operations on the east wall of this well about eight feet below the floor surface. They removed enough brick to make a square passageway large enough to permit the passage of a man's body. They then fastened the removed brick to a board, making a door which, when closed, left the wall with every appearance of undisturbed solidity. Beginning here they turned east about four feet, turned to the north and went a distance of six feet, and then west directly under the washroom boiler and through the wall of the house, thence under the alley to and through the main foundation wall of the workshop into a ditch beneath the floor made for convenience in running water and steam pipes about the building.

After using the full length of the ditch they dug under the shop wall again, beneath an alley roadway, a distance of 40 or 50 feet, and then under the wall surrounding the prison buildings and to the surface and the outside world.

The men could work only a few moments at a time consecutively, and they were obliged to remove and dispose of all the dirt and rock encountered in the tunnelling of over 60 feet without taking it outside the walls or awakening suspicion.

The three men worked by turns in the tunnel for nearly two years, and through the administration of three wardens. A system of telegraph kept the digger informed of the movements of prison officials above. Occasionally the plotters became alarmed, and abandoned their work for weeks at a time. But fear of the coming of winter and its attending obstacles in tunnelling in the earth set them at their labor with renewed energy. At last everything was ready for the escape.

While the rest of the prisoners were in the yard at 3 o'clock, the murderers dropped into their hole and began to burrow their way to freedom. They were not missed until the guards made their report at 6 o'clock. It was snowing and raining when the murderers emerged from the tunnel. Although still clad in their prison robes they struck boldly across the country. The snow obliterated their tracks for a time, but when morning came the tracks of heavy prison shoes were plainly seen in the slush.

After leaving the prison the fugitives went north. They circled around the town to the east, and again started west, for the purpose of throwing their pursuers off the scent. Before 8 o'clock, and when they had covered thirteen miles, old man Stagg weakened physically and sank exhausted by the roadside. He could go no further, and the question of leaving him by the roadside to die or of being recaptured came up for consideration.

West took up Stagg, with the aid of Mack, and carried him to the nearest farmhouse. The granger was averse to receiving them, but West had $3, and for 25 cents each secured shelter for the rest of the night. The trio were awake and up at daylight, and when they emerged from the house they found the road full of men looking for them, and without resistance they surrendered.

West had spent 22 years in the prison, and his work of two years as well as that of his comrades, with flager-nails and a worn-out hatchet through hard clay and stone walls, was sold for 12 hours of freedom.

Canvassers Report at Last.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Nov. 24.—The Board of County Canvassers yesterday afternoon took action giving Flower this county by 75 majority, and Osborn, Democratic candidate for Senator, a majority in the county of 184. The County Clerk declines to attach his name to the certificate of County Canvassers and a Secretary pro tem was appointed in his place. If the figures are adopted for Assemblymen and County Officers they will elect Russell (Dem.) in the First District over Wheeler (Rep.), and will also elect the Democratic County Treasurer and perhaps the Sheriff.

The Latest Parisian Scandal.

PARIS, Nov. 24.—A scandal in upper official circles has just come to light and causes a lively sensation. M. Herbette, brother of the French Ambassador at Berlin, was until recently Chief of Penitentiaries, and resigned his office under circumstances which made his resignation involuntary. Investigation has discovered that he connived at the debasing of a reformatory school for girls into a hotbed of immorality, and if the case comes to trial astounding revelations of official corruption are probable.

Left $65,000 to a College.

BOSTON, Nov. 24.—The will of Charles V. Spear of Oberlin, O., who died recently in Constantinople, Turkey, which was filed for probate yesterday at Dedham, bequeaths $15,000 to Oberlin College, Oberlin, O., under certain conditions, and makes a number of smaller bequests to missionary societies of sums ranging from $7,000 to $10,000.

The Gas Tank Exploded.

BOSTON, Nov. 24.—A fifty foot tank of oxygen gas exploded at the works of the Boston Calcium Light Company, on Utica street yesterday afternoon, instantly killing Wm. G Bent, the proprietor of the place and badly injuring James McGreece, a machinist employed by the company. Bently and McGreece were hurled into the street by the force of the explosion. Bent's body was badly mutilated, but McGreece's injuries though severe will not prove fatal.

FONSECA STEPS OUT

The Dictator of Brazil Resigns--by Request.

FIERCE RIOT IN RIO JANEIRO.

The Newspaper Offices Favorable to the Ruler Demolished by the Mob.

Revolt Proclaimed by the Officers of the Fleet—The Army Remained Quiet—Fonseca Yielded to Popular Demand and Averted Civil War—All Quiet Now in the Capital.

RIO JANEIRO, Nov. 24.—A revolution broke out here yesterday for the overthrow of President da Fvnseca. The movement was so formidable that Fonseca surrendered.

In retiring, or "resigning," as he called it, he declared that he did so in favor of Floriano Peixotto, the Vice-President or Vice-Chief of the Provisional government, of which Da Fonseca was the head.

It is not believed that Peixotto will be permitted to act as Chief Executive, even temporarily, unless he is in sympathy with the ideas and principles of the leaders of the revolutionary movement. He is a prominent General, and served in the Paraguayan war.

The revolution was of a dual character, including a movement of the navy in apparently spontaneous occurrence with a rising in the city. The officers of the fleet now at Rio proclaimed a revolt, demanding that Fonseca should resign, and give place to the Vice-President, Floriano Peixotto. The army remained quiet, neither moving to the help of Fonseca or against him, although it was understood that some of the leading officers were in sympathy with the navy.

Meantime a riot broke out in the city, and a multitude, all the time growing in numbers, went about demanding Fonseca's retirement, and attacking the newspaper offices that supported him. The police were powerless, and the mob effectually demolished the obnoxious newspaper offices, the editors narrowly making their escape.

Fonseca's associates urged him to resign as the only possibly way to avert the worst calamities. Had Fonseca held out he might possibly have taken with him a large portion of the army, but he concluded to yield and avert civil war. The news of Fonseca's resignation was received with great rejoicing, and the riotous demonstrations ceased. All is now quiet.

BROOKLYN'S WATER FAMINE.

The Break Repaired Just in Time to Relieve Serious Distress.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Nov. 24.—The break which occurred in the conduit of the main water pipes near Ridgewood last Saturday, was repaired at 8 o'clock last night and the water has been turned on again, thus relieving the distress of the people in this city, who were unable to obtain water from the reservoir yesterday.

Heroic measures were adopted yesterday to make the supply of water last as long as possible, and a number of the great industries of the city were at a standstill for at least one day. All the factories using the city's water were ordered to shut down so as to save the water for the necessities of the general public.

The great engine which runs the cable on the Brooklyn Bridge was stopped, and as many people possible were shoved across the bridge by locomotives.

All the fires under the boilers at the Brooklyn Navy Yard were drawn and work was entirely suspended. The water was shut off from the boilers in all the hotels and office buildings, and, as a consequence, not an elevator in the whole city was running. Work in every factory where steam is depended on for motive power was suspended, and the number of those thrown out of work ran far up above 50,000.

Several fires broke out during the day and night, and owing to the lack of water the firemen had the hardest kind of time to subdue the flames. The whole block from Harrison to Degraw and from Court to Henry streets was burned down last night. The loss is very heavy.

A number of narrow escapes are reported.

A County Clerk to Be Examined.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 24.—A sensation was created in political circles late yesterday afternoon by the serving upon County Clerk Geo. J. Cotton, of a notification from Gov. Hill, that he had been charged with malfeasance in office, and that he would be accorded a hearing at Albany on Wednesday next at 2 p. m. These charges are the outcome of the recent litigation in which the Board of County Canvassers became involved over the returns from the First Assembly District of this County. The Board of Canvassers is Democratic by a majority of one, and they voted a certificate of election to P. J. Ryan, the Democratic candidate, though the Republicans claim that their candidate, David J. Munro, jr., has a plurality of 69. The Court has issued an order restraining the County Clerk from issuing the certificate to Ryan.

A Wife's Terrible Death.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Nov. 24.—The wife of Robert Newman, a hostler, had been drinking heavily of late. Sunday night she became perfectly helpless from liquor and sank in a stupor on the floor of her home. Yesterday she was found suffocated to death, having during the night turned on her face in such a manner as to preclude the possibility of breathing. Her husband left for his work in the morning without discovering his wife's terrible death.

Declared a Dividend.

NEW YORK, Nov. 24.—The board of directors of the New York, Lake Erie & Western Railroad held a meeting here yesterday, and declared a dividend of 2 per cent on preferred stock.

"No baking powder is gaining public favor so rapidly as Cleveland's."

One reason is people like to know what they are eating, and the composition of Cleveland's baking powder is given on every label.

So many baking powders containing ammonia or alum are widely advertised as "absolutely pure," the best way is to refuse any brand the composition of which is concealed.

FOUR LOST THEIR LIVES.

Horrors of the Fire in Jamestown—Narrow Escapes of Several Persons.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y., Nov. 24.—The fire in the Old Homestead Hotel yesterday claimed four victims, and several of the boarders narrowly escaped with their lives. The fire was discovered early in the morning, and had enveloped the whole house before the department responded to the alarm.

They at last succeeded in forcing the flames back from the lower floors of the house sufficiently to obtain an entrance. On climbing up the first flight of stairs, the first victim was discovered in the person of Maggie Wilson, a waiter girl. The body was charred and burned in a horrible manner. The flesh was dropping off in many places, leaving the bones bare. She occupied a room with three others of the female help in the third story of the building, and had succeeded in finding her way down stairs, when she was overcome by the smoke. Her home was in Red Rock, Pa.

The firemen pushed their way forward to the room occupied by the four women and, on entering, found the dead bodies of two women and a child. They were quickly lowered to the ground and identified as Mrs. Carrie Marsh, a dish washer from Warren, Pa., and Mrs. Jane Buchanan, a pastry cook of Craigtown, Pa.

Mrs. Buchanan's body lay stretched on the floor, where she had fallen in the attempt to find her way through the blinding smoke to the door. She clasped in her arms the form of her little boy, and both had evidently died from suffocation, as the bodies were not burned.

Mrs. Marsh had not risen from the bed and was probably stupefied by the smoke before she realized her danger. Her body was considerably burned. Of the other occupants of the room Miss Grace Hartwell was the only one to escape. She was awakened by the cry of fire, and, not stopping to dress, hastily ran down the first flight of stairs. The flames barred further progress by means of the stairway and she continued down the hall and stepped from the second-story window upon the veranda, whence she reached the ground in safety.

Several of the boarders narrowly escaped with their lives from the windows, and none had time to save any of his property. One of them, Harry Milspaugh, lowered himself from the second story window by means of a bed quilt, and others escaped by jumping on to the surrounding verandas.

Bynum is Out of It.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 24.—Congressman Bynum is out in an interview withdrawing from the Speakership race. He said: "Yes I am out of it. I have been contemplating the step for some time, but desired to consult with many of my colleagues before doing so. I had a consultation with Messrs. Brown, Parrett and Brookshire, who are in the city, and informed them of my intentions. I never pressed my candidacy, and consented only to the use of my name until it became evident that the contest was narrowed down between Mills and Crisp."

LABOR NOTES.

The months of November and December are the busiest time for shoemakers, and just now their organizations throughout the country are increasing their membership.

The organized canmakers of Maryland will ask the Legislature of that State to prohibit oysters being shipped in quantities larger than a gallon, and the coopers' unions oppose the movement because they believe it would injure their trade.

The three hosiery firms of Reading, Pa., which produce 18,000 stockings daily, have formed an alliance and expect to treble their number of employes (500) and double their output. They will give all their help a banquet on Saturday next.

William Hume, Socialist candidate for mayor of Elizabeth, N. J., is 52 years old. He works in the repair shops of the New Jersey Central Railroad. Mr. Hume was born in this country and has been in the labor movement for many years. When the Greenback party was organized he was one of the most active members in New Jersey.

Druggists to Meet in Convention.

BOSTON, Nov. 24.—The Boston men who have charge of the arrangements for the next annual meeting of the American Pharmaceutical Association have decided to hold it at the Profile House, New Hampshire, on July 14 next. For three days before this the delegates from all parts of the country will be entertained in Boston.

THE PRESS PRINTS FOR ALL.

It has become necessary for THE PRESS to again disclaim all personal indorsement of any expressions of political sentiment, or criticisms of municipal officers or candidates, that appear in these columns in the form of communications or interviews. They are given for what they are worth, as merely the assertions or opinions of certain individuals.

This paper is open to the people, and is open to an expression of the opinions of all sides. The tickets of both political parties, also, are to be found above.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—Moy's Hot Soda—None Better.

—Seats are now on sale for "A Fair Rebel".

—Rogers is now offering the finest varieties of oysters in all styles, that have ever been brought to the Plainfield market. Telephone your order to 42 West Second street.

—Every bit of the Music Hall's scenery has been stripped from the stage to make room for "A Fair Rebel", next Saturday evening. It is to be produced exactly as in New York, with the same company and all its own special scenery.

—The firm of Hoffman & Duckworth, who were burned out by the late fire at Clinton, has been dissolved. Mr. Hoffman retiring. The new firm will consist of R. Duckworth, E. C. Moke and Mansfield Duckworth formerly of Plainfield, and will be known as R. Duckworth & Co. They have opened temporary quarters in the Clinton music hall.

—The mocking bird, once so plentiful in this State, seems to have disappeared entirely. In seeking for a cause the ornithologists claim that forest denudation has destroyed their natural resting places. As the birds are the best friends of man, and as they must have resting places, it would seem only common sense to stop the ruthless destruction of trees.

—The student in search of knowledge will find material of absorbing interest in "The Story of Man", that wonderful book which is advertised elsewhere. Of especial interest will be its complete description of the island-dwellers. These are strangely savages tribes that for ages have made their homes upon the fertile archipelago of the South Pacific, and upon the islands that lie under the Equator, such as the Dyaks, or head hunters of Bornu, the cannibals of New Guinea and New Zealand, the wonderful aquatic men of Tahiti, the unconquerable savages of the Solomon group, the cat men of China. A full and graphic description is given of all the peoples that occupy the Pacific Islands, including their horrible customs, superstitions, and methods of warfare.

THE STREET RAILWAY FIGHT.

Counselor Marsh Tells Why Litigation Is Suspended, and What Terms of Settlement Are Proposed.

Those who have wondered what has become of the Plainfield street railway litigation will find below a full and clear statement of the present condition of the case. The letter of explanation is from counselor Marsh, and was received and filed by the city common council last night:

To the Honorable Common Council of the City of Plainfield.

GENTLEMEN:—In my formal report of Nov. 2, inst., there occurs the following sentence respecting the case pending in the supreme court to review the street railway ordinance, namely: "The taking of testimony has been begun and has been temporarily suspended in view of a proposition of settlement under the consideration of a committee of the common council." The city clerk informs me that the common council desire explanation of the sentence quoted. The facts upon which my report was based are the following:

Thirty pages of testimony were taken in the cause on the 21st day of October last. At the conclusion of that day's work I reported to Mr. Walter L. Hetfield that the city's cross-examination of the principal witness made it appear that his testimony was based almost exclusively on hearsay, and accordingly that it would be necessary for the prosecutor to procure certified copies of deeds, wills, maps, records, etc., etc., all of which would involve much labor and great expense; that if the prosecutor should succeed, a large part of the expense incurred would be taxable in the costs against the city; that upon further cross-examination by the city the further fact was developed that the prosecution would be dropped and the suit discontinued if the route of the railroad company be changed so as not to pass through Park avenue; that the attorney of the prosecutor, the prosecutor himself, and the attorney of the street railway company, all stated before the supreme court commission that as such a change of route would settle the case they believed that such a settlement would unquestionably be brought about. The prosecutor declared that his proposition was still open.

On making this report to Mr. Hetfield, who I understood represented the committee of the common council having charge of the matter, I inquired of him whether it would not be wise, having regard to the question of expense to the city, to defer the further taking of testimony until it should definitely appear whether the case would be settled. Mr. Hetfield agreed with me that it would be wise to wait, especially in view of the fact that he was expecting soon to have a conference with Mr. Nevins and Mr. Riker, his attorney, and members of the committee of the council, and he thought it probable that the settlement suggested or some other settlement would then be reached. On Mr. Hetfield's approving of my suggestions, I notified opposing counsel of my conclusion, and requested him to agree that the argument of the cause should not be delayed by reason of our waiting for the conferences referred to by Mr. Hetfield. He so agreed.

Such are the facts upon which my report was based. Respectfully submitted,

CRAIG A. MARSH,
Corporation Counsel.

Plainfield, N. J., Nov. 23, 1891.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Major Ackerman and Freeholder Jones, of New Providence, are in Plainfield today.

Ferdinand S. Ruttmann, of Broadway, is in Europe, attending to important business affairs.

Miss Holmes and Mr. Runyon will sing at a reception of the Fanwood club, Thursday evening.

The Shakspeare club will resume their readings for the winter to-morrow evening, at the residence of Miss Grace Brown, Mercer avenue, when "The Tempest" will be laid upon the dissecting table.

Louis Cook, cousin of Messrs. A. D. and R. H. Cook, of this city, died at his home in Bound Brook, last night. He was the owner of extensive lumber interests in that town, and the possessor of much business and residence property.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. E. Austin of Warrenville, Somerset county, will celebrate their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary on Christmas Day, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Vermeule, 70 Duer street. Mrs. Austin is a sister of Mr. Vermeule.

Last Night's Council Meeting.

President Smith was unable to attend the common council meeting last night, and in his absence councilman Ginna presided. Mr. Hetfield was absent. The meeting began at 8:32, and adjourned at 9:13. This included a recess of 10 minutes. An ordinance was adopted on second reading and ordered engrossed and advertised preparatory to third reading, for the macadamization of Westervelt avenue, formerly Bay street.

What Water Company is This?

[From The Elizabeth Journal.]

The Union Water company, of Plainfield, have large iron pipes placed along Westfield avenue as far as Roselle, and in the coming spring will continue the line to Lorraine, thus affording property owners at that place the advantage of having pure water from the mountains around Plainfield at a low price.

—A short devotional meeting of the young men's auxiliary to the Y. M. C. A. will be held this evening. Important business in connection with the boys' conference will be transacted.

AN INNOVATION IN WINTER SPORTS.

For Providing Novelty in Popular Entertainment the Crescent League Acquires the Palm.

A game of base-ball will be played next Saturday between two nines, each composed of members of the Crescent League. Unless the thermometer registers zero or below, the game will be played to a finish, even if ulsters have to be worn. The nines are designated as the "Fats" and "Leans". The positions to be taken, barring accidents, are as follows:

LEANS.

Fred. Jones	Catcher
J. Hervey Doane	Pitcher
Chas. B. VanWinkle	First base
Walter Hetfield	Second base
Carroll Emerson	Short stop
Dr. J. A. Allis	Third base
John Kenney	Left field
Clarence E. Teel	Centre field
Chas. A. Reed	Right field

FATS.

Fred. Jones	Catcher
W. A. Coddington	Pitcher
Thomas H. Keller	First base
Chas. K. Moore	Second base
Chas. H. Lyman	Short stop
Geo. O. Stevens	Third base
C. P. Leggett	Right field

On the reserve list, or as substitutes, for the "Leans" are Messrs. Slater, Hallock and Smith; for the "Fats", Messrs. Green, Burnet and Arnold. The umpires agreeing to act are Dr. Fritts at the plate and Geo. Stevens in the field. The names of the change umpires will be noticed in the advertisement of the game; and if their services can be secured they will, THE PRESS is informed, be Gen. Kyte, and Capt. Briggs of Fanwood, A. A. Drake of Westfield, and "Chic" Demarest.

Fred. Jones being behind the bat for both nines will leave but eight men as batters on each side. It is unfortunate that another man could not be found capable of holding the curves of Doane and Coddington, but up to the present writing such seems to be the fact. The field captains will be the second baseman of each team, and THE PRESS is given to understand that they will play for all they are worth, and insist on being supported. The long list of umpires may seem surprising, but the long list of heavy hitters may require it. In any event, it will be a game well worth seeing, and whoever wins will be entitled to credit, for none of the Crescents are known as "quitters".

The line as to weight was drawn at 160 pounds, so it is to be inferred that the "Leans" are under, and "Fats" over that figure as to avoirdupois, though some of the latter nine object to being placed in the same category as the Dickensonian Falstaff.

As will be seen by the official notices, the charge of admission to the grounds to witness the game will be be but twenty-five cents, which is of course merely nominal compared with the novelty of the treat to be enjoyed. The official scorers will be duly announced.

QUERIES FOR THE COURIER.

Mr. Runyon's Paper Asked Some Very Pertinent Questions.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Will the Courier kindly state or deny whether the very same clique now trying to bond Plainfield for sewers, did not give (through their councilmen) a water contract to C. K. Moore, when one twenty-two years old was already in existence? That I suppose was what they call Statesmanship or an illustration of their possession of the business acumen and legal lore so lacking in the "Big Six".

Does the Courier comprehend when animadverting against the "Big Six" for its lack of business and legal knowledge, that it is reflecting on the ability of the corporation counsel, who probably is as able to-day as when he coached the councilmen of the Kean-Sewall combination. Is not his advice to the present council, on matters of law, as likely to be as sound as that given to previous councils?

Ask Messrs. Erickson and F. E. Marsh if the coterie that nominated them, have not repeatedly said—not only within the past year, but in previous years—that they were opposed to any kind of a street railway for Plainfield? And will Erickson and Marsh say plainly that they are in favor of a street railway that is likely to be running before the millennium?

Ask the workingmen who in stormy weather have to trudge on foot, whether they will vote for councilmen who are known to be opposed to any feasible and quickly completed railway scheme? Plainfield cannot wait for the chimerical line, and that is the only line le petit cinq and their friends favor.

Ask the taxpayers if they remember the boast of Plainfield, "We have no bonded debt!" When Elizabeth and Rahway were staggering under their debts; with Elizabeth bonds unsalable at 50; and Rahway bonds unsalable at 32; and real estate unsalable at any price, Plainfielders used to exclaim, "We have no bonded debt!" Taxpayers are doubtless aware that every piece of property is liable for the debts of a city, if the city cannot take care of its obligations.

The nervousness displayed by the Courier to get the clique councilmen and nominees to say that when they said that they were in favor of the city building its own sewers and issuing bonds therefore, they only meant it in a Pickwickian sense, shows that they are like the man who said, "Whenever he opened his mouth, he put his foot in it".

TAXPAYER.

—The entire stock of Randolph Thorn, at 76 West Front street, will be sold at auction next Saturday. The sale will afford opportunity for bargains in household and other goods.

TO OPEN PEACE STREET.

At Last Decisive Action Is Taken to Consummate the Project.

The project to open Peace street to the brook and extend it into the borough is at last receiving material advancement. The Plainfield common council and North Plainfield township committee both met last night and considered the matter. The Plainfield council unanimously adopted a resolution to grant the petition to open the new thoroughfare, and appointed William C. Ayres, William M. Sandford and Jeremiah Manning commissioners to assess benefits and damages.

At the North Plainfield meeting, Messrs. Voorhees and Smith of the township committee were present. Messrs. Daly, Horton, Fairchild, Silvers, Bird, Utzinger, Goodwin, Long and Cooley all spoke in favor of the project. Further consideration and the appointment of commissioners were postponed for one week.

BY THE WAY.

—A victim of drink named Smalley paid a fine of $3 to judge Codington this morning.

—Order your Thanksgiving pies and puddings early, at Stephenson's, 26 North avenue.

—A drunken tramp accused of frightening women and helping himself to food off their tables is locked up in the city jail awaiting trial at 6 p. m.

—The Plainfield players in the foot-ball game on the Crescent grounds Thanksgiving afternoon will be: D. Thompson, Macintosh, Neilhead, Nicholson, Davis, Greenhalgh, Stansfield, McNiel, T. Hendry and H. Wharton.

—A praise and thanksgiving service will be held at Vincent chapel to-morrow night. Those attending will take with them offerings of meat and raiment, to be distributed among the poor people Thanksgiving morning.

—Miss Alice Azeez gave a charming lecture on Syrian and Mohammedan life, in the W. C. T. U. rooms, last evening. The audience was small, but appreciative. The lecturer deserved a large house. She exhibited some fine specimens of oriental wares.

—Fred. Moore, barkeeper for Joe Miller, registered in the First ward this afternoon, giving his residence as the City Hotel. He has been living in the Fourth ward for months. A warrant was sworn out for his arrest, but he cannot be found.

—One of the brightest and best of recent newspaper successes is the New York Recorder, which has rapidly won its way into popular favor all over the country. It is preeminently a home newspaper. To the housewife it has become a constant and valued companion, and the family find it a clean, wholesome and reliable newspaper. Its motto is "First of all the news", and it dishes it up in a most healthful and satisfying way. Its local circulation in towns through New Jersey has grown amazingly.

No use to deny the fact that Salvation Oil is fast taking the place of all other liniments. It is better and cheaper than most of them.

Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup meets the wants of suffering humanity. It will cure a cold or cough better and sooner than any other cough medicine.

—John Grayton, a Pond Tool Works employe, was arrested by policeman Frederickson last night. He resisted arrest and struck the officer. This morning judge Codington gave him 60 days in jail.

Oh, What a Cough!

Will you heed the warning. The signal perhaps of the sure approach of that more terrible disease, Consumption. Ask yourselves if you can afford for the sake of saving 50c., to run the risk and do nothing for it. We know from experience that Shiloh's Cure will cure your cough. It never fails. This explains why more than a Million Bottles were sold the past year. It relieves croup and whooping cough at once. Mothers, do not be without it. For lame back, side or chest, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by J. G. Miller, No. 10 East Front street, Plainfield, N. J.

MR. SMITH TELLS TALES.

HE FURNISHES PROOF OF MR. POPE'S PART IN THE DEAL OF 1890.

And States Why ex-Councilman Marsh Should be Turned Down—A Democrat Was Elected President of a Republican Council by Orders From No. 6 East Front Street—Councilman Ackerman Surprised, but Afterwards Interests Himself in the Same Sort of a Scheme.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—John W. Murray is the only one that is connected with the Ring, who is man enough to come out openly and say the city should be bonded for its improvements. The word "bonded" seems to be very distasteful to most of them, but even his honor, the mayor, says the city should own her sewers; and Mr. See says the city should own her sewers; and Mr. Ackerman says the city should own her sewers; while Mr. Ginna says we do not need sewers, but if they are put in it should be done by the city. Mr. Ginna does not see any demand for sewers for he has a private arrangement of his own for disposing of such accumulation in his residence. Mr. Johnston does n't say anything and never does on any questions coming up. He only votes. I would like to ask these gentlemen how it is possible for the city to construct and own her sewers without bonds are issued by the city to pay for them. This means a mortgage on every man's house in Plainfield. The question for voters to choose is either Ring-rule and bonds, or the people to govern and have all the improvements without any mortgage on their houses. Three of the councilmen mentioned above are already elected, now how many more do they require in order to carry out the scheme of bonding the city—only three.

Mr. Murray has laid the plans in this direction as far as he could to perfection. Mr. Rushmore who was in not being heavy enough to cope with the situation, Mr. Murray decided to lay him aside (notwithstanding his being his son-in-law) and to put forward his brother-in-law, E. N. Erickson. Mr. Erickson is a large stockholder in Mr. Pope's water-works company. He has also been councilman before. He is a member of the parlor circle, so they undoubtedly know what to expect from him. When Harry Stockton's name was first mentioned to me as being the candidate the Ring proposed to nominate to represent the Third Ward, I said, "No! Never! They do not want such a man as Harry Stockton in the council next year, for they can never make a tool of him." What was the result? At the caucus they mustered their forces, headed by young Roger Murray, and defeated Mr. Stockton by 13 votes.

Now, I ask, who is the nominee? An old reliable tool. A man who according to party usages, is not eligible to the office for the reason that when Frank E March and his friends two years ago participated in the Third ward primary, Mr. Marsh was a candidate for renomination. The remark was made that, "Frank is slippery", and the question was asked if Mr. Marsh would abide by the results of the caucus. His friends openly asserted in a speech before the caucus that Mr. Marsh would abide by the decision of the caucus and would support any candidate that was nominated. The result was that although Mr. Rushmore was nominated, Mr. Marsh afterwards declared himself an independent candidate, and ballots were printed with his name on and were worked hard at the polls all day. This is reason number one why he should not be supported by the honest voters of the Third ward. Mr. Marsh's action in the council in relation to the Moore contract also looks very suspicious. He was an ardent opponent to the granting of that franchise and fought it by arguments in the council up to the day before it was passed. The supporters of the enterprise came to the conclusion that it was absolutely necessary to quiet Mr. Marsh. Consequently an adjournment was had for one day. Mr. Marsh was invited to a spread in New York. What he was fed with at that spread besides desserts, of course the public never knew. But the result was most magical, for the next night Frank voted with them on every point. Can it be that Frank has repented and sworn new allegiance to the ring. It must be so or they would never have forced him onto the voters of the Third ward again after sitting on him the way they did two years ago. The most potent and legal reasons why Frank Marsh is not eligible to the office I will give in a later communication in regard to his stewardship connected with the street department.

There has been considerable said in some of the papers about what they call "the deal" to elect Mr. Moffett as president of the council of 1890 and J. B. Coward as city clerk. I would like to state to the citizens of Plainfield the facts relating to that transaction. Previous to the organization and after all the members elected to the council of 1890 had taken the oath of office, D. S. Roberts being very desirous that things should progress in harmony and solely for the city's interest, thought it advisable to hold a caucus of all the members elect, and invited them all with his honor, the mayor, city judge Codington and other officials to meet at his residence. I think they were all present excepting Mr. Rushmore. At that conference it was unanimously agreed to elect Mr. Newhall president of the council, but when we came to the question of the committees, Mr. Newhall thought that the president of the council should name the committees as he thought best. On that point of course we could not agree, so that left the question of the presidency of the council open. At that meeting there were three gentlemen's names mentioned for city clerk: O. B. Leonard, J. B. Coward, and M. M. Dunham. Mr. Dunham was present and plead his own cause, and stated very strong reasons why Mr. Leonard was not entitled to the office, one of which was that he was in business in New York and did not attend to the duties of the office, and that he (Dunham) performed the duties for him for which Mr. Leonard allowed him the insignificant amount of one dollar per week. It was found that Mr. Dunham could not take the office, being then councilman. The question of clerk was also left open and nothing definite was arrived at in the meeting. Mr. Roberts was a strong supporter of Mr. Coward for the position. All the conversations had on the subject in relation to Mr. Coward's being city clerk, was had between Mr. Pope, Mr. Coward and Mr. Roberts. Mr. Roberts spoke to me about the matter and asked me if I would call on Mr. Pope. I did so, and explained to Mr. Pope just how the situation stood, stating also that at first Mr. Dunham was a strong opponent to Mr. Leonard, but was then working hard for him. I said that the only way that we could elect Mr. Coward as city clerk would be by giving the presidency of the council to one of the Democrats. Mr. Pope said: "Smith, I hate to have that done, but I want you to save Coward." We held a caucus previous to organizing on the Monday night, but we could not agree to support Mr. Coward. On leaving Mr. Coward's office to go to the council chamber, I met Mr. Moffett and I asked him if the four Democrats would support Coward for city clerk if we would support him for the presidency of the council. He said, "Why certainly!" That is all there was to the so-called "deal" that so much has been said about.

There was such a hue and cry over it started at the time, that Mr. Pope thought it policy to deny his part in it. It was reported to me that Mr. Pope denied all knowledge of it, which, of course, at the time, surprised me very much. I immediately took two witnesses with me—Daniel S. Roberts and Chief T. O. Doane—and went to Mr. Pope's private office in the post-office. There we met Mr. Pope. I stated the reason for my call, which was that I understood that he had denied all knowledge of or connection with the so-called "Coward deal". I then quoted to him the exact words as given above, and he admitted in the presence of the witnesses that it was true, word for word. Councilman E. R. Ackerman afterwards said to me—when I solicited his support for presidency of the council—that he could not support me, and gave the "Coward deal" as his reason. I explained to him just how it came about, and he said that he was very much surprised to hear me make such a statement, for Mr. Pope had told him that he knew nothing about the "deal". I asked him if he would believe my statement if I would take him before a party who would say that Mr. Pope confessed to him that he did know all about it, and requested him to call that night at the Street committee's room thinking, of course, that Mr. Doane would be there. Mr. Ackerman did call. I asked Mr. Doane, in his presence, if Mr. Pope did not confess to me before him and D. S. Roberts that he participated in the "Coward deal" just as I had stated it. Mr. Doane's answer was: "I am a city official and it would not do for me to take positive sides on any questions, but I will state the truth at all times, Mr. Pope did admit just what Mr. Smith states. After coming out with Mr. Ackerman I asked him who he believed now. And he said: "You, of course!"

I will state here that I have yet to regret for one moment the part I took in that so-called "deal". For the gentlemen that we were brought in close understanding with, I have found to be men of honest intent, true to their constituents and having but one object in view—the city's interests as a city, and the catering to no faction. Now I will give the citizens a little synopsis of a deal that was attempted to be put through by the leaders and their tools in the council to defeat me for the presidency of the council in 1891. John W. Murray openly stated that I could not be president of the council, and he worked his cards for all they were worth. But all he could get to show up was the little "Five-spot". The Five also worked hard, and as a last resort Mr. See and Mr. Ackerman called on Mr. Spangenberg and offered him the presidency of the council if he would desert the gentleman that were standing by Mr. Smith. I would ask the question, were they acting under orders of the bosses? They must have been or Mr. Ackerman surely would not have attempted to put through a Deal much blacker then the one he once thought me guilty of.

SEYMOUR G. SMITH,
President of Council 1891.

Get the Genuine.

If you suffer with lame back, especially in morning, ALLCOCK'S PLASTERS are a sure relief.

If you cannot sleep, try an ALLCOCK PLASTER, well up between the shoulder blades—often relieves—sometimes cures. Try this before you resort to opiates.

If any of your muscles are lame—joints stiff—feel as if they wanted oiling—or if you suffer with any local palns or aches, these plasters will cure you.

If you use them once you will realize why so many plasters have been made in imitation of them. Like all good things, they are copied as closely as the law allows. Don't be duped by taking an imitation when it is as easy to get the genuine.

If you always insist upon having ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS and never accept a substitute, you will not be disappointed.

THE WAY TO GO SOUTH.

Take Captain Jack Heipher's Good Ship "Roanoke" With Its Equipment of Affable and Careful Officers.

A trip for rest and recreation well begun, its purpose then is more than half accomplished. And it is fresh from a journey of experience that the writer speaks when he admonishes every reader of THE PRESS who may be going South, to go only by the Old Dominion line—or rather the "Good" Old Dominion line as its passengers affectionately speak of it forever after. Any of its ships will carry you over the waters comfortably, enjoyably and safely, because all are under orders from that most shrewd and experienced of all general managers, Vice President Captain Henry A. Bourne, who knows every detail of the steam-ship business from the vessel's hold to the board of directors' room. A seafaring man himself in his younger days, he knows every desire of his company's patrons and every necessity of his ships.

But if you would make a choice, choose the stanch ship "Roanoke." Her commander, Captain John Gregory Hulphers, is the most gallant to the women, and the most courteous to the men, yet withal the most capable, watchful and reliable officer that treads the deck today in any port. Last year he made 78 voyages, traveled 46,410 miles at sea, made 531 landings, and carried 5,081 cabin passengers, 7,192 steerage passengers and millions of dollars worth of freight without the slightest casualty. In stormy weather his ship is intrusted to no other hands than his, and the only nights he sleeps are when on shore at his Brooklyn home under the roof that shelters his wife and children. He is a model captain and a prince of hosts, and his ship's staff is composed entirely of just such competent and affable gentlemen throughout.

The first officer, Ira W. Tapley, is one of the most efficient in the company's service, and an unusually faithful official. Night after night in the ports of New York, Norfolk, Portsmouth and Newport News, you will find him watching from the dock the loading and unloading of the ship. Five million pounds of freight are stored away in the hold and between decks, yet he knows in just what spot is placed each package from fire-crackers to pianos going South, or from green peas to pig iron coming North. Then you will find him a most instructive man to listen to if he has a few minutes to spare. He'll entertain you on any subject whether copper mining, reciprocity, salad making, or the single tax. He should have a ship of his own, but that would be a great loss to the ship he is now on.

The purser of the "Roanoke," W. H. Mayer, is another of the ship's genial gentlemen. If you come too late to secure a cooler stateroom and are put in No. 29, it is not his fault, and you may rest assured that he'll change it at the first opportunity. One of the many features that recommend the Old Dominion line to the traveling public, is its rule to give each passenger the whole of one of the big staterooms as long as there are any unoccupied. But the one of all others who has it in his power and department to do the most for you, is the one now spoken of last—Steward Shaw. His tempting menus will drive all thought of sickness from you, and a cup of his coffee that is ready for you whether you are just rising in the morning, or standing on the bridge at midnight "helping" the Captain see his way out between Cape Henry and Cape Charles, will make a new man of you.

There are others on that good ship "Roanoke" that deserve many a word of praise—in fact, there is not a ship better manned on any sea—but space forbids. The line was established in 1865. It has six ocean going ships and twenty that plough through inland waters. The company's officers are: John M. Robinson, president; Henry A. Bourne, vice president and general manager; and W. L. Guillaudeu, traffic manager. You can telephone to the New York office, 235 West street, corner of Beach, opposite the company's pier, No 26, North river, for passage and stateroom. If you put yourself in the hands of passenger agent Richard R. Window, all arrangements will be made without any trouble on your part. Once more THE PRESS would proclaim this admonition—if you're going South, go by the Good Old Dominion line.

A Fine Christmas Issue.

Among the magazines for December, Peterson's is one of the earliest and best. This closing number of its 50th year is especially fine, being rich in illustrations and literary matter. Howard Seely's "Two Belles of the Border" is a very amusing sketch of Texas life. "Idle Days at St. Augustine" is ably written and illustrated with fine photogravures. "My Husband's Cousin" is a capital story, and all the others are good. The fashion department commends itself for the practical character of the plates, the descriptions of style and the plainness of direction for make-up. New writers of well-known ability, and new features, are announced for 1892, that will add materially to the value of the magazine. The terms are only $2 a year, with low club rates, and valuable premiums are offered to club raisers. Send for a sample copy with full terms and premium offers. Address Peterson's Magazine, Philadelphia.

PEARLS IN NEW JERSEY.

Valuable Find of Jewels by a Tiller of the Soil.

The report comes from Philadelphia that a new Jersey farmer arrived there a few days ago with fifteen pearls found in a small fresh-water stream near his home. The report says: "They were sold for $700, upon the opinion of a New York expert that they were the best he had ever seen and were perfect gems. They were finer than those found some months ago in a Wisconsin river bed and sold to Tiffany. For fear of overstocking the market or causing a rush of adventurers to his farm, the location is concealed. The creek is alive with gems. Turnips and cabbages have no further attraction for the farmer."

Yesterday George F. Kunz of Tiffany & Co. said to a reporter that it was not an unusual thing to find pearls in New Jersey. They are often obtained, he said, in large and valuable specimens in the shell known as the unio. In 1857 a pearl of fine lustre weighing 93 grains was found in Notch Brook, near Paterson. It became known as the "Queene Pearl", and was sold by Tiffany & Co. to the Empress Eugenie of France for $2,500. Today it is worth four or five times that amount.

The news of the find at Notch Brook created a great deal of excitement, and unios all over the State were gathered in large quantities. Millions were examined, but with little or no result. A large, round pearl weighing 400 grains, which would doubtless have been the finest of modern times, was ruined by an impetuous Jerseyman who boiled open the shell.

During the early summer of 1889, Mr. Kunz says, a large quantity of magnificent pearls were found in the rivers and creeks of Wisconsin, and more than $10,000 worth, lustrous to an extent heretofore unheard of, were sold in New York city.

A POPULAR WRITER.

The Literary Career of William Dean Howells.

His Early Life a Bold Struggle for Existence—Fame and Honors Won Under Adverse Conditions—His Later Triumphs.

William Dean Howells came of sturdy stock. His ancestors on his father's side were Welsh Quakers. His grandfather was a born believer in free republican government, and came to America with those principles firmly implanted in him. He became a pronounced Methodist, but his son, the father of the novelist, was a believer in the doctrines of Swedenborg, in which also William Dean was educated. His father was a man of more than ordinary culture, possessed an excellent library for his day and generation, and the boy was brought up in an atmosphere of books and culture. He was led early to court literature, and almost as soon as he could read William Dean made verses and put them in type in the office of his father.

William was born at Martin's Ferry, O., March 1, 1837. When 3 years old his father removed to Hamilton, O., where he bought the Intelligencer, a weekly newspaper, where the future novelist learned to "stick type" when he was only 12 years old. In 1849 the father sold his paper because he could not conscientiously support a president who believed in slavery, and he removed to Dayton, where he bought the Transcript, a semi-weekly, and made a daily of it. This failed, however, at the end of about two years. In 1851 the elder Howells was a clerk of the house at the state capitol, and William Dean worked as compositor for $4 a week in the office of the Ohio State Journal. There he made the acquaintance of John J. Piatt, which was very helpful to him. The family removed soon thereafter to Ashtabula, where they worked on a newspaper, the Sentinel, which the elder Howells purchased, and on which the family worked; this journal was transferred to Jefferson, where they issued it.

WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS.

At the age of 19 William Dean Howells became Columbus correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette; and at the age of 22 he was news editor of the State Journal at Columbus. It was during this period that he began to contribute to the Atlantic Monthly, his first poem being entitled "By the Dead." He contributed some five or six poems during that time to the Atlantic. In 1860, when Lincoln was assassinated, he wrote his life, and his share of the profits, one hundred and sixty dollars, paid his expenses on a trip made to Montreal and Boston. While at "The Hub" he formed the acquaintance of James Russell Lowell, then the editor of the Atlantic, and by him the young poet was introduced to Oliver Wendell Holmes. He was appointed by President Lincoln as United States consul to Venice, where he remained from 1861 to 1865. It was during this period that he mastered the Italian language, read Italian literature, and devoted himself to thorough cultivation of polite letters. He published a series of letters on "Venetian Life," published in book form in England, which gave him a pronounced position in literary circles. It is said that Venice was never so faithfully photographed.

His first real story was that called "Their Wedding Journey," which was from the beginning a success. This determined his career as a writer of fiction. Since that time his works have followed rapidly one after another. The Century and Harper's have been the chief avenues for the preliminary publication of his works. In 1882-83 Mr. Howells was again in Europe with his family, and since his return home has been in Boston. 1886 he become a salaried contributor to Harper's.

The Lost River.

A puzzle to geologists is the Lost river of Idaho. It first appears in two threads of stream north of the Yellowstone park. These streams come together forty miles above Idaho Falls City, and, forming a rapid river, flow along for two miles when the volume of water disappears suddenly in a subterranean passage. A theory very generally entertained is that the Lost river comes to the surface again as part of the Snake river, which supplies Idaho Falls City with its wonderful water power. The Snake river has its origin in a little lake in Yellowstone park that does not hold enough water to be the source of a great river. Nevertheless the Snake is 1,000 feet wide, a short distance east of the city, and in its limits pours a vast volume of water through a deeply-cut gorge. Here the river is so deep that a plummet of nearly 400 feet has not touched bottom. As the Snake river is originally an insignificant stream the theory that the waters of the Lost river unite with it seems to be tenable, although geologists have been unable to demonstrate the fact.

Chicago Was First.

The first steel rails made in this country were made at Chicago in May, 1865.

A CALLER.

Uncle Reub—Is yo' Inspectah Byrnes?

The Inspector—I am.

Uncle Reub—Well, sah, ef yo' ain't too busy I wisht you'd inspect dis yer lump on my haid 'n tell me whuvver I'd bettah sue d' feller fer murder 'r jess liftin' wool.—Judge.

Doubtful Compliment.

Jacob Block, who has a store on Chatham street, has a son called Levi, who resembles him very much. Young Levi Block was traveling, when a perfect stranger seized him by the hand and said:

"Are you not the son of my old friend Mr. Block, of New York?"

Block replied that he was.

"I knew it. I knew it the moment I laid my eyes on you, from your resemblance to your father. You have the same features and shaped head. In fact, when I saw you I thought I was looking at the original old block-head."—Texas Siftings.

The Trouble with Dress Reform.

Mr. Savelittle—Well, my dear, did you go to that dress reform lecture as I suggested?

Mrs. S.—Yes, and it was very interesting.

"What do you think of the idea?"

"The reform dress is certainly sensible, convenient and decidedly becoming, but—"

"Well, what's the 'but?'"

"I can't see, my love, how such a simple garment can ever be made to cost enough to be respectable."—N. Y. Weekly.

In Montana.

First Book Agent—When did you leave Boomville?

Second Book Agent—Night before last.

First Book Agent—How was the walking?

Second Book Agent—I left by rail.

First Book Agent—But I understood there was no road running to Boomville.

First Book Agent (sadly)—There isn't; if there had been the mob wouldn't have caught me.—Jury.

The Wrong Man.

Clubberly—My tailor came around yesterday and I couldn't pay him. Sad, I assure you.

Puppette—I know how that is, and I can sympathize with you, old man.

Clubberly—Don't sympathize with me. Sympathize with the tailor.—Clothier and Furnisher.

George All Right.

"When George asked you to be his wife," inquired the mother, "wasn't he a good deal flustered and confused?"

"Yes, mamma," replied Laura, looking admiringly at something that sparkled on her shapely finger, "but what he said had the right ring about it."—Chicago Tribune.

THE DEPTH OF MISERY.

How to Surely Escape It.

For abject misery nothing exceeds the condition of the dyspeptic. Sufferers from dyspepsia are irritable, nervous, cross, blue, discouraged, depressed in mind and miserable in body.

Good health means good digestion, and you who cannot eat because food distresses you, have gas, faintness, sourness, sinking or knawing at pit of stomach, poor appetite, swelling or bloating, who are bilious, with dizzy, dull-feeling head, bad taste and feel depressed, lack strength and energy, remember that it is your stomach and weakened nerves which cause all your difficulties.

How to overcome these distressing conditions is the great question. There is one remedy which never fails, the greatest of all stomach medicines, Dr. Greene's Nervura. If you have not tried this wonderful remedy which so quickly and perfectly regulates the stomach and bowels, assists digestion and aids assimilation,

Do so at once and good appetite, perfect digestion, sound health will be yours. Purely vegetable and harmless. All druggists, $1.

"I suffered much pain, could not eat or sleep well, and felt miserable. I used Dr. Greene's Nervura and took it but a few weeks before I was completely cured. I advise all who are complaining to use Dr. Greene's Nervura.

GEORGE W. LUMB,
17 to 27 North Water st., Poughkeepsie, N. Y."

GAME OF THE YEAR

Yale and Princeton Kick for Fame To-Morrow.

GREAT STRUGGLE ANTICIPATED.

Forty Thousand People Expected to See the Match at Manhattan Field.

Princeton's "Tigers" in Fine Form, and Yale, Flushed With Last Saturday's Victory, Very Confident—Betting Light, But in Yale's Favor—Good Weather Prayed for By Thousands of College Men.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—To-morrow afternoon on Manhattan Field the 'varsity football elevens of Yale and Princeton will play the final game of the season for the intercollegiate football championship. In the matter of public interest this is the most important game of the football season. If to-morrow is a favorable day, the crowd of spectators will probably be over 40,000, the largest that has ever witnessed a football game in this country.

No matter which side wins, the struggle for the championship promises to be a hard one. Last year it was a one-sided contest. Princeton worked developing a team until she turned out the champions of 1889, and then fell flat. Last year she had no material in college to work into a strong eleven, and was swamped by Yale as a result. Of the two colleges, Princeton and Harvard, Princeton has always been the stronger opponent of Yale on account of her knowledge of the game, and with good material at hand this year there is no reasonable ground for supposing that Princeton will not give Yale a hard game to-morrow.

Of the Princeton team, Warren the captain, is a Lawrenceville graduate. This is his third year at Princeton. Before entering college Warren had established his reputation on his preparatory school team, of which he was captain. In his freshmen year he began work by trying for his class team. His work soon caused "Snake" Ames, then captain of the Princeton eleven, to invite the smooth-faced youth to take a place at right end on the scrub team. Warren filled his position so admirably that Ames had no cause for regret when circumstances called for a new man and Warren was placed on the 'varsity team. He played in the Harvard game, but it was in the memorable battle of '89 on the Berkeley Oval that the freshman distinguished himself. Aided by Donnelly's splendid interference he dropped on the ball when McBride muffed it. Princeton thus scored four points and Warren had established his reputation. Last year he was on the sick list nearly all the season, but played in the Yale game. He was not in form, however, and did not distinguish himself. After Riggs resigned the captaincy of the eleven Warren was chosen. Warren plays on the right end.

Next to Warren plays Harold, the right tackler. Harold is a powerful man. When running he reminds one somewhat of Cowan, although not the equal of that man as a player. Harold has played for three years on the Franklin and Marshall team, and was considered one of their best men.

Symmes, the centre rusher of the team, is a powerful looking fellow. His broad back and shoulders, his big head, and his expansive smile making him one of the most intersting men on the team.

Wheeler, left guard, is one of the most powerful men on the rush line. He is considered to be as strong as Riggs. Wheeler has played on the St. Paul's school team, where he prepared for college.

Riggs at right guard is the giant of the rush line. He is the mainstay of the team and the man on whom Capt. Warren most relies to break Yale's rushes. Riggs is of a football family. Two or three older brothers have graduated from Princeton, and were prominent football players. At present there are four members of the family in college. Three of them play on the scrub team and sometimes on the 'varsity. Riggs has played right guard on the 'varsity eleven since he entered college in 1888. Riggs is not only a plucky man, but he is a tricky man, and few can get the best of him.

Princeton has two crack men in Holly and Vincent at left tackle and left end respectively. Holly is a Shortledge Academy man. He entered Princeton this year as a freshman. One day while walking across the campus he was noticed by one of the men who were out in quest of new material. He was asked if he ever played football. He replied that he had played a little, and further said that he intended playing at least for the scrub team. His youthful appearance scarcely justified any hope of making the 'varsity. But one day's practice was sufficient to convince Warren that Holly had in him the making of a 'varsity man. He was placed at guard, then at tackle, and has held the latter position ever since. He is not over heavy, but is very strong.

Behind the line Princeton is strong. With King at quarter back, Flint and Poe for half backs and Homans at full back, the ball ought to be advanced more times than it is forced back by Yale. King is a "heady" player. He is cool and follows the ball closely. Flint and Poe are ground gainers, and Homans is a good kicker. Princeton also has a good line of substitutes, a fact which speaks well for the future of her game.

Yale will probably put the same familiar men in the field that played against Harvard at Springfield last Saturday. These men are: Hinckey, left end; Winters, left tackle; Helfelfinger, left guard; Sanford, centre; Morrison, right guard; Waltis, right tackle; Hartwell, right end; Barbour, quarter back; L. Bliss, left half back; Capt. McClung, right half back, and McCormick, full back.

The betting on the game is light. Students and sporting men offer 5 to 3 on Yale, but find few takers. There is one man who offers $2,000 to $1,000 on Yale and cannot get his money covered. For small amounts he could find many takers.

BRAZILIAN AFFAIRS.

Martens Will Probably be the Future President—Business Reviving.

LONDON, Nov. 25.—Dispatches come freely now from Rio Janeiro, the censorship having been removed. The resignation of Marshal da Fonseca was a great relief, and has proved the solution of the complications which were gathering around the new Republic.

Acting President Peixotto and the provisional cabinet by which he is now surrounded will proceed to restore the operation of the constitution and laws. The general election will be hurried on, the Legislature assembled at the earliest possible moment and unity and harmony between the provinces re-established.

In Rio Janeiro confidence is returning and business has revived. There is great rejoicing over the turn things have taken and Marshal da Fonseca is highly praised for his patriotism in withdrawing from power, although no regret is shown for his resignation.

The change has brought peace and tranquility to Rio Grande do Sul, but the provisional government of that State still holds an attitude of armed attention, awaiting the proceedings of the new government at Rio, in which implicit confidence is not yet placed by the Republicans, it being regarded as a creation of the ex-President Da Fonseca, and not to be trusted until it is tried. In fact it cannot last long. It must make way for a new one which will command the confidence of the whole country.

Don Silvira Martens, formerly Governor of Rio Grande do Sul, is spoken of everywhere as the future President of the Republic. He is a moderate man, but a strong Republican, and through all the vicissitudes of Da Fonseca's administration has retained the confidence of the people while incurring the enmity of the Marshal, who regarded him as his most dangerous rival.

Acting President Piexotto has appointed the following Cabinet: Minister of War, Gen. Jose Semeao; Minister of Marine, Admiral Custodio de Mello; Finance, Dr. Francisco Alves; Justice and the Interior, Jose Perpira; Agriculture, Anato de Faria; Foreign Affairs, Constantine Polita.

Senor Figuerido is in prison on the charge of having abused his opportunities in connection with Brazilian finances. No sympathy is expressed for him.

Minister Mendonca Notified.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—Minister Mendonca received a cablegram from the Brazilian Minister of Foreign Affairs last night which officially confirms the cable dispatches from Brazil about the resignation of President Fonseca and stating that Vice-President Piexetto had succeeded him. Minister Mendonca is expecting further advices from Brazil in regard to the present cabinet and what changes may take place in it.

Is Le Grand an American?

LONDON, Nov. 25.—The man Le Grand, known as "The French Colonel," Capt. Anderson, and by other names, who has been convicted of writing menacing letters to Lady Jessell, the Baroness Bolsover and other ladies, was convicted yesterday of forging checks and uttering them to the London and Westminister Bank. Le Grand, who is believed by the police to be a noted American criminal, who has worked both the United States and Europe for years past, had for an associate a man named Everard Smith, who has managed so far to escape arrest.

Robbed Three Times in One Year.

CARBONDALE, Pa., Nov. 25.—Three times within a year the Post Office in this city has been robbed. When Frank Yarrington, one of the clerks, reached the office yesterday morning he found that the safe door was open and its contents scattered about the room. All the cash and money packages in the safe had been taken, and many stamps were missing. The safe was opened by wrenching off the combination dial plate and driving the central part of the lock through the inner plate.

Suffering from a Coal Famine.

DANSVILLE, N. Y., Nov. 25.—A coal famine prevails here. No coal has been brought in since the Erie people abandoned the Valley road, four weeks ago. The dealers have many loaded cars on the Erie tracks at Avon. They put an old engine on the road, intending to make up a coal train, but the boiler burst on the trial trip. Hundreds of families have not had a pound of coal in two weeks.

No Chance for Peace.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 25.—President Zack Phelps has returned from Chicago, and in an interview gave it as his opinion that there would be ten clubs in his organization next season. The single club required would probably be placed in Brooklyn or New York. The circuit would be almost certainly decided within the next ten days. There is no chance for peace or a great twelve club league, despite the League's reports.

AFRAID OF A GHOST

The Queer Doings in a Brooklyn Police Station.

OFFICERS PULLED OUT OF BED.

Room in Which a Minister Killed His Wife and Himself Haunted.

Over Fifty Men in the Station House, and Each One Has Seen or Heard Manifestations of the Spirit—A Cot that No One Will Occupy—The Case of Barney Malone and His Nocturnal Visitor.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 24.—The ghost in the police station of the Second Precinct, of this city, is at its work again, and although the officers have had considerable experience with the spirit, there is a feeling of dread and anxiety, if not alarm, among them, that seems strange to men accustomed to trying scenes.

From Capt. John Eason, its gallant army-veteran commander, down to its latest enrolled patrolman, each and every one firmly believes that the station is haunted. Not only that, but all are willing to submit evidence on the subject.

The station building, which comprises Nos. 49 and 51 Fulton street, was formerly a bank, and had for janitor John Kemlo. Mr. Kemlo occupied apartments on the fourth or top floor, overlooking Fulton street. His son, the Rev. Mr. Kemlo, boarded with him, as did also his son's wife, and a partition separated the old man's rooms from those of his son and daughter-in-law, the latter occupying those to the west of the dividing line, and the clergyman and his wife the eastern wing of the floor. One night about ten years ago the young clergyman, while temporarily insane, cut his wife's throat, and then, jumping from the open window of his father's bedroom to the sidewalk, fractured his skull and died at once.

This fourth floor is now used as a dormitory by sixteen officers of the station, and Patrolman Barney Malone sleeps, when he gets a chance, in a bed immediately under what is termed the "parson's window," by which is meant the one through which Kemlo jumped to his death. Two nights ago in the silent watches of the night Officer Malone was awakened by the touch of cold hands on his feet, which he felt were dragging him from the bed. Although the light in the big room burned low, there was still sufficient there to enable him to see—nothing. And yet he felt himself drawn down by an invisible power, and he yelled as loudly as he could, and stretched back his right hand to the spot under his pillow where rested his official revolver.

Under ordinary circumstances officer Malone's comrades, who raised their heads to inquire what he was raising so much row about, would have concluded merely that he had eaten a hearty dinner, but knowing the history of the room, Officer Hugh McLaughlin, acting as spokesman for the others, contented himself with saying: "Oh, boys, go to sleep; it is only that infernal spook at one of his tricks. Let us go to sleep, and, Barney, please don't make such an awful clamor."

This midnight episode may appear grotesque, if not humorous, reading to most people, but the men compelled to sleep in that room take it very seriously indeed. And it would seem as if they had cause, for there is something more tragic than cold ghostly hands connected with those apartments. It is a fact well known in police circles that the Second Station shows more deaths among its members by far than any other in Brooklyn, and though the medical man may be able to assign sanitary causes for such mortality, the officers of the Second persistently maintain that it arises from superhuman influences.

The force belonging to the station is composed of 55 men. Since the tragedy of ten years ago many have died, and of the number, five in succession, who used to sleep on a cot in that space. Their names were Richard Halpin, Edward Acker, Richard Colton, Patrolman Gardner and John Costello, the last victim died seven weeks ago. A sixth man went crazy, and was sent to the hospital. He recovered, and was transferred to another precinct, where he does duty cheerfully and intelligently.

Any one entering the room for the first time cannot fail to be struck with a vacant space between two bedcots right in front of him on the Fulton street side. There is space for one more cot, but no cot is there, and no man in the station would lie on one placed there for one night, if by so doing he was to earn $100.

As a matter of fact, Hugh McLaughlin, above mentioned, who is a philosopher in his way, has a standing offer of $25 to any man who will occupy the vacant space for one night. Up to this he has found no takers. The space is under the west window, and it was there the crazy clergyman committed the deed for which he died a moment later of his own volition.

Officer McLaughlin, the philosopher, who knows more about the spook and its ways, and is more interested in its movements than any one else, says regarding it:

"People may laugh and jest about such things, but, after all, will any one assign a cause for the noises we hear and the things we see in this dormitory apart from the supernatural? The officers of the station, though I say it myself, are as brave and intelligent as any in Brooklyn. Owing to the peculiar locality they have to locate in, they are inured to danger, and yet you cannot get one of them to occupy that space. Even John McCahan and John McKenna, two men remarkable for courage, who sleep on either side of it, are nervous and wakeful half the night. Would I sleep there? No, I guess not. I do believe in ghosts, but I did not take any stock in them until I came here.

"The most unearthly shrieks are heard in this room at night, and though the Captain says they are caused by the reverberations of the Elevated Railroad we have our own opinions on the matter. Shrieks are heard when the trains are not running, and, besides, reverberations are not accustomed to pull big, strong men like Barney Malone out of bed. Have I ever seen the spook? I cannot say I have, but other officers assert that they have seen the bloody drama of ten years since re-enacted before their eyes; seen the woman struggling for life on the bed and the madman jump once more through the window. The men who have died have been among the number who saw the gruesome sight."

ARCHBISHOP OF AIX GUILTY.

Convicted and Sentenced to Pay a Fine of 3,000 Francs.

PARIS, Nov. 25.—The long talked of trial of Monsignor Gouthe-Soulard, Archbishop of Aix, took place yesterday before the members of the first division of the Court of Appeals, and created the most intense excitement.

The origin of the case was the outbreak which occurred in Rome at the time of the French pilgrimage to that city. Some of the pilgrims visited the Pantheon, where are interred the remains of King Victor Emmanuel, and one of them wrote in the register for names of visitors:

"Down with King Humbert," "Long live the Pope."

It was pointed out that these were not proper expressions to write beside the tomb of the living King's father, whereupon the pilgrim spat upon the book. The result was that as soon as the affair was noised about the city a band of the more enthusiastic and hot-headed of the Romans proceeded to a hotel where a large number of the pilgrims were stopping and compelled the proprietor to hoist the Italian flags. The pilgrims were attacked wherever they were found, and for a time the incident threatened to have very serious consequences.

The affair was the cause of diplomatic correspondence between the French and Italian governments. While this correspondence was being conducted the French Minister of Justice and Public Worship issued a circular letter to the French bishops forbidding them to leave their dioceses without first procuring the consent of the government.

The Archbishop of Aix declined to admit the jurisdiction of the government in a matter of this sort, and he disobeyed the order and went to Rome. He also addressed a letter to M. Fallieres, the sending of which was the basis of the present prosecution. Upon his return to his diocese the Archbishop was served with a citation to appear before the court.

The charges were read by the clerk of the court, and the Archbishop stood up in person and made his reply in a calm, deliberate manner, after which the public prosecutor set forth the government side of the case. At the conclusion of the arguments the Archbishop was declared guilty and fined 3,000 francs.

National Democratic Committee

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—Much interest is felt in the approaching meeting of the executive committee of the National Democratic Committee, which is called to convene in Washington on Dec. 8. This committee will issue a call for a meeting of the National Democratic Committee in this city, and it is thought that the date fixed will be Jan. 8, 1892. Already interest centres in where the Democratic convention will be held. The following cities are in the field and have, through soliciting support of the committee, formally announced themthemselves: Washington, New York, Detroit, Cincinnati, Baltimore, Chicago and Minneapolis.

Father Accused of a Heinous Crime.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Nov. 25.—Eugene Bell was arrested here last night charged with a very serious offense. He is accused of having criminal intercourse with his own daughter, a pretty girl, 16 years old. The girl is in a precarious condition and says her father is responsible for her disgrace. She also accuses him of having caused the death of an older daughter two years ago. On the occasion of the girl's death, which resulted from spasms, Bell was accused, but the matter was hushed up. Bell has been employed by the corporation for the past ten years and is well known.

Hotel Firm Gone Under.

BOSTON, Nov. 25.—Russell & Sturgis, late lessees of the American House, filed a petition in insolvency yesterday. A mortgage of $50,000, placed on the furnishings of the hotel by Messrs. Russell and Sturgis at the time they took hold, was recently foreclosed. The firm's embarrassments arises from the fact that they had to make a number of alterations and repairs in the hotel, the outlay thus entailed being about $50,000. Aside from the bills for the above the firm's unsecured liabilities are inconsiderable.

New York's Assembly.

ALBANY, N. Y., Nov. 25.—In the Assembly the seating of Ryan and Beakes gives the Democrats 66 members and the Republicans 64. The death of Assemblyman Murphy will reduce the Democratic vote in the Assembly to 65, which will still give them a majority of three, and secure the organization.

CHILI AND THE FAIR

She Has Voted $200,000 for a Representation.

NOT SO VERY MAD AFTER ALL.

Police and Other Officials Getting Into a Calm State of Mind.

The Warlike Ardor of the People Dampened—Probable that a Report Doing Justice to the Baltimore's Men Will Soon be Rendered—Reported that the United States Will Demand Indemnity.

VALPARAISO, Nov. 25.—In spite of the decision of Congress to do everything possible to place Chilian finances upon a firm basis, and the fact that considerable retrenchment and economics are necessary, it was decided yesterday, officially to devote the sum of $200,000 to provide for Chili's representation at the Chicago World's Fair in 1892.

There is a marked reaction, as this action just taken will show, in favor of the United States. This may or may not be caused by the fact that it is an acknowledged fact that the Chilian authorities having the Baltimore's sailors' grievances in course of investigation, are weakening considerably.

Though the official result of the investigation has not yet become known enough has leaked out to show that the high stand at first taken by the police and other officials has dwindled down into a much more common sense frame of mind.

It is reported here, in this connection, that this change of mind is, to a considerable extent, due to sobering advice which the Chilian government has received, semi-officially, from the representatives here of the European powers. The Chilians, there is no doubt, at one time counted in being supported in the ground they took by the British Minister, and perhaps, by the British government. There may or may not have been, at any time, foundation for such a belief, but it is safe to say that the Chilians have been thoroughly convinced that they will have to rely on themselves alone should she cause any further trouble to the United States.

This assurance and reports which have reached here of extensive naval preparations being made by the United States have considerably dampened the warlike ardor of the people of this city and of Santiago, and it is probable that a compromise report, doling justice to the Baltimore's men, and indemnity to the United States will be soon rendered.

And now, another most important question has cropped up. It is reported here in official circles that whatever the result of the Baltimore inquiry may be, the United States will demand an indemnity of Chili for the families of the men killed and for the expense the United States Government has been put to owing to armaments, etc., made necessary by the recent trouble between the two governments.

Connecticut's Gubernatorial Fight.

HARTFORD, Conn., Nov. 25.—In the second day's hearing of the Morris-Bulkeley case, Mr. Ingersoll consumed an hour in making his argument. He dwelt upon the Constitutional question involved, and insisted upon the claim of the Democrats that the election is consummated in the presence of the electors. He was followed by Hon H. C. Robinson, who closed for the Republican side. He answered the main points of the Democratic argument, and held that it was competent for the Legislature to go behind the returns. It was agreed to submit supplemental briefs, and the Court then adjourned without day.

Trust Company Claims $150,000.

ALBANY, N. Y., Nov. 25.—Application was made to the Special Term of the Supreme Court, Justice Fursman presiding, yesterday, by General Swayne of New York, on behalf of the Jarvis Conklin Trust Company of Missouri, to compel the Superintendent of the Banking Department of the State of New York to return to the trust company $150,000 deposited with the Banking Department when the trust company commenced to receive deposits and assume obligations in this State.

New Coal Mine Opened.

MT. CARMEL, Pa., Nov. 25.—Work has commenced in the Patterson Coal Company's mine at this place. The operation is the largest in the lower anthracite region, and when worked full-handed will employ 1,200 miners and ship 50,000 tons monthly. The new breaker is situated in the centre of 2,700 acres of rich coal lands. A seven-mile railroad connecting the new works with the Philadelphia & Reading system was completed on Saturday.

Health Inspectors for Canadian Trains.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—Assistant Secretary Nettleton, at the request of the Governor of Michigan, has assigned health inspectors to board trains coming from Canada. This inspection is caused by the prevalence of smallpox in Canada. The inspectors will be stationed at Port Huron and Detroit, Mich.

Immigrants of a Month.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—During October past 54,182 immigrants arrived in the United States, against 46,267 in October, 1890. Of the arrivals last month, Germany furnished 13,224; Russia, 7,656; England and Wales, 5,883; Ireland, 5,282; Sweden and Norway, 4,529 and Italy, 4,441.

Conservative Convention Over.

BIRMINGHAM, Nov. 25.—The great Conservative Convention concluded yesterday. At the mass meeting in the Town Hall last night the Marquis of Salisbury made an address, in which he said: "Home rule for Ireland would only lead to rebellion and the necessary re-conquest of Ireland by England."

GOV. HOVEY'S FUNERAL.

The Remains to Be Buried at His Old Home in Mount Vernon.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 25.—The remains of Gov. Hovey were placed in state at the Capitol building yesterday morning at 10 o'clock, and have been viewed by thousands of people. Yesterday afternoon the G. A. R. held memorial exercises, in which ex-Governors Gray and Porter participated.

This afternoon they will be conveyed by special car to their last resting place at the old home of the deceased, Mount Vernon. The funeral cortege will consist of the new Chief Executive, the Supreme and the Appelate Courts, the State officers, committees of the Grand Army, and detachments of the State militia.

When Mount Vernon is reached the body will again lie in state, and will then be buried in the family tomb in the City cemetery, the Grand Army Ritual being used in the interment.

The death of Gov. Hovey brings into the office of Chief Executive of Indiana, Lieut.-Gov. Ira Chase of Danville.

More Victims of the Storm.

BELLEFONTE, Pa., Nov. 25.—During the storm a new church at Hecla was blown down. A number of school children had sought shelter from the storm within its portals and they were all buried beneath the debris. They were speedily rescued. It was found that John Barner and Elias Dunkle were fatally injured, while five others were seriously hurt. At Howard, a farmer, was seriously injured by flying timbers from his barn which was wrecked by the storm.

To Build the Utah University.

BOSTON, Nov. 25.—A meeting of prominent men was held at Boston University yesterday, and an organization effected for the purpose of raising all necessary funds to build the Utah University at Ogden, Utah. The movement is under the leadership of Mr. Edward Everett Hale, and President Warren of Boston University.

Attempt to Blow Up a Tenement.

PATERSON, N. J., Nov. 25.—A dastardly attempt was made yesterday to blow up an Italian tenement in Jersey street, this city, with dynamite. The explosion damaged the building considerably. Although the house is occupied by many Italians no one was hurt. The police have not yet discovered the person or persons who committed the act.

NEW JERSEY JOTTINGS.

J. Sexton Folwell's grocery store at Mount Holly was damaged by fire yesterday to the extent of $2,000.

The State Convention of the New Jersey Catholic Benevolent Legion was held in Patterson, N. J., yesterday.

Edward Grasburg, a lunatic, escaped from the asylum at Snake Hill yesterday. He was recaptured at his home in Jersey City.

Referee Brandenburgh has submitted a report to Chancellor McGill, at Trenton, recommending that Mrs. Dr. Newell of Jersey City Heights be granted a divorce from he husband, Dr. Newell.

Chancellor McGill signed an injunction yesterday to restrain Jersey City from interfering with the Jersey City and Bergen Railroad in the construction of the Trolley system on Montgomery street, that city.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The yearling filly Frou Frou broke the world's record at Stockton, Cal., yesterday, by trotting a mile easy in 2:16, beating Bell Bird's time one-quarter of a second.

The Thomson-Houston Carbon Company's Works, and McLean's Spike Works in Fremont, O., were destroyed by fire last night. Loss, $350,000; insurance, $150,000.

The will of the late Mrs. Charles Phillips of Montreal, who died recently at the age of 97 years, bequeaths over $100,000 to different charitable institutions in that city.

The National Republican Committee adjourned sine die last evening. The executive committee was given the preparation of all matters connected with the Minneapolis Convention.

THE PRESS PRINTS FOR ALL.

It has become necessary for THE PRESS to again disclaim all personal indorsement of any expressions of political sentiment, or criticisms of municipal officers or candidates, that appear in these columns in the form of communications or interviews. They are given for what they are worth, as merely the assertions or opinions of certain individuals.

This paper is open to the people, and is open to an expression of the opinions of all sides. The tickets of both political parties, also, are to be found above.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—Seats are now on sale for "A Fair Rebel".

—A thanksgiving meeting will be held in the W. C. T. U. rooms at 3:30 to-morrow afternoon.

—The Wednesday evening meeting of this week in the Crescent Avenue church, will be a service of thanksgiving and praise.

—The delivery department of the public library will be closed to-morrow. The reading-room and art gallery will be open at the usual hours.

—To-morrow evening will be devoted to an interesting thanksgiving service, at the First Baptist church mission chapel, 34 East Third street.

—Dr. Brewster, the famous painless extractor of teeth, will be at the dental office of Dr. Charles R. Thiers, Dec. 1, 2 and 3. He is one of the best dentists in the world, and will doubtless have a great rush of patrons.

—There will be a Christmas festival, under the auspices of the Ladies Aid society of the M. E. church, in Vincent chapel, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday afternoons and evenings, Dec. 1, 2 and 3, in aid of the North Plainfield chapel.

—The Rev. J. Clement French, D. D., pastor of the Park Presbyterian church of Newark, will deliver a lecture in the chapel of the Crescent Avenue church, Thursday evening, December 3, for benefit of mission work in the Adirondacks. Subject—"Life in the Woods."

—The wife of Mr. George Staples, of Dunellen, has become mentally incapacitated and has been removed to an asylum. Mr. Staples's mother has removed from Washington and will make her home with him. The afflicted husband has our sympathy, as his lot has been a trying one the past year.—Washington Star.

—Plainfield people in search of honest clothiers will find just the house they want at Colyer & Co.'s, 815 and 817 Broad street, Newark. They are now running a fine line of all-wool overcoats and ulsters at extra-low prices. One of the firm's right-hand men is Lewis C. Dunn, of this city, who goes to Newark each morning, and who will take all orders from his townsmen and serve them faithfully.

—Your library is incomplete without a copy of "The Story of Man".

—The Plainfield Choral society is distinguished this year with the possession of a male contralto.

—There will be divine service to-morrow in the Church of the Holy Cross. All are cordially invited.

—Look at Sherwin's change of advertisement in to-day's issue, and note some of the prices he quotes.

—There will be a Thanksgiving service in Hope chapel to-morrow morning at 9:30 o'clock. All are welcome.

—The rooms of the Young Men's Christian association will be open as usual to-morrow from 8 a. m. to 10 p. m.

—The monthly business meeting of the Women's Temperance Aid society will be held at Reform Hall, Friday at three o'clock.

—The balmiest of climates, and the most excellent of hotels, are to be found at Coronado Beach, "the Italy of America".

—Samuel Wilson, who was formerly a well-known waiter in Plainfield, is visiting his uncle and namesake, after an absence of five years from town.

—A highly interesting game of football will be played on the Crescent League grounds, Thursday, between the Caledonians of Newark and a crack Plainfield team.

—President Nevins of the Plainfield Street Railway company, told a PRESS reporter yesterday that the rumor that the company's franchise had been sold, is false.

—Dr. Charles R. Thiers has been doing some very fine dentistry work by electric light. He says that he can do much finer work by electric light than he can by daylight when the sky is clouded.

—If you have n't yet bought your Thanksgiving turkey, you will find just what you want at J. W. VanSickle's, 10 North avenue. He has the choicest and largest assortment of the season.

—There was great applause at the Middlesex county teachers' institute when the secretary reported: "No deaths during the year, six are teaching in other counties, and Mr. Willis hears that forty-seven are engaged."

—A correspondent asks why it is that the Reform hall is not taxed, yet it is rented for miscellaneous performances to which admission is charged; and at the same time the T. A. B. society's hall is taxed. Ask the assessor.

—A lecture on "King Lear" will be given this evening in the Unitarian rooms, 4 Second place, by the Rev. Mr. Woude of Newburg, N. Y. This is the second lecture of the course. Single admission to them is twenty-five cents.

—One of the officers of the German American fire insurance company requests THE PRESS not to slight it, but to remember that it has an agency here, and to tell the people that if they want the best of fire insurance go to No. 6 East Front street.

—James Penny, who lives in this city on Manson place, Pondville, while attempting to decapitate a goose, this afternoon, had his hand cut very badly. He was in the act of cutting when the goose ducked its head and the knife struck the lad on the back of the hand causing an ugly gash. Dr. Probasco dressed the wound.

—The registration officer in the first ward who swore out a warrant for the arrest of Fred. Moore, yesterday, may get himself in trouble. Moore has taken a room at the City Hotel and slept there last night and the night before. He is therefore a resident of the ward according to law, even if he had only lived in it five minutes.

—Division Superintendent W. H. Peddle will have to renew his order of a year or two ago, in relation to the unnecessary whistling of locomotive engines within the thickly settled part of the city, at night. After eleven o'clock every night there are a number of engineers who seem to purposely make as much noise with their whistles as possible.

—The monthly meeting of the Woman's Branch Alliance of the Unitarian church was held yesterday. Interesting papers were presented by Mrs. D. W. Pond and Mrs. J. O. Osgood, the subject of each being the Sunday-school. An animated conversation on the question followed. The subject selected for the papers to be read at the next meeting is, the "Ethics of Living."

—The foot-ball match which comes off on the Crescent League grounds to-morrow is creating excitement in the Pond shops and the workmen have subscribed to a purse to fit the boys out in shape. The young men composing the club are some of Plainfield's best athletes and are sure to play a good strong game. If this one to-morrow proves the success that is anticipated, there will be a series arranged with good clubs of the neighboring cities.

—An innocent turkey was a disturber of slumbers along East Fifth street last night. A colored man who had been sent to deliver a turkey left it at the wrong house, and at a late hour aroused people all along the block seeking to get the turkey back and hunting for the owner. He had forgotten what house he left it at, and would not be satisfied except with a personal inspection of all the women, to decide which one it was he had given it to. He finally gave up in despair, and promised the owner of the bird to buy a fowl to replace the missing one.

Happy and content is a home with "The Rochester;" a lamp with the light of the morning. Call on Rochester Lamp Co., 49 Park Place, N. Y.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Andrew M. Vanderbeek has ventured out of doors again after his long and serious illness.

Dr. A. P. Roberts, dentist, has so far recovered his health as to be again at his place of business.

The Rev. Mr. Mitchell will preach a Thanksgiving service at the Memorial chapel, Washingtonville, to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

George W. Breen, who has been making a visit among friends and relatives in this city and vicinity, left Sunday night for his home in Paola, Kansas.

There will be a service in the Crescent Avenue church on the morning of Thanksgiving day, at 10:30 o'clock. The sermon will be preached by the Rev. Mr. Goodrich.

Thirty young people enjoyed the sociable held at the residence of Mr. Rockwell, 118 East Front street, last evening. Excellent music was given by Andrew G. Carpenter.

Fred H. Martin has rented his house on East Fifth street to A. G. Hooley for the winter, and will leave town, with his family, Dec. 1, for a season at Hotel Elgin, Marion, Kansas.

Henry Kreutzfeldt, treasurer of the Plainfield Gesang and Turn Verein, died at his home on Wilson avenue, this morning, aged 43 years. The sociable of the above society that was to have taken place to-morrow night, is postponed, in consequence, until Monday evening, and the members will attend in a body the funeral services at the house Friday afternoon at three o'clock.

Important Convention for Boys.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Plainfield has extended an invitation to representatives of the boys' department of the State, to members of committees having charge of boys' work, and to Christian boys from associations that have no organized work for boys, to meet in conference, at Plainfield, Saturday, Nov. 28, and Sunday, Nov. 29.

It is desirable that ladies and gentlemen interested in boys' work should be present at this conference, as well as members of the Plainfield department. Sessions will be held Saturday at 10 a. m. and 2:30 and 7:30 p. m.

On Sunday a meeting for delegates and members of the Plainfield auxiliary will be held from 9 until 10:15 a. m. A mass-meeting for boys will be held at 4 p. m. All the sessions on Saturday will be held in the Association rooms. A most interesting programme has been arranged. All who can entertain one or more Christian boys during the conference are requested to send their names to the Y. M. C. A. rooms.

The Next Play at Music Hall.

"A Fair Rebel", Harry P. Mawson's picturesque drama of the war for the Union, will be given at Music Hall, Saturday evening, with its own scenery and the original New York company.

A glamor of romance renders the play pleasing to all classes, Mr. Mawson having happily struck the keynote of his drama with that touch of nature which makes the whole world kin. Highly acceptable is the acting. Miss Fannie Gillette does wonders for the character of Clairette Monteith, the pretty Rebel. Edward R. Mawson heroically holds up the loyal end in the part of Col. Ezra Mason, who loses his young heart while battling for the old flag. Miss Belle Bucklin plays in lighter vein, varying her sprightly acting with banjo solos and fetching songs, which she knows how to sing. Well filled in is the cast by W. E. St. Clair as Captain De Perrin, J. P. Keefe as a grizzled soldierly surgeon, and Maurice Pyke in the double part of a confederate major and trooper.

A Westfielder in the Scheme.

The Guarantee Identification company, of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, filed articles of incorporation in the county clerk's office in the State will be in Newark. The object is to manufacture and sell identification cards which entitle the holder to recognition and absolute identification to banks, express offices, telegraph offices and postal departments of the United States, and wherever identification is required. The incorporators are L. K. McKinney, of Elizabeth; Avery D. Andrews, of New York, and Edward L. Andrews, of Westfield. The capital is placed at $50,000, of which $3,000 is paid up.

Mass Meeting.

A meeting of the citizens of Plainfield will be held at Music Hall on Friday evening, the 27th inst.

Prominent speakers will make addresses upon the issues which, irrespective of party, divide the people of Plainfield.

Every one wishing to hear a discussion of matters vital to the interests of the city, are respectfully invited to attend.

Mr. Marsh's Emphatic Denial.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—I hereby denounce as absolutely false every charge and insinuation made against me in the official communication in your issue of Nov. 24, under the heading: "Mr. Smith Tells Tales", and signed "Seymour G. Smith, President of Council of 1891."

F. E. MARSH.

Y. P. S. C. E. Thanksgiving Service.

At 9:30 to-morrow morning, in the lecture room of the Trinity Reformed church, a one-hour union Thanksgiving praise and prayer service of the Y. P. S. C. E., both senior and junior, of the city, will be held. All young people are cordially invited to attend.

Mr. Erickson's Answer.

Ex-councilman Eric N. Erickson called at the office of THE PRESS this morning and requested that an emphatic denial be made of the statement in a communication of councilman Smith that he was a stockholder in Mr. Pope's company. "I am not interested or concerned in any of his corporations"—he said.—"The statement in the communication is an absolute lie."

Since the above was in type the following has been received:

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—Reference to me in communication appearing in your issue of yesterday afternoon, over name of "Seymour G. Smith, President of Council 1891", is absolutely false. If what refers to me is a criterion for judgment of the rest of the communication, I should say, "False in one thing false in all".

E. N. ERICKSON.

Harp and Saxophone Solos.

H. C. Mecklem and his daughter, Miss Bessie, will render harp and saxophone solos and duets at the men's meeting to be held under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., in the First Baptist church next Sunday at 4:15 p. m., and at the boys meeting to be held in the M. E. church at 4 p. m.

The men's meeting will be conducted by E. L. Suffern and the boys meeting by Frank W. Hall of Orange. Mr. Mecklem is a fine harpist and Miss Mecklem is the only young lady saxophonist before the public to-day. The harp and saxophone together have a brilliant effect.

To Help the Hospital Out.

The very clever and almost perfect amateur performance of "Esmeralda" that was given at The Casino, Thursday evening, of last week, is to be repeated for the benefit of Muhlenberg hospital which is just now under a debt of about $500. This debt is caused principally by the recent expense of putting electric lights throughout the hospital and new roofs on the wards. It will not have to be incurred again.

Somebody Took It When He Wasn't Looking.

M. Higgins the liveryman was arrested yesterday charged with concealing a vehicle that does not belong to him. He gave bail in the sum of $500, and now threatens suit against the complainant. Higgins says he does n't know where the vehicle is. Somebody, he says, must have come into his stable when he was absent, and taken the property away.

A New Building in New Market.

The New Market Building company, an incorporated association with a capital of $50,000, will begin the erection this week of its first building in that town. It will have a brick front, highly ornamental, and reflecting credit on the company's architect, B. Fosgate of this city. The building will have a store on the first floor with a lodge room above.

"DEAR LITTLE HANDS."

TO LITTLE EDNA.

FROM MAMMA.

Dear little hands, I love them so!
And now they are lying under the snow—
Under the snow so cold and white,
I cannot see them or touch them to-night.
They are quiet and stiff at last, ah me!
How busy and restless they used to be!
But now they can never reach up through the snow;
Dear little hands, I loved them so!

Dear little hands, I miss them so!
All through the day, wherever I go—
All through the night, how lonely it seems,
For no little hands wake me out of my dreams.
I miss them all through the weary hours,
I miss them as others miss sunshine and flowers;
Day time or night time, wherever I go,
Dear little hands, I miss them so.

Dear little hands they have gone from me now,
Never again will they rest on my brow—
Never again smooth my sorrowful face,
Never clasp me in a childish embrace.
And now my forehead grows wrinkled with care,
Thinking of little hands, once resting there;
But I know in a happier, Heavenlier clime,
Dear little hands, I will clasp you sometime.

Dear little hands, when the Master shall call,
I'll welcome the summons that comes to us all—
When my feet touch the waters so dark and so cold,
And I catch my first glimpse of the City of Gold,
If I keep my eyes fixed on the Heavenly gate,
Over the tide where the white-robed ones wait,
Shall I know you, I wonder, among the bright bands,
Will you beckon me over, oh! dear little hands?

PSALM CLI.

Dan'l Telleth How the People (In His Mind) Did Arise in Their Might and Bury the Oppressors.

1. And it came to pass in these latter days that there dwelt in one of the cities of the plain, certain wise men who loved light rather than darkness, and they spake one to another in this wise: "Behold, how blessed a thing is light; what is more to be desired, or what can compare unto it? Is it well for men to stumble and grope in darkness, and do hurt unto themselves? Nay verily! Therefore we will not only walk in the light, but compel all men to walk therein and eschew darkness; and they shall use the light which we will furnish unto them, and we shall obtain gain and power thereby."

2. And they saw that their thoughts were good, and they made light first from coal, and then from oil,—because the oil was cheaper, and their gain greater—and as the oil did cause the turn-keys of the burners to gum up, it proved a means of grace to the consumers, by teaching them patience and forbearance, besides giving work unto the "plummahs" who had to unloose them.

3. Then they harnessed the lighting, and did set up pillars and cords of metal with which to furnish more light, and whosoever touched the metal pillars or cords, were either palsied or destroyed; as in the case of a young man, and also of a horse belong to "Chand Lur", and for whose loss "Chand Lur" received shekels from the light makers.

4. But they said: "Lo that is good, and good only, for we are commanded to walk in the light, and we love light and the gain which it brings, and if the men of Belial or their cattle touch our pillars or cords it is to their hurt and not ours." And they smote their hands together and did laugh, they, and certain scribes who walked in the light, (of their advertisements), and who obeyed the commands of their masters. For these scribes said: "Are we not commanded to obey our masters!" Peradventure they will invite us to their houses, and their feasts, and we can pick up the crumbs that fall from their tables; for our masters are rich and powerful, and by abasing ourselves before them, and licking the dust from their feet, we shall find favor in their eyes, and we will get gain unto ourselves by proclaiming the blessing of light and the loving kindness of the makers thereof."

5. And these scribes did so, and abased themselves before their masters, and were blind only when the people or their cattle were destroyed by the pillars and wires of the light makers, and they found favor in the eyes of the latter, but the people did call them "Todees", and by that name were they known in the city of the plain.

6. And when the light makers saw that great gain came by selling the light, they said: "Wine is a mocker and strong drink is raging; therefore it is good for men to drink water! We will dig wells and build a high tower and provide the people with water, and ourselves with more gain". And they did so, and digged up the beautiful streets of the city of the plain, and left them looking like Sheol—because they had given no pledge to replace them as good as in the beginning. But they and their scribes said: "It is well; why should the men of Belial rave and imagine vain things? Is it not we who are doing this? Behold! the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof! Does not the earth belong to the saints of the Lord? We are the saints of the Lord! Therefore the earth belongs to us, and the men of Belial can go to!"

7. And they brought an immense army of Dagos which digged up the streets and laid their pipes of iron to the great discomfort of the people who had to walk and ride therein. But the saints and their scribes who aforetime raised a great tumult about the beautiful streets being destroyed by the "Big cix", were now afflicted with blindness and could see no defacement thereto. And the people were dumb, and no man opened his mouth, and the work prospered and the saints and their scribes rubbed their palms together—which itched for the shekels of the people—and cried, "Aha!"

8. And the saints waxed fat and rich, and bought themselves horses and chariots, and rode and drove and took their pleasure, but the common people went on foot. Then certain of the council seeing that the people had no chariots nor horses, took compassion on them and said: "It is not meet that only the rich can ride, wewill provide conveyances for the poor likewise, so that for a few pence, all may ride." And all but one of the eleven consented thereto—for he had great possessions.

9. Then arose loud murmuring and discontent among the scribes and pharisees, and they said: "What, shall anysave ourselves—reap profit or glory from the people of the plain? Not so! We must destroy the 'Kumbyu' and bring their plans to naught". And they commanded their scribes to write against the "Big cix" and to make light of the benefits which they purposed to bestow upon the people, and to magnify the evils which would come to pass if the poor man should ride.

10. And their scribes did so, and perverted the truth, and testified falsely, and put obstacles in the way of the council doing good unto the people. And when one of their scribes was hauled before the judge for evil speaking, the light and water makers said: "We must not allow our servants to suffer, for well and truly have they done our unclean work." So they became surety for the scribe who was about to be put in prison for his evil speaking.

11. But the people though long suffering at length spake one to another: "How long shall we suffer the light and water clique to rule over us, and to place heavy and grievous burdens upon us? They are but a handful and we are many. They and their scribes murmur against the "Kumbyn", but they band themselves together, and form trusts and combinations, to possess themselves of the earth and all that it contains. There is 'No Trust' for us nor for our wives and little ones! We will combine, and assemble ourselves together when we select our rulers in the twelfth month! And we will bury the light and water clique, together with their Dagos and scribes, deeper than the wells which they have digged, and will heap upon them the marks of our condemnation like unto the heaps they leave in our streets. The evil speaking scribes also shall perish and their writings come to an end; for we will neither buy their writings nor shall our crafts or names be found therein." Selah!

"DAN'L."

A Dunellen Instructor Speaks.

T. H. Roberts, principal of the Dunellen public school, spoke on "Music" at the recent Middlesex county teachers' institute at New Brunswick. He said:

The easiest thing I have ever done was to stand up before a teachers' institute and tell teachers what to do. The hardest thing was to put my own rules in practice.

Men are swayed by the voice. No matter how beautiful a picture may be it lacks the crowning glory of harmony. Voice culture is what we want. Women make or break men by the way they say yes or no. Mobs have many a time been quelled and soothed by the charm of a woman's voice.

One night in a hospital in New York men who were very ill—dying—heard a choir of girls singing, and the music had a most marvelous effect upon them, bringing back visions of their happy homes and the dear friends they had not seen for so long.

Washington, Lincoln, Sheridan, Grant—all were fond of music. No great criminal has been a musician. Teachers say I can't sing, but is there anyone here that can do anything to his or her precise satisfaction? Leave the consequences to the future. Do your best in the present.

Harkins May Play With the Crescents.

John Harkins is said to have told manager Mack of the West End ball team of Somerville, that he had an offer to play with the Crescents, of this city, next season, and that as base-ball playing was a business with him and he was offered more money to go to Plainfield, he would like to be released. Manager Mack is said to have replied that he could go to hades.

So far as the report goes in saying that Harkins has an "offer" to play on the Crescent League's team, it is premature. He wants to play for Plainfield and was in this city looking around, Saturday evening. It is probable, however, that if he was signed by the Cresents he would cover first base.

The P. & R. Pleads "Not Guilty."

Lawyer A. G. Richey, of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad company, appeared before Judge Woodruff yesterday morning, in the Mercer county court at Trenton, to plead to the indictment against the company for maintaining a nuisance at the crossing of the tracks on the road to Ewing, where a few months ago James B. Green, an aged and wealthy farmer, and uncle of Charles J. Fisk of this city, was killed by a fast train.

The plea entered was "not guilty", and on request of lawyer Richey he was given permission to change the plea in the future.

Owen Meredith's Death.

PARIS, Nov. 25.—The Right Hon. Edward Robert Bulwer Lytton, Earl of Lytton, British Ambassador to France, died suddenly yesterday from heart disease. He was the son of Lord Lytton (Edward Bulwer), the novelist. He was a writer himself in his earlier days, using the nom de plume of Owen Meredith. Earl Lytton was in America when he was 18 years of age as an attache of the British Legation at Washington. The Earl was sixty years old on the 18th inst.

Boston Chamber of Commerce Protests.

BOSTON, Nov. 25.—At the adjourned meeting of the Boston Chamber of Commerce resolutions were adopted yesterday protesting against the discrimination which makes Boston pay five cents more on a hundred pounds for freight from Chicago than New York or Portland, and denying the statement of J. F. Goddard, commissioner of trunk lines, that this "basis" was satisfactory to the great majority of trade and trade centres.

CORNERS IN WHEAT.

"Old Hutch" Tells Why They Are Difficult to Obtain.

Visible Supply, He Says, Is a Dangerous Chimera to Mislead the Speculator Who Attempts to Control a Great Food Product.

[COPYRIGHT, 1891.]

Among the grand enterprises whose accomplishment at some future period engrosses the brains of visionary men is that of controlling the prices of staples like wheat and corn. Men sometimes discuss the chances of being able to buy all the wheat in the market, by which they mean the visible stock. There are two enormous difficulties in the way of such a performance, either of which must always remain nearly insurmountable; but which, acting together, as they always do, form an absolutely impassable barrier. The fact is that no single individual or combination of individuals, no matter how much capital he or they may control, has ever been able to buy all the wheat in the market; the second is that the visible stock is an uncertain and unknown quantity, and forever expands just in proportion as the needs of the speculator call upon it to contract, or at least to remain fixed. The visible supply is a figment of the agricultural reports; the agricultural reports are really hearsay, and in our courts of justice hearsay, even if sworn to, is not admitted in evidence. Therefore unsworn hearsay must be worthless indeed. And whoever speculates on worthless information is liable to get the worst of it.

As a rule farmers are a shrewd class of men. It is for their interest that people should believe that there is a scarcity rather than an abundance of grain. So when they give in their answers to questions as to the supply they, as a rule, do more or less of the ananias business, which they think they have a perfect right to do; not being on oath, and having a lawful purpose to carry out, namely the furtherance of their own interests. Therefore, if a farmer has something like a thousand bushels of wheat in his bins, he is liable to report five hundred; and satisfies his conscience in this way: He says to himself: "It looks as if there might be a thousand bushels, but appearances are deceitful. At any rate there are surely five hundred and when I report five hundred I don't assert that there may not be more; and anyhow I'm not on oath. Besides, before I get the grain to market the berry may shrink or the rats may get in, and so I'll say five hundred, and let it go at that."

This is one of the reasons why when there is an attempt at a corner, and the price of a cereal goes up; the stock keeps pouring in on the speculator, just as if a pint bottle, so called, were to give out a quart of the fluid. The hapless speculators who fancied they had the whole of the visible supply find that there exists an unknown invisible supply, which all at once takes on shape and becomes alarmingly visible and insists on being bought and paid for at the highest prices. It is the unexpected that always happens; and if expected wheat has been contracted for and delivered at a dollar a bushel, along comes the unexpected wheat and clamors for a dollar ten, or the market will be broken, and then where will the speculators be? The agony is always piled upon the speculators just at the end of the deal when the rich profits seem to be about in sight. But this sort of sight is like the mirage on the plains of Arizona; you stagger along hungry and thirsty, and a splendid lake with verdant shores seems to be about two miles distant, and when you have traveled those miles the view breaks and you are in the middle of heated sands, and the nearest water many miles away.

Let me say right here, whoever attempts to control any one of the great food products of the world, whether corn, wheat or rice, puts himself in the place of a man or set of men who should set out to dam the Niagara rapids with bulrushes. They lose their labor and are swept away besides.

The trade in futures or options has its headquarters in Chicago. Chicago is really the heart whose beats send the blood of commercial activity coursing through the arteries of trade all over the body of the great northwest. When you go where the wheat is raised and where a large part of it is you find more business men than speculators. Men buy the grain, store it and grind the flour. In Minneapolis the harvest indeed means something to eat. As King David says in the One Hundred and Fourth Psalm, fifteenth verse, it is "Bread that strengtheneth the heart of man." He says that wine makes him glad and oil makes his face shine, but bread makes him strong. That is why the Minneapolis men are so happy; they feel so strong.

Ignatius Donnelly is president of the Farmers' Alliance of Minnesota. There is this about Donnelly, he likes to differ from most people. The world at large say that William Shakespeare wrote Shakespeare's plays: "Hamlet," "Othello," and the rest of them; so Donnelly says thus: "No, Francis Bacon, who was Lord Verulam, wrote them." Philosophers and astronomers in general say that comets are wisps of thin vapor, that career through space, and have no influence upon any of the solid bodies which they pass in their course; Donnelly says:

"No; comets are aggregations of stones of small size, that go traveling through space; and the gravel beds and ledges which you find on this planet, the earth, are the results of the contact of some comet with our globe in long past ages." Now if Mr. Donnelly, who is an able man in many respects, is "off" on Shakespeare and comets, and we have a perfect right to believe that he is, and the majority is certainly on our side, we may also believe that he is a trifle "off" as to the Farmers' Alliance business. The board of trade and speculators are not enemies of the farmer; they raise prices as much and as often as they depress them; therefore the average is undisturbed; and I think I proved in the North American Review of October, '91, that they are the chief means of his always having a ready market at the nearest shipping point for his grain; and even at his barn door if he doesn't want to haul his grain.

This year the yield of wheat in the two Dakotas and Minnesota is not far from one hundred and fifty million bushels. Consider the amount of money which that sends into the northwest. It is not all profit, of course; but a large part of it might be called wages because it represents the results of labor; and it will be an enormous benefit to that portion of the United States, and all the rest of the country will share in it.

Such an influx of money, thus distributed, is vastly better for the community than where a few men acquire vast fortunes by successful deals. If we could by fair and equitable processes divide up the enormous estates of the Astors, Vanderbilts, Goulds and Rockefellers, among the entire people, it would be among the best things that could happen. A hundred thousand dollars is enough for any man or family. Then if a great plan needed to be carried out, it could be done by bank or corporation capital. One of the great dangers to this nation is threatened in the concentration of wealth in a few hands. An enormous individual capital working by methods of secresy which are at the command of a crafty millionaire can buy almost anything or anybody. Some judges even can be bought, at least such things have happened, and therefore may happen again. Certain members of the legislature, sometimes amounting to majorities, are always purchasable. Given on one side a rich, crafty, silent man who wants to buy judges and lawmakers; and on the other side judges and lawmakers who are ready to be bought; and you have a combination that is a perpetual menace to free institutions.

And now a word about the world's fair. People on the Atlantic seaboard make a mistake if they think the world's fair at Chicago is going to be a Chicago fair; or an Illinois cattle show, as some sneerers have named it. Chicago is not handling the world's fair. The United States have the job in hand, and the location of the enterprise is a mere incident. The fair had to be somewhere; New York, Washington, St. Louis, Cincinnati and Chicago wanted it. One could only be appointed, therefore four had to be disappointed. But at the proper time all of them, and the communities which they represent, will put their shoulders to the wheel and the great movement will go on.

Chicago got the prize of the location because she worked for it. There is a certain spirit in the west that is progressive and proud, and full of insistance. It exists and it shows itself; you can't repress it. The New York people didn't thoroughly comprehend this; they took it for granted that the community at large would agree with them that New York city was the only place in America to hold a world's fair; and while they reposed quietly in this belief the Chicago men went to work and used all the arts of persuasion known to mankind, appealing as well to prejudice as to local patriotism, and in short they "got there."

Perhaps after all, Washington would have been the best place. It is certainly the capital of our great nation, and the nation's glory and strength are embodied there in the public buildings, which next to the invisible institutions of freedom are the most impressive tokens of our republic's greatness. Then in Washington the United States own the land; the district of Columbia belongs to no state in particular; it is just as much a part of Illinois or the Dakotas, or California, as of New York or Massachusetts. The United States, through its congress, could have voted and erected public buildings, and these could have been permanent, and other nations could have deposited their fabrics and machinery therein, and we could have had a sort of perpetual world's fair there; and the state pride of every citizen would have been encouraged, and no one's feelings would have suffered. This was a favorite dream of mine; but it was not to be.

There will, however, be a great display in Chicago. Chicago has the finest parks in the country; the city itself in spite of all slurs upon the small river that creeps through it is a noble one. Its citizens think there is not such another city in the whole world, and they will strive to impress the same belief on the minds of all the world at the proper time. B. P. HUTCHINSON.

YALE'S GREAT DAY

Princeton's Tigers Weakened in the Second Half.

THE FINEST GAME IN YEARS.

Neither Side Scored in the First Half but Yale Won 19 to 0.

The Match Witnessed by a Wildly Enthusiastic Crowd of Nearly Forty Thousand People, Who Didn't Mind the Rain a Bit—Magnificent Work of Some of the Men—Much Dissatisfaction Expressed With the Management.—Other Games.

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—Poor Princeton! The "tigers'" admirers are very sore at her defeat yesterday by the score of 19 to 0 in the great championship game with Yale, but force a disconsolate smile now and then, and feebly murmur: "Look out for us next year." Yale deserved her triumph, won it fairly and wears it modestly. Her team was perfect in action, her interference a treat to enjoy, her tackling forceful and effective.

Football has become a remarkable institution in this town. That it is a great attraction for at least one day in the year may be believed when it is observed that elderly and staid men and women sat on damp and rough boards from 10 o'clock in the morning till 2 o'clock in the afternoon in order to see the beginning of the game.

The gates were not open till 10 o'clock, but by that time great crowds of persons had gathered about the different entrances. By 11 o'clock a great crowd had gathered in the grounds and every moment it was augmented by fresh arrivals. By noon all the free seats were occupied and the grand stand had become fairly well filled. A half hour later it began to rain but the people kept coming just as fast as ever. By 1:30 every available space about the field was occupied.

The sight in the stand was pretty in extreme. On every hand were the waving colors of different colleges and these, added to the brilliant costumes of the women, made a bright and aniamting picture.

There were fully 37,000 persons present when the Yale team, at 2 o'clock, filed out of the club house and came onto the field. They were followed immediately by the black and orange striped young men of Princeton. A wild deluge of shouting and blowing of horns and waving of flags occurred a minute later when the two teams lined up in the middle of the gridiron.

Then as each man bent forward with his hands on his knees and gazed hard at his opposite, the noise suddenly stopped, and every one of those more than 37,000 wild men and women was as still as a statue, and every one of those eyes was focussed on one little spot where the ball was. The game was about to begin. The teams lined as follows:

YALE.

Left Tackle, O. C. Winter.
Left Guard, W. W. Heffelfinger.
Centre, P. J. Stillman.
Right Guard, S. N. Morison.
Right Tackle, C. W. Mills.
Right end, J. A. Hartwell.
Quarter-back, T. H. Barbour.
Right Half-back, L. T. Ellis.
Left Half-back, T. L. Mecling.
Full-back, V. C. McCormick.

PRINCETON.

Right end, R. H. Warren.
Right tackle, A. F. Harold.
Right guard, J. B. Riggs.
Center, J. G. Symmes.
Left guard, A. T. Wheeler.
Left tackle, A. F. Houy.
Left end, H. Vincent.
Quarter back, P. King.
Left half-back, J. A. Flint.
Right half-back, J. P. Poe, Jr.
Full-back, S. Homans, jr.

Then the game began. Princeton won the toss and tried the ancient "V" trick with slim success. Yale's center seemed invulnerable. Heffelfinger, Sanford and Morrison were a trio of giants that could not be moved. Then Princeton changed tactics. She depended upon Homans' great punting ability, and time and again when the boys from Nassau were in the very jaws of defeat his brilliant work would put the team out of danger and relegate the battle to Yale's field.

It was something new to Yale. She might shatter the center of Princeton, and daring McClung and the agile Bliss might make their famous end rushes with success, but every time the danger seemed most imminent Homans was on hand. The rushers, too, backed him superbly, and in this was displayed the only real team work of Princeton. When he punted they were right with the ball, making recovery of ground by the blue-legged boys impossible.

For half an hour the battle waged warm, with the advantage handily in favor of either team. Yale's admirers were silent. Her substitutes on the coaching lines and her friends said little. They were confronted by the biggest kind of a condition. Their theory of what Princeton was to do was sadly at fault. Fifteen minutes only remained of the first half, and they were as far from scoring as ever. McClung was becoming desperate. He lined his men up and they set to work with grim determination.

They apparently went in to wipe up the earth, or that portion of it between them and the goal posts, with the boys from Princeton. They ran brilliantly, employed all the art of masters of the game, fought and struggled as they never before were called upon to do. Back they would drive the striped stocking athletes, back to the very verge, but Homans was always on hand, and with a phenomenal kick would send the ball to center again.

Faster and faster they flew—too fast for Yale, for the time keepers called the first half when the ball was still far from the goal and neither team had scored. Yale was downcast and Princetons friends were ecstatic. They carried the eleven off the field in triumph and it was with difficulty that the police could keep the crowd out of the room where many hands were caring for them. But if the crowd could not get into the room it could still cheer and a thousand men who swarmed about the cottage roared their congratulations.

The respite for the players was brief. They were out in 15 minutes and at work again. Yale had the ball and the dogged determination with which she carried it through Princeton's territory was a rich treat to all who admire pluck, backed up by bone and muscle and hearts that knew no failure.

Yale simply carried Princeton before her. She could not withstand the tons of weight propelled as it was. It was a case of beef and bone, and over the slippery grass and mud the tigers were driven back. They seemed rattled. They forgot strategy. They neglected to use the methods which, if they had not brought victory, at least had averted defeat in the first half. They opposed force to force, and they lost. Two touchdowns and a kick from the field and a touchdown on which a goal was kicked were made in rapid succession.

Princeton's individual work was really heroic, but her team work was utterly neglected. It was only when it was driven home to them by the score of 15 to 0 that they seemed to wake up, and then they strove to save the whitewash. Homans' punting was again called into play and with the same successful results so far as Yale's not scoring more was concerned.

Time was called while the ball was still in play, but the great intercollegiate game of '91 was over and Yale was dual champion of the year.

While the wretched weather undoubtedly had something to do with the attendance it was not the only deterrent cause. The grounds were entirely inadequate, and thousands were unable to get in, among them many who had purchased tickets.

"Rah, Rah, Rah, Yale!" was omnipresent last night. At the hotels, in the theatres and other places of amusement, on the streets, from Harlem to the Battery, and from the East River to the North River, everywhere was encountered crowds of wildly demonstrative students, cheering the great victory yesterday. In several of the theatres the noise created made a farce of the performance, but everybody took the matter good naturedly, and but few arrests are reported.

Cornell Beaten by Chicago.

CHICAGO, Nov. 27.—The Chicago University eleven beat Cornell yesterday by 12 to 4. About 12,000 people shivered and shouted during the game. Chicago won by individual play and slugging. Cornell put up a strong, plucky game in team work, but were hopelessly weakened in the rush line by an injury to Galbreath, which forced him to retire. Every member of the Cornell team received wounds of some sort, and nearly every one retired at the end of the game with his face besmeared with blood. O-good, Hanson, Johnson, Floy and Young did great work for Cornell.

Columbias Defeat the Georgetowns.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27.—The football game for the championship of the District of Columbia was played yesterday at Capitol Park by the Columbia Athletic Club and the Georgetown University teams. The Columbias outplayed Georgetown at every point, and won by a score of 22 to 4. The Columbias made four touchdowns and kicked three goals. The Georgetowns made but one touchdown. The game was witnessed by 5,000 people. Martin, of the University of Pennsylvania, acted as referee, and Schoff, of the same college, umpired.

Colgate Gets the Pennant.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 27.—Colgate defeated Rochester University in a game of football yesterday by a score of 6 to nothing. This gives Colgate the Inter-Collegiate championship pennant.

Bucknell University Defeated.

LANCASTER, Pa., Nov. 27.—An eleven from Franklin and Marshall College defeated the Bucknell University team at football yesterday afternoon by a score of 12 to 6.

RAILROAD GOSSIP.

The Lake Shore & Michigan Southern has christened a new mail car just put into service on its line—Governor McKinley.

Last year the Pullman Car Company served 5,000,000 meals on the dining cars and the profit realized did not pay 1 per cent. on the money invested.

Still another fast mail train will be put into service between New York and Chicago beginning Jan. 1. It will be on the Pennsylvania road, and the schedule time between the terminal points is to be 24 1-2 hours.

Cornelius Vanderbilt is back from Europe. Among the important matters that await his attention are the plans for improved New York Central terminal facilities in New York, and the former request of the business men of Syracuse for additional railroad facilities in that city.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the New York, Lake Erie & Western was in many respects the most important that has taken place in many years owing to the fact that it was decided in view of the road's splendid earnings during the past year to declare a dividend of 3 per cent. on the $8,536,600 preferred stock, besides paying the usual charges and 6 per cent. on the income bonds.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

IS A BAD OLD MAN

Remarkable Career of a Pennsylvania Justice.

HIS CRIMES ARE NUMEROUS

Latest Misdemeanor of E. B. Hollister, a Well-Known Politician and Writer.

Seventy Years of Age, and He Has Been Indicted and Convicted for a Variety of Outrages—To be Tried for Burglary—The Lieutenant-Governor His Nephew, and Others of His Relatives Noted.

HONESDALE, Pa., Nov. 27.—E. B. Hollister of Hollisterville, this county, near the Lackawanna County line, who has been for more than a quarter of a century a Justice of the Peace in this county, although during that time he has been indicted for conspiracy, burglary, arson, and assault with attempt to kill, and was convicted once on a charge of burglary and sentenced to four years in the penitentiary, but escaped through a legal technicality, has just been indicted for burglary, this time by the grand jury of Lackawanna County, and will be tried at the next term of court.

Hollister is 70 years old and belongs to one of the most prominent families in Wayne County. Lieutenant-Governor Watres is a nephew of his, and he has for 30 years been conspicuous in the affairs of his section of the county. During the war there were many mail and express robberies and masked burglaries in that locality, and it was openly charged that Squire Hollister was the organizer and leader of a gang that committed these crimes.

In 1867 a burglary committed in the village of Waymart, ten miles from Hollisterville, was traced home to him, and he was arrested and convicted. The case was carried to the Supreme Court, where the judgment of the Wayne county court was reversed.

In 1879 Squire Hollister, his brother-in-law, George Burns, who had returned to Hollisterville, W. A. Meyers, and a young girl named Fannie Van Gorder, were arrested charged with conspiracy, arson, burglary and attempted murder.

The charges against these parties were made by Theodore H. Baker, a merchant of Hollisterville. Squire Hollister owed Baker $3,000, for which the latter held a mortgage on the former's property. Hollister insisted on paying it, and the day the money was paid Baker sent it to a Scranton bank. That night a fire broke out in a barn near Baker's, and Baker ran to it, leaving his wife and child at home. While he was gone a masked man entered the house, and aided by Fannie Van Gorder, beat Mrs. Baker into unconsciousness and took the wallet which had contained the $3,000 paid that day to Baker. Mrs. Baker said that she had recognized the masked robber as George Burns.

Baker, following alleged clues, was satisfied that Squire Hollister had conspired with Burns, Will Meyer, Fanny Van Gorder, who was Meyer's sweetheart, to fire the barn. The four prisoners were tried at Honesdale, and to the amazement of every one Miss Van Gorder and her lover were convicted, and Hollister and his brother-in-law, Burns, were acquitted.

A few weeks ago a daring burglary was committed in Dunmore, a suburb of Scranton. Officers were put to work on the case, and the clews they found led them to Hollisterville, and finally to the arrest of Squire Hollister, his brother Henchel, Charles Engel, and William Snow. Besides being a Justice of the Peace and the political boss of his township, Squire Hollister is a witty newspaper writer. His brother, Dr. H. H. Hollister, of Scranton, wrote the "History of the Lackawanna Valley." His sister, Mrs. Watres, was a poet of more than ordinary merit, her productions during the war, over the signature of "Stella Lackawanna," being well known.

Russia's Chief Object.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 27.—The "Novosti," official organ, says that the visit of M. de Giers to Paris shows that Franco-Russian friendship does not value Germany, and that the chief end of Russia is not to ally itself with France, but to safeguard Russian interests.

Myra Gaines' Heirs Want Their Money.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 27.—Counsel for the Myra Gaines heirs called upon the Mayor yesterday to make provision for the payment of the judgment in their favor affirmed by the United States Supreme Court. The amount is about $900,000. A special tax will probably be levied for the payment of the judgment.

Gilmore Won on a Foul.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 27.—Jim Doran and Hugh Gilmore fought at Maltby yesterday morning for $500 a side. Eight rounds were contested when the fight was given to Gilmore on a foul. Both men were badly punished.

IMPRISONED 17 YEARS.

President Harrison Will Investigate the Case of the J. Gerson Borden Mutineers.

TOMLINSON, Me., Nov. 27.—President Gompers of the American Federation of Labor has obtained the promise of President Harrison that he will investigate the circumstances in the case of the two American seamen who have been confined in the prison here for the past 17 years. The President has evinced great interest in the story of the men, which is as follows:

In May, 1875, E. W. Clark and George Miller, American citizens, shipped from New Orleans on the schooner Jefferson Borden, bound for Liverpool. Her captain, W. Peterson, treated them and the other members of the crew, it is alleged, with the greatest cruelty. The food was bad, the fresh water carelessly kept, and the crew subjected to overwork and torturous punishment. Maddened by their hardships, Clark and Miller and a third member of the crew, John Glen, a British subject, formed a mutiny and attacked the captain and his officers.

During the melee the mate, Corredon Peterson, the Captain's brother, was struck with a belaying pin and killed. The Captain retreated to his cabin, and from a window laid out each of the mutineers with a revolver. No one was killed, but they were so severely injured that they were easily put in irons. After treatment in a British hospital the men were brought to Boston and tried and convicted of mutiny. The sentence of death imposed on the two Americans was commuted to imprisonment for life, while the Briton, through the offices of the British government, received a 10 years' sentence.

The delegation that presented the application for the pardon of the two men was appointed by the Labor Union meeting at Detroit last year, through the efforts of the Seamen's Union.

LIFE SAVING SERVICE.

Embarassment Under Which It Labors Owing to Resignations of Trained Men.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27.—The annual report of Superintendent Kimball of the life-saving service shows as follows: At the close of last fiscal year the establishment embraced 238 stations, 178 on the Atlantic, 48 on the lakes, 11 on the Pacific, and 1 on the Ohio at Louisville, Ky. The number of disasters to documented vessels within the scope of station operations during the year was 331. There were on board these vessels 3,147 persons, of whom 3,105 were saved and 42 lost. The number of shipwrecked persons who received succor at the stations was 551, to whom 1,616 days' relief in the aggregate was reported.

The cost of the maintenance of the service during the year was $940,201. The saving of imperilled property was proportionately greater than in any former year, with a single exception.

The general superintendent invites attention to the embarrassment under which the service labors owing to the frequent resignations of trained men, who leave the service for better compensation at less hazardous vocations. He says that this exodus of experienced surfmen, shown in the last report to be more than 30 per cent., has continued during the past year, and it is obvious that, unless speedily checked, the efficiency of the corps will be seriously impaired. Many who would otherwise leave are retained by the hope of better wages in the future, excited by former recommendations, and by the merits of the case which they think ought to be apparent.

Meeting of Irish-Americans.

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—The conference of representative Irish-Americans, called pursuant to resolutions adopted at a recent meeting of the Municipal Council of the Irish National League, met in this city yesterday. Two hundred members were present. J. W. Casey, of Rochester, was appointed chairman. A committee was appointed to draw up a platform. The sentiment of the meeting seemed to be that the platform should set forth the principles enunciated and supported by Parnell, that dependence of the Irish people upon any English statesman should be disapproved, and that independence, pure and simple, should be the watchword.

The Fire at St. Albans.

ST. ALBANS, Vt., Nov. 27.—The fire which occurred here yesterday proved to be the most disastrous that has visited this city in many years. The flames started in a small barn situated in the rear of a store on Main street. A high wind prevailed and, owing to this, the fire had its own way until Stroun's stables, eight business houses, Waugh's Opera House, the Congregational Church and several law offices were burned. The loss is estimated at $150,000; partially insured. The American House, the Welden House and many business houses and residences were saved only with the utmost difficulty.

LABOR NOTES.

A Federation of Trades has been organized in San Diego, Cal., which will be affiliated with the Federation of Labor on the Pacific coast.

The labor organizations of Denver, Col., are agitating to abolish the local Pinkerton police force maintained by the capitalists of that city.

The pressmen's strike at the Werner Works in Akron, O., has been settled, the company agreeing to advance wages and employ fewer apprentices.

The National organization of the Wagon and Carriage Makers will be represented at the Birmingham Convention of the American Federation of Labor by Cornelius Kelly.

The Austrian government has given orders to expel from all universities and other public educational institutions any students or teachers who attend, or speak at, the meetings of organized workmen.

The Knights of Labor of Indiana will hold their annual convention at Connersville on Dec. 2, and after the close an offensive and defensive alliance will be formed with agricultural and reform organizations.

FIGHT FOR SPEAKER

Candidates Getting Ready For the Caucus Contest.

FEW MEMBERS ON THE SCENE.

Mr. McMillan Confident, and Denies That He Contemplates Withdrawing.

The Time For the Caucus Not Yet Fixed—A Desire to Make the Contest as Amicable as Possible—The Friends of Mr. Mills Jubilant—The Question of Presidential Preferences Not to Come up.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27.—The Democratic candidates for the Speakership of the House were busy yesterday holding conferences with their friends and getting ready for the caucus contest. Mr. Mills and his friends are in a pleasant mood over Mr. Carlisle's letter vouching for Mr. Mills' moderation of temper, while the other candidates are not disposed to attach much importance to it, at least as to the influence upon their own strength.

Very few members have as yet reached the city, and those who are here are chiefly those who are the earnest advocates of one or the other of the candidates. The doubtful men do not seem in any hurry to appear on the scene, and until some of them come there can not be any material change in the situation.

Mr. McMillan said this morning that there was absolutely no foundation for a statement that he intended to withdraw. He said that he might get whipped, though he did not expect to, but that he would never run away, and there was certainly nothing in the situation to make him approach the fight timidly. His friends speak with the greatest confidence.

Each of the candidates are receiving many callers, the supporters of one candidate calling on his rival, and there is an evident purpose to make the contest as amiable as possible.

The time for holding the caucus has not yet been fixed, but it will be held very soon. A report is out that as soon as the caucus is called Mr. Bland will, before the nominations are made for speaker, introduce a resolution, and demand a vote on it, making a declaration of principles on the silver question.

There have been some efforts made to drag in the question of presidential preferences, but it is asserted that no man who has an ambition to be president wants his strength to be tested in this uncertain manner.

Trout Fry Ready for Delivery.

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—Application for trout fry to be delivered from the State hatcheries next spring are already coming in. Application blanks can be obtained by writing to Edward P. Doyle, clerk of the board, room 55, Fulton Market Bank Building, this city. The commissioners have now completed their new car for carrying fish, and will next year make free delivery of fry at any station on the Ontario & Western Railway direct from the car. The car is complete in all its appointments for the transportation of fish, and will carry at one time 600,000 fry. This will be a great accommodation to the people interested in stocking the streams, and will do away with all the expense they have heretofore had to bear in going to the hatcheries for the fish, and also for the transportation. We are advised that the commissioners have arranged for a large output of fry this year, and it is hoped that everybody interested will send in their applications early.

Buffalo's Big Grain Blockade.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Nov. 27.—The biggest grain fleet ever known to this port is here to-day and it is in the worst blockaded condition ever known to Buffalo. It is estimated that the grain afloat will reach several million bushels. There are nearly 100 steamers in port and nearly half as many sail vessels. The pressure brought to bear on the Superintendent of Public Works was so great that he has ordered Division Superintendent Chambers to keep the Erie Canal open for navigation until December 5, if weather permits.

Horrible Death of a Teamster.

RED BANK, N. J., Nov. 27.—George Chandler fell under the wheels of a wagon yesterday while carting ashmant from Red Bank to Oceanic and was instantly killed, his breast being terribly crushed. The load in the vehicle weighed over a ton and a half. Chandler was 26 years old and unmarried. It is said he was intoxicated at the time of the accident.

More of the Searles Will.

BOSTON, Nov. 27.—The Searles will is the subject of two more appeals from the decision of the Judge. One is on behalf of Annie C. Severence, of Los Angeles, Cal., and the other by Lyman Sherwood and Delia Sherwood, of southeast New York.

The Monongahela Not to Return.

NEWPORT, R. I., Nov. 27.—The U. S. S. Monongahela, which sailed last June on a year's cruise in foreign waters, has been ordered home, but the order had been revoked and the vessel will not return until next summer.

Said to Be Lewis A. Grant, Sure.

BOSTON, Nov. 27.—A dispatch from Rutland, Vt., says that reliable information confirms the rumor that the president has decided to appoint General Lewis A. Grant Assistant Secretary of War, to the secretaryship made vacant by the resignation of Redfield Proctor.

Hebrew Emigration Committee.

BERLIN, Nov. 27.—The committee appointed by the Hebrews of this city to assist Russian Jews in emigrating has aided forty thousand since June, and has paid the passage of fifteen thousand, mostly to America.

A QUEER GIFT.

Novel Restrictions Under Which Miss Carter Left Money to Her Town.

WILMINGTON, Mass., Nov. 27.—The town fathers are wondering what they shall do with a gift from a benevolent old lady of 70 years, Miss Sabra Carter, who has imposed such novel restrictions as to make the gift a white elephant on their hands. Miss Carter proposes to give the town 50 shares of stock, paying about 10 per cent. interest, she to have the interest on the stock while she lives, and after her decease the interest to be expended as follows:

The income of 10 shares purchased of the Lombard Investment Company, for which she paid $1,030, is to be used for "the painting of houses in Wilmington for those who shall apply for it," one or two each year, "who do not keep a dog and have not kept one for two years, and who have been members of a temperance society for the same period of time, and are not in the personal use of tobacco." If there are no applications for a coat of paint gratis, the income may be used one-half for ornamenting the common and the other to beautify the cemetery.

The income on 20 shares in the Denver Electric Lighting Company, which were bought for $2,178, is to be devoted to two purposes, one-half the income to go toward the purchase for the public library of scientific books, works of travel, etc., and the remainder to be devoted to lectures on similar subjects. These lectures must be given on Wednesday afternoons, when the travelling is in good condition and school children can conveniently attend. If there is sufficient accommodation, people from neighboring towns may be invited.

Miss Carter makes several provisions with 20 shares in the Howard State Bank of Kansas, which shares, she says, may be worth about $220. One-fourth of the income of these shares she sets apart for renovating marbles in the cemetery, an eighth to be used in keeping the family lots in good order, a forth to be expended in planting trees by the wayside, and the remaining fourth for furnishing settees to be placed by the highways where travelers may rest.

Grace Resigns as President.

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—Ex-Mayor William R. Grace has resigned the presidency of the Grant Monument Association. He says his action was prompted by the fact that some time ago, while in Washington, he learned that during his absence the executive committee proposed electing certain new members of the association. Mr. Grace considered this an illegal proceeding, as when any vacancies occurred they could only be filled by members of the association.

Statement P. & R. Company.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 27.—The statement of the Philadelphia & Reading Company for the month of October, 1891, shows net earnings for the month of $544,124.75, against $427,289.69 for the same period last year. The surplus for the 11 months of the current year is $2,192,102.06, an increase of $640,739.93 as compared with the same period of last year.

Col. and Mrs. Grant's Reception.

VIENNA, Nov. 27.—The American Minister, Col. Frederick Grant, and Mrs. Grant, gave a Thanksgiving reception yesterday afternoon at the ministerial residence. The reception was thronged by Americans and English, as well as many Austrian notables, who were entertained hospitably by Mrs. Grant, who is one of the most popular ladies in Vienna society.

The Queen Hears the New Opera.

LONDON, Nov. 27.—Signor Lago's Royal Italian Opera Company, which is performing at the Shaftsbury Theatre, gave Mascagni's popular opera, "Cavalleria Rusticana," yesterday afternoon at Windsor Castle, by "command" of the Queen, and thus, for the first time in 30 years, Her Majesty heard an Italian opera. She appeared to enjoy the music.

Edison Improving the Phonograph.

NEW YORK, Nov. 27.—Inventor Edison is engaged in a certain modification of the phonograph for the purpose of fitting it to become the successor of the raised-letter system in production of books for the blind. The changes are chiefly in the way of increasing the capacity of the cylinders. It is expected to increase the reading range of the blind.

Rio Grande do Sul Dissatisfied.

LONDON, Nov. 27.—A dispatch from Santiago, Chili, says that the province of Rio Grande do Sul is very dissatisfied with the new regime in Brazil, only one member of the Cabinet having been selected from Rio Grande. The Rio Grande troops at São Pedro have not disbanded.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

It is rumored that Chancellor Von Caprivi is about to resign.

The wife of Robert Mantell, the famous actor, has begun action for a separation.

A book is being published of sermons preached by the Kaiser while yachting in Norway.

The funeral of the late Gov. Hovey took place from Mount Vernon, Ind., yesterday.

The thermometer at Winnepeg for the past few days has varied between 12 and 17 degrees below zero.

Fanny Davenport, the actress, has closed a contract for 380 acres of land in Fulton's Canyon, Grange County, Cal.

A heavy snow storm fell over Minnesota and the Dakotas Wednesday night and drifted so badly that railway traffic was delayed.

There was merry Thanksgiving dinner at the White House yesterday. All the family were present except Mrs. Russell Harrison, who left for Omaha, where her parents live, on Tuesday.

THE PRESS PRINTS FOR ALL.

It has become necessary for THE PRESS to again disclaim all personal indorsement of any expressions of political sentiment, or criticisms of municipal officers or candidates, that appear in these columns in the form of communications or interviews. They are given for what they are worth, as merely the assertions or opinions of certain individuals.

This paper is open to the people, and is open to an expression of the opinions of all sides. The tickets of both political parties, also, are to be found above.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—Don't miss the mass meeting in Music Hall, to-night.

—To-morrow Rogers Bros. will cut the price on Edwin C. Burt's shoes to $3 50.

—Read what the United Tea and Coffee Growers' Association have to say about butter, etc.

—The dance that was held at Saenger Hall last night in aid of St. Joseph's church will be continued to-night.

—Bear in mind the regular Friday evening meeting of the Y. P. S. C. E., of the Park Avenue Baptist church, beginning at 8 o'clock.

—The Crescent League offers $5 reward for information leading to the conviction of any one found trespassing on the club's base-ball grounds.

—No matter what your politics are, you will find interest in listening to the speeches in Music Hall, to-night, when prominent Republicans, and maybe some Democrats, will discuss the issues of vital interest to the community of Plainfield.

—A team belonging to A. D. Thompson, of this city, became frightened on Main street, Raritan, Monday. They were harnessed to a meat delivery wagon. The horses ran nearly to Somerville before they were stopped. Not much injury was done, but the meat was all scattered along the street.

—The union prayer and praise service of the young people's societies of Plainfield in the lecture room of the Trinity Reformed church, yesterday morning, was largely attended and was really a feast. C. D Wheeler, the leader of the meeting, in a few well-chosen remarks, welcomed the visiting societies and at once everybody felt at home. The meeting was then thrown open for prayer or testimony, and every minute was occupied. A pleasing feature of the meeting was the attendance and participation in the meeting of a number of the members of the Junior Y. P. S. C. E. Such a meeting of the young people of Plainfield should be held oftener, was the unanimous verdict of all who were in attendance at this very spiritual uplifting gathering.

Happy and content is a home with "The Rochester;" a lamp with the light of the morning. Call on Rochester Lamp Co., 42 Park Place, N. Y.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

William Goff enjoyed a visit to his mother at Red Bank yesterday.

Messrs Dan Terry, Douglas Darby and Gus Trust started to-day for a week's hunting trip in Virginia.

Ex-Mayor L. V. F. Randolph has been invited to address the Citizens' meeting in Music Hall, this evening.

The Misses Phillips of Jersey City Heights are visiting their aunt, Mrs. Phillips of West Fourth street.

Charles Powlison, secretary of the Y. M. C. A. at Philadelphia, spent yesterday at his home on Grandview avenue.

Yesterday, the Rev. Dr. Ketcham performed the marriage ceremony that united Sarah A. Hall and Charles Keller, of this city.

The Plainfield Calumet association gave their initial reception on Tuesday evening at the residence of A. Vincent Rockwell, 118 East Front street.

The Rev. D. H. Davis who has been at the head of the Seventh Day Baptist mission in China for eleven years past, will preach at the Seventh Day Baptist church, to-morrow, at 10 a. m. Seats free.

Prof. E. H. Lewis, son of the Rev. A. H. Lewis, of this city, is giving a course of lectures on Roman life, at the Alfred university. The lectures are illustrated with magic lantern views, and being given in the early evening are attended by many citizens as well as the students.

The Rev. B. Fay Mills, who commences his work in Elizabeth next Monday, is thus sketched by the Terra Haute Express: "One of the strongest points was that he preached the plain, unadulterated Bible. He did not edge off on denominational theories, but confined himself to making Christians rather than church members."

Miss Alice B. DeRevere and George S. Potts of Jersey City, were married by the Rev. John P. Stafford, at St. Mary's church yesterday. The bride is the daughter of George B. DeRevere, proprietor of Taylor's hotel, Jersey City, and the Union Square hotel, New York. He owns a summer home at the corner of Broadway and Woodland avenue, this city.

F. X. Schoonmaker, one of the most prominent, eloquent and fluent orators of the Republican party, will speak at the Citizens' meeting in Music Hall, this evening. During the last National campaign he stumped New York state for Harrison with great results, and it is hoped by those who are opposed to the straight Republican ticket in this city, that he will stump Music Hall to-night with great results for the Citizens.

Will Spend His Christmas in Jail.

John Lynch, formerly a Pond Tool Works employe, has left town for a four weeks' stay at Castle Hicks, Elizabeth. A colored woman known as "Nancy" appeared this morning in the city court room, where Lynch was a guest against his will and made a very serious statement against the prisoner. She said that the young man had accosted her on the street and had made an improper proposal. Judge Codington sent him to jail for 30 days, and fined him $10 besides.

John Wilson and William H. Vanderveer had been arrested for fighting. Wilson was fined $4, and Vanderveer $5.

Andrew Sherlock, for drunkenness, got 10 days in jail.

Johnnie Burke Won the Badge.

Fifteen members of the Acorn athletic club of Somerset street, participated in a cross-country run, yesterday afternoon. The start was made from the club rooms at 2 p. m. Thomas Dwyer and John Burke set the pace, which proved too fast for their opponents.

The time made was, 19 minutes, 5 seconds. The medal, which is a very handsome one, was won by Johnnie Burke. He was closely followed by Thos. Dwyer. The medal was presented by the president of the club. The judges were William Runyon, Joseph Green, and George Barry. Charles Keller was timekeeper. The distance covered was three miles.

A Conference of Christian Boys.

All boys over thirteen years of age are especially invited to be present at to-morrow's morning session of the convention of the Youth's Department of the Y. M. C. A. of N. J., to be held in the association hall at 10 o'clock. Ladies and all interested in work among boys are cordially invited to the 2:30 and 7:30 p. m. sessions. A most interesting programme has been arranged, and M. S. F. Dudley and other prominent leaders in boys' work will be present.

Artificial Ice by Enterprising Plainfielders.

The Plainfield Ice and Cold Storage company filed articles of incorporation Wednesday afternoon with the county clerk. The company will engage in the manufacture of artificial ice.

—G. Q. Packer presented all the married men of his establishment with a Thanksgiving turkey, yesterday.

—Commencing Monday evening, Winfield Scott Post, G. A. R., will hold their fourth bazaar, at Reform Hall, and continue it through the week.

—Theodore Vroom, artist, has sued Patrick Lynch, hackman, for $8, for the painting of a sign. Trial will take place next week. Francis E. Marsh will appear for Mr. Lynch, and George Demeza for Mr. Vroom.

—The entertainment at Reform Hall, last evening, by Dr. Lawrence and Mr. Cushman, was so well received that it will be repeated to-night. Among the nation's noble sons and daughters whose faces were shown, the most applauded were ex-President Cleveland and wife, and Governor-elect Flower of New York.

—William Messerschmidt killed a genuine mink, yesterday morning. It was under the stoop of his house on Washington street sucking the blood of a tame rabbit it had just caught. It was killed with a shovel. The animal is supposed to have come up the brook near which Mr. Messerschmidt lives. Where its relations are hidden, however, is a mystery, as none of that valuable fur bearing family has been seen in this section of the country for some time.

OBITUARY.

Anna Elena Titsworth.

Anna Elena Titsworth, daughter of Rudolph M., and the late Ann Eliza Titsworth, of Plainfield, passed to the heavenly rest, November 15, 1891, in the thirty-third year of her life. Although of late she was not strong as to physical health, the summons to "come up higher" was unexpected, and a great void is left by her going. For eight years she had filled the place in her father's home left vacant by her mother. During the same time she stood in the place of mother to the children of her sister-in-law, the late Eva Potter Titsworth, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Potter, jr. In these relations, with rare tact and tenderness, she united two broken homes in one, the light and comfort of both. She united with the Seventh Day Baptist church of Plainfield, March 30, 1872, under the pastoral care of the Rev. Dr. D. E. Maxson, and served Christ and the church with steady purpose and intelligent zeal through all succeeding years. Nowhere outside of her home will she be so much missed as among the young people in their church and social work. Their comfort is that our Father has made her a pillar in the heavenly temple from whence she shall go out no more.

Miss Titsworth's life was closely allied with the work of education. As pupil and teacher she had been connected with the Plainfield Seminary for young ladies for a quarter of a century. Graduating at eighteen years of age, she passed from the place of a pupil to that of teacher, which place she honored with great success for fifteen years. Her last illness was so brief that she practically passed from the school-room and the home circle to heaven by a single step, having attended to her usual home and school duties on Thursday, November 12. She controlled her pupils by love, and inspired them to noble lives by the unconscious influence of her own. Her literary taste and judgment were of a high order. In evidence of this it is only necessary to add that Longfellow was her favorite American poet. She was especially gifted as an elocutionist.

If it were possible to put the story of such a life into a few representative words, those words would be: Gentleness with wondrous strength to do and to suffer; unsullied purity; unselfish service, and never-failing helpfulness. As we count years, her life had not reached noon-tide; but measured by what it had attained, and what it had done for others, it was in the golden sunset of high endeavor. Earth's poverty and heaven's wealth were both increased when she went away.

The following stanza, selected by her associates at the Seminary, is a faithful photograph of her life:

Blessing she is; God made her so;
And deeds of week-day holiness
Fall from her noiseless as the snow,
Nor hath she ever chanced to know
That aught was easier than to bless.

One whose heart knows the sorrow those feel out of whose homes such an one has been called, and who could not be present at Miss Titsworth's farewell service, sent the following which was read there, and is reproduced here for the comfort it may bring to the hearts of those who will read these lines through the blinding tears of their sorrow-born sympathy. May the peace of God which passeth understanding abide with all the stricken ones.—Sabbath Recorder.

HERE AND THERE.

We sit beside the lower feast to-day,
She at the higher.
Our voices falter as we bend to pray;
In the great choir
Of happy saints she sings and does not tire.

We break the bread of patience, and the wine
Of tears we share;
She tastes the vintage of that glorious vine,
Whose branches fair
Set for the healing of the nations are.

I wonder is she sorry for our pain,
Or if, grown wise,
She, wondering, smiles, and counts them idle, vain,
These heavy sighs,
These longings for face, and happy eyes?

Smile on then, dear one, as God's will is best,
We lose our hold,
Content to leave thee to the deeper rest,
The safer fold,
To joy's immortal youth, while we grow old.

The Ponys Lost Their Wind.

When the second team of Crescent League bowlers passed the first team on the second frame of Saturday night's club contest, there was wild rejoicing by the former for a minute. The seconds came down the frame with only three breaks—Moore, Reed and H. Emerson—while the firsts had six. The seconds made 150 points that frame and the firsts made but 80. However in the next frame the firsts recovered their grip and added 198 to their total while the seconds only rolled up 109. After that it was good bye to the ponys. They even lost their wind, and in the last frame ever mother's son of them broke except Doane and Moore. A. V. Kline was umpire. The score:

Notice is hereby given that an election will be held in the several Wards and Districts of the city of Plainfield, on Tuesday, the first day of December next, at the following named places for the purpose of voting for the following city officers at large: Three members of the Common Council, City Assessor, City Collector, City Treasurer, three Commissioners of Appeal, and a member of the Board of Education; and from each of the Wards—a member of the Common Council, a Justice of the Peace and a Constable.

The polling places selected are as follows:

First ward—at No. 43 North avenue, (opposite depot.)

Second ward—at No. 65 Park avenue, near 4th street.

Third ward—at Sharp's carriage factory, No. 6 West 6th street, near Park avenue.

Fourth ward—First Election District—at No. 74 West Front street, Schenfilu's block. Second Election District—at Fritts's store room, West Second street and Mable berg place.

Polls open at 6 a. m. and close at 7 p. m., with adjournment from 1 to 2 p. m.

The Boards of Registry and Election will meet at the places above named, on Tuesday, November 24th, instant, from 1 to 9 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of correcting and revising the registry of voters.

Done in accordance with an act of the Legislature of New Jersey, entitled an "act to regulate elections," approved April 18 1876, and amendments thereto. JOSEPH B. COWARD, City Clerk.

Dated November 17, 1891. 11 17 td

THIS IS THE TRUTH.

The Figures Show That the Six Councilmen Who Were Not Bound by Politics or Bosses, Cut Down Your City Taxes.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—There has been so much published of late in relation to the taxes, with the sole intent of deceiving the people, I will quote a few facts and figures to show the voters the difference between Ring Rule and the Rule of the Citizens.

While the figures given by the Ring organs are correct in the main, the way they are given and commented on by the organs are intentionally misleading. Mr. Runyon, in his paper of the 24th inst., published what he knew to be absolutely false, for he tells the taxpayers that the school rate for 1891, is two cents less than in 1890. The school rate in 1890 was 52 cents, and in 1891 57 cents. This makes the rate for 1891, 5 cents more instead of 2 cents less as stated by Mr. Runyon. I would say to Mr. Runyon in this connection that more votes can be caught by truth than by lies.

The only rates of taxation that the acts of any council, be they good or bad, can have any bearing on, whatever, are the following: fire department tax, city tax and poor tax. Under Ring rule in 1889, the rates for these taxes were as follows: Fire department tax, 18 cents on $100; city tax 46 cents on $100; poor tax 8½ cents on $100. Total rate for 1889, 72½ cents on $100. Besides the amounts raised as above, the council of 1889 spent over twenty-two thousand dollars, ($22,000.) which amount the council of 1890 had to pay as the following figures given by Mr. A. Titsworth, city treasurer, will show:

Notes given in 1889 paid in 1890.

For general fund	$12,500
Fire department	5,000
Poor fund	2,200
Total	$19,700

Besides these amounts the council of 1890 had to pay nearly $3,000 for back bills contracted in 1889.

The tax rates for 1890 were as follows: Fire department tax, 18 cents on $100; city tax, 44 cents on $100; poor tax, 8 cents on $100. Total rate for 1890, 70 cents on $100.

Out of the amount raised by the above figures, the council of 1890 had to pay the above mentioned $22,000.

The tax rate for 1891 was as follows: Fire department tax, 17 cents on $100; city tax, 42 cents on $100; poor tax, 7 cents on $100. Total rate for 1891, 66 cents on $100.

Out of the amount raised by the above, the council have provided the city with one of the best fire alarm systems yet invented, also the fire department with six fine horses all of which are paid for, and the city will not have one cent of indebtedness on December 31, 1891.

These are facts and figures that the ring organs distort, and by false statements try to make the taxpayers believe that the members of the councils of 1890 and 1891 are robbers.

I would like to ask Mr. Runyon again why he did not publish in his paper for the enlightenment of the public, the statements made to him in regard to the councils of 1890-1891 by a prominent engineer of Plainfield. Did he not say to you, Mr. Runyon, that you were very foolish to go into the question of public expenditures for the last two years, in comparison with former years, for facts and figures were all against you. Who stands in a better position to know the facts that he told you, than that same engineer?

If the taxpayers are desirous of learning the facts in detail, I would refer them, by permission, to F. A. Dunham, C. E., at his office in the Coward building Park avenue.

I defy the opponents of honest government of city affairs, to point to one fact, or even one action of the gentlemen composing the so-called "Big Six," that is, or has been, against the interest of the city of Plainfield. The Ring's cry of "Robbers" without any facts or figures given, will not fool the honest voters of the city of Plainfield when the above figures will show that the "Big Six" reduced the tax rate from 72½ cents on $100 under Ring rule of 1889, to 66 cents on $100 in 1891; and at the same time paid off the enormous debt of $22,000 that the last Ring council had left the taxpayers burdened with.

Figures placed as they rightfully belong, never lie. SEYMOUR G. SMITH.

A Pleasant Hour in China.

At the Seventh-day Baptist church, at 8 o'clock to-morrow evening, the Rev. Dr. D. H. Davis, late of Shanghai, will deliver an illustrated lecture in which 100 views painted by Chinese artists, under Mr. Davis's immediate supervision, will be thrown upon a screen. These views represent the manners and customs of the eastern nation: Chinese street scenes, marriage ceremonies, funeral processions, idol worship, heathen gods, etc. All are invited.

This is to Certify!

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—This is to certify that all wilful rumors as to my aspiring for the position of Chief of the Fire Department, or any other city official position, are false. I have never been promised any such position, nor asked for it, and furthermore, I would not accept any if offered to me.

DR. CHAMPNEY ON HIS WAY WEST.

He Deserts His Wife Who Is Still Sick from Poisoning, and Writes He Doesn't Know Where He is Going nor When He Will Stop.

Dr. Champney, one of Dunellen's prominent citizens, and the Health Inspector of the Borough, disappeared from his home on Tuesday last. He left his family shortly after dinner, saying he was going to Plainfield on the next train to make a call, but would return in a couple of hours. When 9 o'clock at night arrived and he didn't, Mrs. Champney went out in search of him.

At the station she discovered that he had purchased a single trip ticket for New York. She thought this strange and telephoned at once to his parents in that city but received no response. Wednesday morning Mrs Champney took one of the first trains to New York in search of her wayward husband. She went direct to Mr. Champney's parents. They claimed not to have seen him. Mrs. Champney then went to her mother's home in Brooklyn and told her troubles. The mother took in the situation at a glance and advised the daughter that the only thing to do was to pack up what things she had and come home to her.

Mrs. Champney is a nice looking woman of about 25 years of age, and is very naturally much hurt at the treatment from her husband. She has not entirely recovered from illness caused through recently taking a dose of poison by mistake. She plainly shows the anxiety she has gone through during the past two days. Dr. and Mrs. Champney have two children—one a bright boy of fifteen months old and the other a baby girl of four months.

Dr. Champney left his wife in almost destitute circumstances. He did not see that there were even provisions enough to last them the balance of the day. His practice of late has dwindled down to almost nothing, and the support of his family had depended almost entirely upon remittances from his father.

Mrs. Champney received a letter from him yesterday morning, stating: "I am on my way to the West. Don't know where I am going nor when I will stop." The post mark was so blurred that it could not be read. Mrs. Champney will move to Brooklyn in a few days. She says she does not intend letting her husband get away as easy as that, and will find him yet.

The deserter took away everything belonging to him of any value, and is said to leave about $400 worth of creditors to mourn his loss.

Plainfield's Clever Amateurs to Perform Again.

Close upon the exclusive news first given THE PRESS of the intended repetition of "Esmeralda," for the benefit of the Muhlenberg hospital, comes the following official announcement:

At the request of many persons who were unable to obtain seats for the recent successful performance of "Esmeralda" at the Casino, the ladies and gentlemen composing the cast have consented to give a second representation of the play on Saturday evening, December 12, the proceeds to be devoted to that most worthy charity, the Muhlenberg Hospital.

When the sale of seats was stopped some time before the beginning of the first performance of the play—the capacity of the Casino having already been exceeded—there were very many persons who were disappointed in not being able to obtain admission, and it is for the benefit of these, as well as to assist in a practical way an institution which deserves the hearty support of every citizen of Plainfield, that the entertainment is to be given on the 12th proximo.

The cast will be the same as in the first performance, and the same attention will be paid to the details of stage embellishment and accessories,—in short, the representation will be an exact reproduction of the piece as first given, except that by repetition the performance will probably have gained in smoothness.

At Music Hall To-morrow Night.

"A Fair Rebel," with all its own special scenery and the original New York company, will be seen at Music Hall to-morrow night. There has been a big demand for seats, so a splendid attendance is assured and the play deserves it.

The interesting episodes of the war story, the thrilling effects, the scenes of pathos and romance, and the many bits of bright comedy are admirably carried out by a strong company of well known actors and actresses. The leading parts of "A Fair Rebel" are very well played. Edward B. Mawson gives a manly and direct performance of the part of Col. Ezra Mason, and Miss Fannie Gillette's sympathetic rendering of the role of Clairette Monteith is one of the great successes of the production. The scenery is all provided by the company.

—There was an interesting live bird shoot on private grounds near Bound Brook yesterday, at which Plainfield marksmen wiped the eyes of Brooklyn shooters, and all had a most enjoyable time.

The Name of George T. Rogers Strikes a Pleasant Chord.

[From the Jersey City Outlook.]

The organization of the Park club of North Plainfield and the building of a handsome club-house comes to our notice. We are always interested in the formation of new clubs, and especially so when we have reason to believe them to be influenced by the "Red Cross."

The board of officers of this new club are as follows: President, Samuel Townsend; vice-president, George T. Rogers; secretary, Wm. L. Saunders, and treasurer, George P. Dupee. The one name among this excellent list that strikes a familiar chord in our memories is that of George T. Rogers, for many years a member of the J. C. A. C., and identified with its work and business, having served with much credit to the club and himself as a member of the board of trustees, and we understand him to be one of the prime movers in the organization of this new club. We have it from a reliable source that the first conception of this organization dates from a visit paid by a number of representative gentlemen of Washington Park, North Plainfield, under the guidance of Mr. Rogers, to our club-house some time ago. Those gentlemen were so highly pleased with our home that it needed but a hint to set them to work to provide, in their delightful community, something which would furnish, as nearly as possible, a resort of this kind. In many respects they have patterned after us, but differ from us in that a membership in the Park club carries with it the use of the club privileges to the members' family, and in special attention being given to lawn sports. We are sorry to lose our good members, but if we have to lose them we rejoice to know that the influence and the associations of the Jersey City Athletic club remain with them, and, while adding to their happiness, reflect also to the lasting credit of our own club. We wish the Park club all success and prosperity.

David H. Lenox Represents Plainfield.

The polls of the annual election of officers of the New Jersey Division by mail vote to the secretary-treasurer, G. C. Pennell, at Elizabeth, closed on Monday of last week. The vote cast this year was very large, being 442 out of a membership of 1,300. The vote cast was as large as that of the Massachusetts Division, with over 3,000 members, and where there was a big fight. The secretary announces the vote as follows:

For chief consul, G. Carleton Brown, Elizabeth, 439.

For vice consul, Leonard S. Mulford, formerly of Plainfield, and now of Vineland, 300.

For vice consul, Charles K. Berdan, Paterson, 142.

For secretary-treasurer, George C. Pennell, Elizabeth, 440.

For representatives, David H. Lenox, Plainfield, 438; Gardner H. Cain, Trenton, 273; Harry D. Leavitt, Trenton, 301; Frank W. Cramer, Camden, 438; John B. Dodd, East Orange, 437; W. H. Stauffer, Asbury Park, 436; H. S. Fulper, Flemington, 435; John H. Hinners, Edgewater, 429; Theo. F. Merseles, jr., Jersey City, 432; W. Scott Calkins, Millville, 422; Wm. A. Drabble, Newark, 439; Harvey E. Ball, Paterson, 443; T. N. Gray, Orange, 431; W. E. Shuit, Passaic, 408.

The board of officers this year will be the largest in the history of the division, numbering about 30, for besides the above each league club of over twenty members will have its representative, and the two largest, the Plainfield Bicycle club, and the Elizabeth Wheelmen, will have two each.

The annual meeting of this new board will be held in Elizabeth on December 8, at which time the standing committees will be appointed, and the delegates to the National assembly, L. A. W., will be elected.

Wonderful Effect a Plainfield Superintendent Had.

[From the Sabbath Recorder.]

The best way to drive out the bad thoughts is to plant good thoughts. The genial superintendent of the Plainfield (N. J.) Sabbath-school visited our mission school a few weeks ago, and told the children two stories to explain God's love to us. He said that God stood knocking at the door of our hearts. He did not knock just once and then go away, as we do when we go to a man's house, but he stayed right there knocking, knocking. The boys were greatly impressed, and when he asked them to sing "Bringing in the Sheaves," I overheard Felix saying to the rest of the boys, "Let's not sing it, 'Bringing in the cheese' this time, let's sing it good."

A Fine Discourse.

"Public Opinion" was the subject of the Rev. Dr. Yerkes's very excellent Thanksgiving sermon, yesterday morning, at the union services in Trinity Reformed church. The Revs. Dr. Lewis and Ketcham and the Rev. Mr. Schenck were on the platform and assisted in the services. There was singing by a union choir under the leadership of T. E. Hazell, with A. L. Titsworth as organist.

Dr. Yerkes was at his best. His sermon was one of power and filled with practical suggestions calculated to better all classes if put into execution.

A. R. TUDOR'S Rye Whiskey is warranted absolutely pure and ten years old, and the statement is unqualifiedly true. Read the following affidavit:

HENRY SNYDER, Jr., of the City, County and State of New York, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he has been the General Manager of the A. R. TUDOR Co. from its inception, and he knows of his own knowledge that no neutral spirits, flavoring extracts, or foreign ingredients of any kind have ever been used or contained in the Whiskey bottled under the label and trade mark of A. R. TUDOR. He further solemnly swears that he has personally superintended the withdrawal of the A. R. TUDOR Co.'s Whiskey from the U. S. Bonded Warehouse, and that the U. S. Government stamps on the barrels thereof have, in no instance, borne date later than the year 1881.

And a good lamp

must be simple; when it is not simple it is not good. Simple, Beautiful, Good—these words mean much, but to see "The Rochester" will impress the truth more forcibly. All metal, tough and seamless, and made in three pieces only, it is absolutely safe and unbreakable. Like Aladdin's of old, it is indeed a "wonderful lamp," for its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light and more cheerful than either.

HIGHER THAN EIFFEL'S.

A Tripod Tower Fifteen Hundred Feet in Height.

Another Great Scheme for the World's Columbian Exposition—The Structure to Be Supplied with Many Conveniences.

Another tower scheme for the World's Columbian exposition consists of a three-cornered steel structure 350 feet at the base each way and 1,500 feet high to the top of the flagstaff. The Chicago Columbus Tower Company has nearly completed arrangements to build such a tower near Fifty-seventh street and Stony Island avenue. It will cost about $650,000. All the stock has been subscribed except a small amount. W. Z. Partello, of Washington, D. C., who is one of the main movers of the company, expects to complete all arrangements soon, so as to start building the foundations by January and complete the tower by July 15, 1892. The first landing will be 500 feet from the ground, with double pavilions, one twenty feet above the other, each suitable for a cafe and dancing hall. Six electric elevators will run from the ground to the first landing. The second landing will be 900 feet above the ground, the third 1,200 feet, and the fourth 1,400 feet. The top landing will have two sky parlors, one ten feet above the other. Three electric elevators will run between the first and top landings. The floor space of the sky parlors will be about 800 square feet each, for the third landing 900, for the second landing 2,400, and for the two main landings 10,000 each. The wigwam at the base, 350 feet on each side, will be fitted up with cafes and booths after the different styles and customs of foreign countries, the booths being for the purpose of selling curious articles produced and manufactured in all nations.

The tower will be strung the entire height with electric lights and with a powerful electric globe in the dome. Perley Hale is the designer and is now preparing the working drawings. The arrangements for handling crowds are simple. The increased height and capacity of this tower besides other novel features will make it entirely different from other towers.

The projectors of the enterprise figure on $2,850,000 as the receipts for 200 days.

OHIO'S NEW GOVERNOR.

William McKinley to Be Mr. Campbell's Successor.

The recent election in Ohio was one of the most interesting which ever occurred in a state noted for extraordinary campaigning. Both parties fought hard, and Mr. McKinley's victory was the prize of hard work and indefatigable effort on the part of the leaders of the republican party. Maj. McKinley's name is a household word. Everybody has heard of the McKinley bill. No candidate for a state office has ever been praised so highly and condemned so harshly as the author of that historic law, which furnishes food for press comment when everything else fails. Personally Maj. McKinley is said to be the most lovable of men, and will, no doubt, give Ohio a creditable state administration.

MARY DUN THURMAN.

A Touching Tribute to the "Old Roman's" Departed Helpmate.

Mrs. Thurman was born in Chillicothe in 1811. Her maiden name was Mary Dun. Her father, Walter Dun, was a wealthy landowner and merchant at that place. While Mary was yet a young woman her father moved to Lexington, Ky. Here she married Mr. Tompkins, but he died after a few years, leaving one daughter, Nancy. She was married to Judge Thurman in November, 1844, and has been his almost constant companion and helpmate since during his long professional and public career.

The beauty of the life that has just gone out is seen in the following tribute paid to her recently:

"The wife of Judge Thurman is a woman of eighty years, but to her husband she seems no older than she was when he married her, nearly half a century ago. They have grown old together in a most affectionate and beautiful way. Their union has served to vindicate the law of affinities and to present a choice example of domestic harmony, confidence and devotion. They have always been 'Mary and 'Allen' to each other with unswerving and simple fondness. The 'Old Roman,' as he is familiarly known in our politics, has not won his honors by forgetting for a moment the partner with whom he began the battle of life. It is said that no man can live up to his love-making, but this case must be rated as a sweet and wholesome exception. The best of all that Allen said to Mary as a suitor has been repeated in his conduct as a husband. He has believed in her as in nobody else. Her wishes have guided him, her faith has strengthened him. her approval has blessed him. In no contingency has he gone contrary to her advice. The word of Mary has outweighed all other influences with him, not in the sense of blind submission to another's will, but under constraint of well-justified reliance upon her wisdom and fidelity; and she has found her full reward in his candid and tender appreciation of her services.

"There is something inexpressibly gracious and admirable in this view of a great statesman's life and character. His friends delight to recall instances of his profound respect for his wife's opinion, and of his surpassing desire to please her. When the committee waited upon him in 1888 to tender him the nomination for vice president he did not respond with a set speech of acceptance; he said he 'would ask Mary about it.' The remark was like the man; and it was like the woman to shake her head at first and say that he was too feeble to make the race. She had to be persuaded, and when at last she consented he merely observed: 'All right; it's just as Mary says.'"

MUSCLE STIMULATION.

Valuable Experiments Recently Conducted by a French Savant.

To the usual well known ways of stimulating muscles to contraction, viz., electrical, thermal, mechanical and chemical, M. D'Arsonval has, says Nature, recently added that by means of light. He could not, indeed, get any contraction in a fresh frog muscle, when he suddenly threw bright light on it in a dark chamber; but having first in darkness stimulated a muscle with induction currents too weak to give a visible effect, and then suddenly illuminated the muscle with an arc light, the muscle showed slight tremulation. Not thinking this conclusive, however, M. D'Arsonval attached a muscle to the middle of a piece of skin stretched on a funnel, and connected the tube of the funnel by means of a piece of India rubber tube with the ear. The muscle being now subjected to intense intermittent light, he heard a tone corresponding to the period of illumination, and this ceased when the muscle was killed with heat. Arc light was used, which was concentrated by a lens and passed through an alum solution to stop the heat rays.

THE BOY RANSOMED

Millionaire Beals' Kidnapped Boy Returned.

THE FATHER TOOK NO CHANCES.

He Offered a Reward of $5,000, Against the Advice of the Police.

Took Counsel of the Charley Ross Case—Terrible Suspense of the Family—Arrest of Lizzie Smith, One of the Abductors—Mr. Beals Kept Faith With the Rascals.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Nov. 28.—The two-year-old son of Millionaire David T. Beals, that was kidnapped by Lizzie Smith, a waiting maid in the household, while the family were at dinner, was returned at 9:45 p. m. on payment of a $5,000 ransom.

The offer of ransom was made after a long and serious discussion. The police officers argued that the criminal should be brought to justice and that the offering of a ransom without attempting to secure the kidnappers was, from a normal standpoint, compounding a felony. But, Mr. Beals, taking counsel of the Charley Ross case, refused to take the risk.

At 4 o'clock in the afternoon Mr. Beals received a note by a messenger boy, who said that an unknown man had handed it to him on the street. The description of the man as given by the boy tallies very closely with that of the man who is known to have occupied a cottage on Lydia avenue together with another man and Lizzie Smith. He is supposed to be a man named King.

The note informed Mr. Beals that he desired to meet him in front of the post-office as soon as possible. Mr. Beals was directed to wear a plain gold ring on his left hand, prominently displayed, as a means of identification. The child, said the writer, was securely hidden and all the detectives in the country could not find him. He knew where the child was hidden and would return him to the father for a stated sum.

Mr. Beals went at once to the post-office, and until all the departments were closed for the night he paced up and down the corridors unceasingly. As the hours wore on, with no response to the secret signal, the poor father began to weep and his sobs brought tears to the eyes of all who heard them. Finally, at a late hour, friends led him to his desolate home.

Shortly after the evening papers appeared with the offer of $5,000 ransom, a man, whose description no one has obtained, appeared at the Beals residence and called for Mr. Beals.

Mr. Beals appeared, and the man said that if $20,000 in cash was paid him at 9.45 p. m. and the police were instructed to keep out of the way, he would return the child. He finally consented to take $5,000.

Mr. Beals willingly made the promises asked, and sent down to his bank for the money in small bills.

At the hour appointed the man with the boy, safe and sound, appeared at the residence and delivered up the child. He received the $5,000, counted it deliberately, bowed politely and disappeared.

The police had struck a hot trail, and at about the time the child was returned the woman Lizzie Smith was arrested in a vacant house in a lonely locality. She was taken to the police station and then to the Beals house, where she was fully identified.

As to Senator Brice's Seat.

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 28.—It is learned through copies of letters received from Judge King, of Youngstown, Chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, that United States Senator John Sherman, while not opposed to a contest of the seat of U. S. Senator-elect Calvin S. Brice, does not deem it right for him to object to the Senator taking his seat, inasmuch as he would be called upon to act judicially if a contest should arise. His plan is for the Republican State Committee to present a memorial to the Senate and for the Legislature of Ohio to assume a vacancy, elect a Senator and then let that gentleman, conduct that contest. Senator Sherman's views are coincided in by Senator Hoar.

Lytton's Funeral Will be Simple.

PARIS, Nov. 28.—In accordance with the express wishes of Lytton, the funeral of the late Earl will be free from ostentation and pomp. Lady Lytton wishes that there shall be no eulogistic address over the remains, but only the simple service of the Church of England, and that there shall be no extravagant parade or display. Her desires in this regard are said to be in accord with the often expressed views of Lord Lytton himself on the subject of death.

Commodore William Rouckendorff.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—Commodore William Rouckendorff, United States Navy, who is dead at the Grand Hotel, was born in Pennsylvania, was appointed to the Navy on Feb. 17, 1832, and was attached at first to the schooner Experiment. He received his commission as Lieutenant in June, 1848, and was on duty on the frigate Congress.

IT WAS A CONSPIRACY.

An Innocent Woman Released After a Lingering Imprisonment.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 28.—David Galler, a tailor living in Ludlow street, New York, complained recently to the police that he had been decoyed to this city by a woman named Zepha Sazankien and robbed of $1,800. The woman was arrested, tried and convicted, and sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment.

The fact that she had $400 in her possession at the time of her arrest was largely instrumental in her conviction. Several prominent gentlemen of this city became interested in the case, and with the aid of private detectives thoroughly investigated the matter. They discovered that she had but recently emigrated to this country from Germany and that she then had $800 in her possession.

Further investigation on their part led to the belief that the arrest and conviction of the woman was due to a conspiracy on the part of the complainant and others, and they thereupon laid the facts in the matter before the Judge who had tried the case. The latter immediately became convinced of the woman's innocence, revoked her sentence and set her free.

Galler, who has returned to New York, will be arrested and brought here for trial on a charge of perjury.

THE LEONARD MURDER.

Whereabouts of Louis Harriot, the Supposed Slayer, Still a Mystery.

ATLANTIC HIGHLANDS, N. J., Nov. 28.—The murderer of Mrs. Chas. T. Leonard, 35 years old, the wife of a well-known farmer, is still at large. A farm hand known as Louis Harriot, a native of Lorraine, who is described as six feet high, of dark complexion, with gray eyes, and about 31 years old, is pronounced to be the man who committed the crime.

The motive for it has not yet been discovered. Mr. Leonard was away from home and the children missed their mother. On the return of the father a search was made which resulted in the finding of Mrs. Leonard's body. The appearance of the remains indicated that the murder was a most brutal one.

There was a rope around the woman's neck, with which she had evidently been strangled, while the side of her head was crushed in, apparently by some blunt instrument. Harriot was seen in the neighborhood by several persons, with his clothes bespattered with blood, and having an excited appearance. He has disappeared and all efforts to find him have been fruitless.

Shot His Own Child.

JASPER, Ind., Nov. 28.—While hunting on his farm near here, Thomas Atkins was attracted by his dog snuffing at a hollow log, and fired his shotgun into it, thinking it was probably a catamount which had been carrying off sheep. Upon investigation the farmer found that he had blown the head off his baby boy, who had mischievously crawled into the hole and was laughing at its father when the shot came. The man became a hopeless maniac, and had to be lodged in an asylum.

Smugglers in High Life.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—The Treasury Department is continuing the investigation of the opium smuggling frauds, and it is understood has succeeded in obtaining some startling information, involving prominent people in mercantile and political life. A vigorous effort is being made to suppress names and facts, for it is possible, but not probable, that the matter will be made subject to a Congressional investigation, unless the facts come to the surface in the meantime.

Councilman to Sue for Libel.

LOWELL, Mass., Nov. 28.—Councilman Barry is about to enter suit against the "Morning Times" and the "Evening Star" for libel. He will claim $15,000 in each case. The alleged libel consists in the publication by the papers mentioned of the report of a sermon delivered by the Rev. Dr. Dunas of the Park street Church, who has begun a crusade against the authorities for not enforcing the liquor law. Barry owns a barroom and this came in for some special remarks by the preacher.

More Trouble in Brazil.

RIO JANEIRO, Nov. 28.—The Peixotto government has made a demand on Rio Grande do Sul for the reinstatement of the local government as it existed before the outbreak against Fonseca. The Rio Grande Junta has refused to obey this demand, and threatens to offer forcible resistance to any attempt to compel obedience. Owing to the rivalry of the army and navy for influence in political affairs, the jealousy between the two branches of the public service is becoming acute.

Keystone Bank Stockholders Sued.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 28.—Robert M. Yardley, receiver of the Keystone National Bank, has brought 87 suits in the United States District Court against as many stockholders of the Keystone Bank, for the assessment of $50 upon each share of stock held by them. The aggregate number of shares upon which suit is brought is 4,123, the assessments

Liabilities at From One to Three Millions—Cyrus W. Field Nearly Prostrated Over This Latest Affliction—Affairs of the Company in a Chaotic Condition—The Crash Was Predicted.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—The illustrious Field family is experiencing the truth of the old saying that misfortunes never come singly. Cyrus W. Field has been prostrated by the death of his wife and is on a sick bed. The life of his daughter Mary Grace, wife of Daniel Allen Lindley, is despaired of. His son, Edward Field, is said to be suffering from mental derangement. And the suspension of the firm of Field, Lindley, Wiechers & Co. makes matters worse.

The "Field" and the "Lindley" of the firm are Cyrus W. Field's son and son-in-law. This latest misfortune is intensified by the evil speaking, the ugly rumors, the charges and insinuations which accompany it.

The assignment of Field, Lindley, Wiechers & Co. was made to Charles W. Gould, of No. 2 Wall street, without preferences. Mr. Gould was the assignee of "Deacon" White's firm. When S. V. White & Co. failed it was reported that three firms had done business for the "Deacon." Field, Lindley, Wiechers & Co., was one of the three.

It was said that Field-Lindley would suspend, but the suggestion that they were seriously embarrassed was met with earnest denials.

It is impossible to state the amount of the liabilities or of the assets. Guesses at the liabilities range from $1,000,000 to $3,000,000.

When Wall street heard of the failure the general opinion was that it had resulted from the legacy of corn contracts from Mr. White's unfortunate corner, especially when it was learned that they had selected the same assignee.

But this is not not the reason given by Assignee Gould, who makes the following statement:

For some time after the suspension was announced the stock market was stagnant, all business being practically neglected, the brokers being too much interested in the closing out of the contracts to make any new deals.

"I was Mr. Field's friend as well as his counsel, and when it was seen that he was acting queerly and that the books needed straightening out, I went with the other members of the firm to Mr. Field's house to talk with him. But we found him unable to speak coherently and his mind continually wandered away from the subject. There was no alternative but to make an assignment and investigate the condition of the firm.

"The assignment was made because Edward M. Field, the senior member of the firm, is ill and suffering from mental derangement. His disease resembles incipient paresis, and results from trouble and overwork as the financial manager of the firm. The death of his mother last Monday seemed to be the last straw. It was only recently that I saw that his mind was affected, and it was not until a few days ago that his physician told me about it, although some of Mr. Field's friends saw it long ago.

"I know nothing as yet as to the financial condition of the firm. I have instructed the clerks to make up the balances on all the accounts as quickly as possibly. Everything is in great confusion, as you can understand, if you will remember that the entire financial management of the firm was in the hands of a man who was insane.

"I hope that the assets will be more than the liabilities, but I cannot tell. Much of the firm's capital was locked up in a certain enterprise which will ultimately be profitable, but which is not immediately available. The failure is due entirely to the causes I have mentioned, and not by speculation or by Mr. White's failure."

Killed by the Cars.

CHESTER, Pa., Nov. 28.—T. P. Pitt, who was struck by a Baltimore & Ohio express train at the Potter street crossing while driving a wagon, will die. Two boys who were riding in the wagon were fatally hurt. One of them, John Mansley, aged 9 years, died shortly afterwards. John Kennedy, the other boy, is not expected to recover. The wagon was ground to kindling wood, but the horse escaped uninjured.

Assignment of a Tool Company.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 28.—The Providence Tool Company has made a general assignment to A. F. Tenny. This company failed in 1882 and paid 50 cents on the dollar to assured creditors. On November 6 attachments amounting to $39,000 were placed on their property and the assignment is the winding up of the old company's business.

THE NEW BATTLE SHIPS.

Secretary Tracy Enthusiastic Over the Pirate, a Commerce Destroyer.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—Secretary Tracy is enthusiastic over the new ships now being built for the United States Navy. He spoke as follows of the "Pirate:"

"We have set out to build two ships that comply with the requirements of the future. Cruisers Nos. 12 and 13 will be ideal types of commerce destroyers. The Pirate, (7,600 tons burden) will be able to steam to San Francisco on the coal in her bunkers with which she leaves New York. Not another ship of war to-day afloat can do this. She has only one purpose—that of a menace to a great commercial nation, should any such ever become our foe.

"I am responsible for these two vessels. I have sacrificed their offensive and defensive powers to speed and coal endurance. No captain worthy to command either of them would think of engaging a warship on the high seas, but they are strong enough to engage any steam vessel built for trading purposes that might be armed in time of war.

"The Pirate, for example, could be sent into the English Channel and could stay there four weeks without recoaling; she could keep away from the ironclad vessels sent in search of her, and she could destroy every ship they put to sea or returned to that friendly haven. I designed her with the the single purpose to have a ship that could do what no other vessel could do. She can be rapid enough to overhaul any merchantman. I do not mean by this that she should always be able to run down and capture a vessel like the City of Paris, because in a rough sea it is quite possible that the steamer would outsail her. But in an average sea the Pirate can spurt for six or eight hours faster than the fleetest Transatlantic liner."

NOT HIS CHARLIE.

Christian Ross Denies that Stratton Adopted His Lost Son.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 28.—Christian K. Ross, father of the missing Charlie Ross, was seen this morning in reference to the story telegraphed from Cortland, N. Y., that his boy had lived there as the adopted son of G. Henry Stratton, who killed himself recently in an endeavor to emulate Succi's fast.

The story as published credits Sheriff Bothwick of Cortland with affirming that it has been his belief for some years that the boy who lived with Stratton in Cortland as his adopted son was Charlie Ross.

When Mr. Ross was asked about his correspondence with Sheriff Bothwick he failed to remember that official, but after a moment's thought he said:

"I recollect now; I did have some correspondence two or three years ago with such a man, but I have not heard from him lately. I investigated the matter at the time and found there was nothing in it. I am almost daily in receipt of letters from people all over the country who think they have discovered my boy."

The Ship Was Over a Volcano.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 28.—The American bark Hesper has arrived from Kobe. Capt. Sodergreen states that early on Oct. 30, when about 75 miles off the Japanese coast, a rumbling noise was suddenly heard and the ship was violently thrown on her beam ends the next instant. Immense waves came tumbling toward the ship, seas rushed over her deck from the stern, bow and over both sides. It is believed the bark was over a submarine volcano. Water flooded the deck and the crew found it was boiling hot. All hands were compelled to climb into the rigging, and there they remained for five hours.

Against Annexation.

TORONTO, Nov. 28.—In a letter received in this city from the Hon. Oliver Mowat, the Premier of the Ontario Liberal government, he strongly opposed the annexation of Canada to the United States and urges the Liberals to stand by the British connection. The letter gives great satisfaction here and will do much to check the annexation movement which has lately been making progress. It had references to an annexation meeting in a strong Liberal county and an overwhelming vote was recorded against annexation.

The Poor Mother-in-Law.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 28.—A novel method for getting rid of an obnoxious mother-in-law has just been tried in this city, and W. H. Lambert, the experimenter, is now under arrest, charged with arson. His mother-in-law and two children have been living with him for some time past, and he has tried in many ways to get rid of them, but failing to do so, it is charged that he has set fire to the house with the idea of forcing them into the street. The fire was extinguished after the mother-in-law had escaped.

The Engineer is Blamed.

CORTLAND, N. Y., Nov. 28.—Engineer Keating, who was so badly injured in the Delaware, Lackawana & Western collision at Messengerville, will recover. All of the others injured are doing well. Blame for the accident is now attached to Engineer Horning of the freight train. He had orders to sidetrack at Bloddgett's Mills, being told by the conductor to do so, but he disregarded his orders and ran to Messengerville. The officials of the road are investigating the matter.

She Had Sixty Descendants.

LOCKPORT, N. Y., Nov. 28.—Mrs. Anna Hoag Frost was buried recently at Somset on the 96th anniversary of her birth. She was the mother of eight children, the grandmother of 13, the great-grandmother of 38 and the great great grandmother of one child. Six of her grandsons bore her to the grave.

Gold Cure Keeley Sued.

DWIGHT, Ill., Nov. 28.—Henry M. Munroe has brought suit against Dr. Keeley and his gold cure company to recover $150 paid to Keeley for his services in treating the plaintiff for dipsomania, and another suit to recover $12,000 damages for injuring his health by the treatment.

The Secret is Out

Housekeepers are finding out that many baking powders contain ammonia; perhaps they have tested them; possibly they have caught the pungent and suggestive fumes from a "fresh" can of ammoniated powder. No wonder the manufacturers are afraid to let the people know what such powders are made of.

There is no "patent medicine" mystery about Cleveland's Baking Powder. It is not only free from ammonia and all adulterants, but the composition is plainly stated on every can. The materials are the best Science can produce, and a trial convinces any housekeeper that General Hurst (late Ohio Food Commissioner) was right in saying "Cleveland's is absolutely the best."

MURDER OF RIGGIN

An Eye-witness Tells the Story of the Sailor's Death.

SHOT DOWN BY THE POLICE.

Thrown Into a Cart by the Mob, and Dragged to the Pier.

Another of the Baltimore's Sailors Stoned by the Infuriated Chilians and Then Stabbed—The Americans in No Way to Blame—The "Yankees" Berated—Letter from One of the Crew.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Nov. 28.—The first succinct description of the fight between the Chilians and the crew of the Baltimore has come from one of the crew of that vessel to a friend in Brooklyn. The letter is dated Valparaiso, Oct. 20, and says:

"After the fall of Valparaiso, on account of the bitter feeling existing against the United States by the Chilians, it was thought advisable not to give liberty on shore to our crew, but from representations made by citizens and others that all ill-feeling had passed away a liberty party was sent on shore at 1:30 p. m. on Oct. 16. At 5 p. m. our whaleboat brought the news that our men had been attacked and that one man had been killed and several badly cut up. At 6 p. m. one of our men, Jerry Anderson, was brought off in a shore boat with two stab wounds in the back, one of which punctured the lung.

"It appears it was an understood thing among the Chilians, many of whom had just been discharged from the army and navy, to attack our men the first time they came on shore. As soon as our men landed they were told by several parties that they had better keep together, as an attack upon them had been arranged. Our men kept well together until between 4 and 5 o'clock, when, everything appearing pleasant, they broke up into small squads, going in different directions. It was now that the Chilians opened out, and, in true Spanish-American style, a mob would attack our small parties of one or two men. The result was: Boatswain's Mate Charles Riggin killed, six in hospital and 31 in jail.

The police, who are uniformed as soldiers and carry rifles, acted as auxiliaries to the mob. Riggin received his death shot from the police. It occurred as follows: Riggin was attacked by a mob and attempted to get away. He ran for a horse car and succeeded in getting on the platform, but before he could get inside he was dragged off and severely cut in three places. He fell in the street and was unable to move. They left him where he fell. So great was the terror of the people, caused by the mob that no one would assist him. One of our men, Jerry Johnson, armorer, heard that Riggin was lying in the street and badly wounded, and at once went to his assistance. He found Riggin still breathing. He got a glass of brandy and poured some down his throat, which revived him a little. Johnson asked if he knew him. Riggin answered:

"'Yes, Johnson. For God's sake get me out of this before they murder me.'

"Johnson picked him up and was carrying him away, when a crowd, half soldier-police and half mob, rushed on him. A dozen or more shots were fired, one of which passed through the knot of Johnson's neckerchief and struck Riggin in the throat. In the excitement Johnson lost his hold of Riggin. How he got clear of the mob himself he cannot explain, but he did get clear. After this the mob threw Riggin into a push-cart and dragged him to the mole.

"When Capt. Potter, of the American barkentine William Phillips, saw a man mounted on the cart astride of Riggin, haranguing the crowd, berating the 'Yankees' and gloating over the poor fellow who lay under him with his life's blood ebbing away, he remonstrated. Finally a squad of mounted police came and Riggin was taken to the hospital, where he died that night. Another of our men, John Hamilton, was surrounded by the mob and stoned until he dropped insensible, and was then stabbed while down. He now lies at the hospital, with little hope of recovery. Besides the six in the hospital, who are seriously hurt, there are 29 others now on board who have cuts and bruises.

"Our men had no show; they were attacked with bricks and stones wherever seen. If they sought refuge in house or saloon they were pushed out and the doors closed against them, the people were so afraid of the mob. Our men fought while they were on their feet and did the best they could, as three Chilians in hospital and a number of the mob who were carried to their homes can attest; but our men were too scattered and so out-numbered that the odds were too much for them."

Stagg to Stick to Yale.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 28.—It is stated that Yale has decided to establish a department of athletics of which Alonzo A. Stagg, the famous athlete, will have charge. Stagg had been engaged to take charge of the athletic department in Prof. Harper's University in Chicago, but it is now probable that he will not go there. He is reported as having said that he has received a better offer from Yale, which he will probably accept. His recent good work in coaching Yale's champion football team is said to have something to do with the action of Yale's faculty.

Just Like a Novel.

INDIANA, Pa., Nov. 28.—Alexander Moorhead, 24 years of age, son of Rev. W. W. Moorehead of Greensburg, Pa., who shot himself through the left breast, give as the reason for the suicide the fact that his brother was married on Wednesday, and that they had been reared together and he could not bear the separation from him. It is believed that Alexander was a suitor for the hand of his brother's wife.

A TREATY WITH HAWAII.

The Document Now in President Harrison's Hands for Signature.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—Minister D. Mott Smith, who was sent from the Hawaiian Islands to negotiate a treaty with the United States, has concluded his labors and the document is in the hands of the President for signature.

It proposes to admit all the products of the Hawaiian Islands into this country free of duty, and in return all American articles, whether agricultural or manufactured, are to be received by Hawaii without tariff.

This treaty is designed to make reparation to the Hawaiian sugar planters for taking the duty off sugar, and is not an agreement under the McKinley bill, but a treaty that will have to go to the Senate for ratification. There is will probably cause a big fight, for it brings Hawaiian fruits, arrowroot, etc., on which there is a high tariff, into direct competition with the California planters.

The treaty will probably cost Hawaii over half a million dollars in the remission of duties, but it will afford that place markets in this country under the most favorable conditions.

Pennsylvania's Fair Building.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Nov. 28.—It has been given out that the design submitted by Mr. Lausdale, of Philadelphia, would be chosen for the Pennsylvania World's Fair building. There is no authority for such a statement, in view of the fact that the seven plans selected from the whole number submitted are still in the hands of Professor Merriman, of Lehigh University. Executive Commissioner Whitman has received a letter from D. H. Burnham, chief of construction at Chicago, in which he gives tersely the rules which must govern the erection of State buildings. The letter will probably result in a modification of the plans submitted. He says that all buildings must be not more than two stories high, with low roofs.

Yale Team's Captain.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 28.—The Yale football team have this year failed to follow their usual custom of electing a captain immediately after the Thanksgiving Day game. The reported reason for this action, or rather neglect of action, is the fact that the giant Heffelfinger has announced that he will probably take another year in the law school. In that event he will undoubtedly be chosen captain.

Former Legislator in Trouble.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 28.—Westmoreland County politicians are excited over the arrest of George P. Blackurn, of West Newton, a former member of the State Legislature, for alleged issuing of bogus tax receipts to voters at the recent election. He claims to be innocent. A hearing will be had on Monday.

Secretary Foster Improved.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—Secretary Foster continues to improve and is expected to resume his duties at the Treasury Department next week.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—The ordinance of baptism will be administered in the First Baptist church tomorrow morning.

—Look in VanEmburgh & White's show window this evening. They say you will surely buy one.

—The annual parlor sale of the ladies of Holy Cross church will take place Wednesday and Thursday, Dec. 9 and 10.

—James Williams, the painter, fell in ascending the steps at Mrs. Lindsay's house on East Front street, Thursday night, and fractured several ribs. He is at Muhlenberg Hospital.

—The Congregational Sunday-school will vary its programme to-morrow by having a special Sunday-school concert, at which the members of the home department are expected to be present.

—If you have any aching molars, don't fail to have Dr. Brewster extract them, when he visits Plainfield next week as advertised in another column. He will give no pain, and the work will be excellent.

—Another mass-meeting will be held by the citizens in Music Hall, Monday night. F. X. Schoonmaker will again discuss the matters of vital consequence to the community of Plainfield. Everybody is invited to hear him.

—Dr. Comegys Paul has left town for an indefinite period. He will spend the winter in Chicago and New Orleans, and afterwards will visit other cities. His former residence at 101 Park avenue has been put in full possession of Mrs. Holmes, who will conduct it as a strictly first-class boarding-house.

—A man does n't know exactly what he wants until he knows what there is to be had. And the average man, or woman either, does n't know how much there is new and beautiful in the line of jewelry until a visit has been made to Collier's 3 Park avenue, where the largest stock of latest designs always invites inspection.

—A series of sketches from 30 years experience, have been arranged in the form of a very interesting lecture termed "Life in the Woods", by the Rev. J. Clement French, D. D., pastor of the Park Avenue Presbyterian church of Newark. This lecture, as already stated in THE PRESS, will be delivered in the Crescent Avenue chapel, Thursday evening of next week, for the benefit of mission work in the Adirondacks.

—Those who may be suffering from lung or throat troubles or any other ailment which calls for the use of whiskey are advised to try the A. R. Tudor brand. It is warranted absolutely pure and ten years old. Its rich natural flavor is wholly due to the scientific method employed in its distillation and storage in barrels for ten years before being bottled. Statistics show that fully seventy-five per cent. of the whiskey sold throughout the country is adulterated. Invalids whose health requires the use of whiskey certainly want the very best, therefore purchase the A. R. Tudor. All druggists sell it.

CITIZENS' MASS-MEETING.

ROUSING SPEECHES ON LIVE ISSUES OF THE DAY.

Councilman Hetfield Reviews the "Big Six" Legislation in the People's Interests, and F. X. Schoonmaker Urges His Fellow Republicans to Forsake Partisanship and Join in the Popular Overthrow of the Old Ring Rule.

Six hundred voters attended the citizens' mass-meeting in Music Hall last night—enough to fill the entire lower floor of the hall. On the stage were seated Walter L. Hetfield, Arthur T. Gallup, Elmore D. Moffett, Leonard Spangenberg, W. K. McClure, F. X. Schoonmaker, Louis F. Wadsworth, S. P. T. Wilbur, Louis M. Stover, John M. Dayton, Seymour G. Smith, Daniel S. Roberts, and Frank M. Bacon.

Charles Lyman, as a citizen of Plainfield, called the meeting to order, and the following officers were elected:

Chairman—John M. Dayton.

Vice-presidents—Lewis V. F. Randolph, William, Sandford, George M. Phillips, Peter Flynn, sr., Ephraim Miller, Tell A. Begnelin, Henry Miller, DeWitt C. Ivins, George Opdyke, Charles Burnett, Justus Hesse, John Harding, sr., Walter E. Stewart, Jeremiah L. Manning, David W. Pond, Eugene Gross, Edward W. Conklin, Aaron Keyser, Seymour Marsh, Charles W. Opdyke, Michael Nugent, Patrick Casey, Charles W. Hunter, Wm. G. Brett, Thomas H. Keller.

Secretaries—Louis H. Brown, William Westphal, Fred. A. Miller, Fred. W. Smith, R. A. Hill, Louis M. Stover, George H. Carpenter, Alburtus Swalm, Alfred Cox, A. W. Brown.

In taking the chair, Mr. Dayton remarked as follows:

"Fellow Citizens — The approaching election is of more vital importance than many have as yet considered. Plainfield has enjoyed in the past an untarnished name. People over the entire State envy our position. Our beautiful city is the home of many merchants. Your schools are envied. I for one do not wish to discourage improvements. The masses should have the kindest consideration. I for one proclaim that water is a curse to the city in its present state. We had fine water (at least I had in my tenement). The question is, What is to be done with an article that is forced on us? Is this solvent city to be bonded by the influence of an old ring that must have some scheme to repay their outlays? I refer to sewers. Is the water company going to make the people put in sewers when we have offered to us sewers without bonds, and a prospect of the same being done honest. I think this the keynote which every tax-payer should consider: Will you have your city bonded?"

Mr. Dayton's speech was applauded.

Walter L. Hetfield was introduced to the audience, and was enthusiastically received. He made an earnest, careful statement of facts, the substance of which was as follows:

"You are called here to-night to pass on the actions of the common council of the past two years, and I am prepared to give you a review, which can be substantiated, of everything that has been done, and to explain the principles by which we have been actuated.

"When we went into office in 1890 we were confronted with the fact that the people of Plainfield, a city of over twelve thousand inhabitants, were without water-works, sewerage, street cars, and fire-alarm—in fact, had no improvements except gas and electric lights. We looked to Somerville, Bound Brook, Summit, Orange, and to other lesser places all about us, and found that they had many improvements which we had not. To-day we are 25 years behind the age. We might just as well double our population. We determined to give to Plainfield all the improvements possible without bonding the beautiful city. We are, by the way, bonded to-day—with school bonds, though I have never been able to find out for how much.

"When we went into office we found the Moore water franchise already granted. Very little work was done for months, yet the city was paying an engineer $360 a month for two visits he made each month to the place. That was our heritage.

"The so-called Big Six met its first opposition in getting rid of the incubus, which it did in the interests of the city.

"Then Israel Lewis bobbed up. It has been said that this Lewis is a wealthy Jersey City man holding valuable real estate here. Instead he is the Park avenue butcher. Who got him to appear as the prosecutor in the fight? I know, and I charge that he was paid from $50 to $100 for the use of his name. The contest in the courts shut off Moore's water-works, and I want to deny right here the charge that the city made itself liable for hydrants. The Water Supply company bought out Moore's plant, but Moore did not and will not assign his franchise for hydrants. All that he sold to them was his ground and wells, not the franchise. And Moore has the right to-day to go on and complete his works, but as he has only three months left to make the contract secure it is an utter impossibility for him to do so. His contract is therefore entirely out of the way.

"We recognized the fact that the city needed water-works, and that water-works and sewerage ought to come together. We passed an ordinance providing that one should not be built without the other, and advertised for bids. After thorough consideration of all the bids sent in, we were satisfied that the proposition of J. M. Low & Co. was for the best interests of the city, and its rates were the lowest. The Water Supply company wanted $60 per hydrant per year for flushing the sewers. We granted a water-works and sewerage franchise to Mr. Low, and are satisfied that he is a capable and energetic engineer, and that he is backed by an English syndicate of $10,000,000 capital, and is ready to go ahead with his works.

The Republican candidates say they are opposed to bonding the city, but are you going to swap horses while crossing the stream? One council has worked for the best interests of the people: are you going to desert them and try a new and dangerous experiment?

"The mayor says that he favors sewers in the thickly-settled portion of the city, and the Little Five sustain him. That means that the out-lying portion of the city is to be bonded and pay interest and yet get no benefit.

"We have done our duty, and are candidates for re-election. Go to the polls and do your whole duty and stand by the men who have stood by you. We have done all our work thoroughly. We put in a competent street commissioner, Robt. A. Meeker, who has macadamized the streets on the proper grade, and who has avoided all useless expense. Hitherto sand was dumped on the streets at considerable expense, and after every rain it was carted off again at more expense. Now we do n't use sand, but stone. In every way we have improved public affairs.

"We are charged with having knuckled down to the saloon keepers. All that we did was to restore to them one hour a day that had been arbitrarily taken away from them by a previous council, whose action was not endorsed by the people, and was utterly uncalled for. The licensees were being ground down so that they could do no business and were about to look for relief to a county excise board We preferred to give satisfactory legislation than have the power of controlling the saloons taken away from the city. We have kept the number of krinking places down to 15—or 1 to every 900 inhabitants. In most places it is 1 to every 100 or 200.

"In reference to the State board of health. Mr. Smith is right in what he has said. The plans and specifications of the sewer-works were submitted to Secretary Hunt, but just as a meeting was to be held the ordinance was certioraried, and a meeting was useless.

"What is the use of having a common council at all, if everything is going to be certioraried into the supreme court? Are you going to let the people who own their horses and carriages say you cannot have street cars to ride in. Certain people say they don't want a fire-alarm, but now they've got it they wouldn't be without it.

"We ask you to consider, read, talk, think, over all these things, before you vote. We have not increased your taxes, but decreased them. The only tax rates we have fixed are the following in 1890 and 1891. The tax rate of 1889 is submitted for comparison:

	1889	1890	1891
General fund...	.46	.44	.42
Fire deparment	.18	.18	.17
Poor.....	.08½	.08	.07
	.72½	.70	.66

The county tax, State tax, school tax, and public library tax, are all fixed by other bodies.

"In all things we have worked for the best interests of the place. We have given you good, honest, fair government as good as you have ever had. Let well-enough alone, and vindicate by your votes the men who have done so well by you."

Francis X. Schoonmaker was introduced, and made a stirring speech, which was most enthusiastically received. He said:

"I am here to show you that there is no politics in this meeting. I am a Republican. My Republicanism will be indorsed by all the leaders of my party, whom I represent on the platform in political campaigns. But to-night I urge you to vote against what is called the Republican ticket, and to indorse the citizens' movement.

"When parties get overwhelmingly strong in a city the tendency is to let bad men get control for evil purposes. So with the Democrats in New York, so with the Republicans in Philadelphia. We are approaching the same condition here.

"I want to see nothing but good government in this city. I am for F. X. Schoonmaker every time, and for the butter on his bread; and as I like the butter thick I do n't want men in power to perpetuate a condition of things whose tendency is to take away the butter.

"The inevitable tendency of the present Republican ticket is to bad government. The approaching election is to decide whether the city shall be bonded. Men never proclaim their evil intent, and so the Republicans say they do n't intend to bond; but the inevitable tendency of their ticket is to bond.

"The election is also to decide whether the city shall be deprived of its right to say whether we shall have competition to cut down prices, in gas, water, etc. The old Moore water contract is dead. The city is free to act. The Water Supply company is operating under an old charter, 'on its own hook'. It is operated by the same old affiliation who have got all there is in politics in the town.

"The Big Six (who have made honorable that name) are standing out against bonding and in favor of competition in public improvements. Low's plan is to give fire-hydrant service at $25 a hydrant. The Supply company originally asked $60. Now they say they will charge but $19, including the flushing of the sewers. But they do not say how we are to get the sewers to flush. If the Little Five are given a victory the matter of sewerage will be dictated by the Water Supply company. Don't give up your right to bring down prices. The Water Supply company wants to control the sewers so as to get a nice large new customer for the water it has to sell, and will bond the city to help along its monopoly, and to swell the dividends on its stock.

"Plainfield has the finest natural advantages of any place around New York, in regard to healthfulness, beauty, etc. You can get people to come out and share your happiness. But you can't get them to share your debts, your mortgages. It would cost $800,000 to sewer the town. That would be an enormous debt, meaning $48,000 a year to pay in interest money each year, and real estate will be depreciated in value.

"The same clique that controls the Water Supply company and seeks control of the sewers, wants to control the electric railway. It says that we may have a railway if we don't establish an opposition electric plant to the one which it already controls. We can't have a railway except on its terms—the terms of monopoly. We are to trudge to our work through the rain and the slush because the clique has the power to say we shall not have a railway. Are we to continue in this slavery?

"What is the price we pay for gas?—$2.50 per thousand feet. There are companies who will give us illuminating gas at $1.25, and gas for cooking at .75. But the chance to cut down the price of gas is taken away by the clique who have assumed the power to prevent competition. They will give us no water except on their terms. It is time to break down this monopoly that for years has governed the town and corraled all the good things there are to get. Stand by the Big Six in their efforts to break this ring. Do not permit the town to be bond-ridden and deprived of its power to bring about the competition we ought to have. Stand up for popular rights and against the clique. Vote against this monopoly. Desert your party for the time being and wipe this old clique out of existence. Save yourselves from the bonding with which you are threatened, from the ring which is robbing you of your liberties."

Mr. Schoonmaker's sentiments were loudly applauded, and he was heartily congratulated on his clear exposition of his public-spirited views.

Mr. Hetfield invited all present to attend a special meeting of the common council to be held Saturday night, where it would be shown how the citizens had been robbed.

Chairman Dayton thanked the audience for its attention, and declared the meeting adjourned.

During the evening Guttman's band gave lively music.

—Belle Bucklin's banjo playing and the part singing of an excellent male quartette are popular items in the performances of "A Fair Rebel". She will appear at Music Hall, to-night.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

Miss Susie Runyon is visiting friends in this city.

Miss Bertha Schuckher, of Westfield, has been visiting Plainfield friends.

Miss Annie Murphy of Washington avenue spent Thanksgiving at West Point.

A. M Vanderbeek, with his family, has gone to visit his old home in Hunterdon county.

Miss Georgiana Cavalear and William E. Pangborn, both of this city, were married by the Rev. Cornelius Schenck, last Wednesday.

Willie A. Thiers, who is home from the military institute at Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, was given a delightful suprise party last night.

"The Wraith of a Sin", a creepy, shivery story by George Percy Taggart, went out in the last budget of the United Press literary department.

Gen. Armstrong, president of the Hampton Institute, who has many friends in Plainfield, where he has at different times addressed audiences in the different churches, was stricken with paralysis yesterday while addressing an audience at Stoneham, Mass. It is feared he cannot recover.

John Frederick Wiechers of Grant avenue, a prominent member of the Manhattan club in New York, and of the Union County Country club in Plainfield, has the sympathy of a host of friends in the misfortune that his partner Mr. Field has brought on his firm. Happily, his private family fortune is unimpaired.

Miss Mary Sumner Patten, whose serious illness was noticed in these columns the other day, died yesterday at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George D. Patten, 27 LaGrande avenue. She was in the 19th year of her age, and a graduate of the Plainfield High school class of '91. Her illness has been long and her death was a blessed relief. Funeral services will be held at the house, Sunday afternoon at four o'clock. Interment the next day at Laurel Hill cemetery, Philadelphia.

Music at the M. E. Chapel.

A musical entertainment will be given under the auspices of the Epworth League at the Monroe Avenue chapel, Monday evening, at 8 o'clock. The following excellent programme has been prepared:

Sunlight Dance and Harvest Home.

Very charming affairs at Seminary hall, yesterday afternoon and evening, netted a welcome sum towards the increase of the building fund of Grace church. In the afternoon there was a Sunlight dance in which about 100 little men and women took part.

In the evening the Hall was turned into a veritable garden with its decorations of grain, flowers, boughs, etc. Austin played, and the roses and thorns of society joined in a Harvest Home dance. Supper was served during the evening. Among those present were the Rev. and Mrs. E. M. Rodman, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Lowe, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Dumont, Mr. and Mrs C. E. Brooks, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lawson, Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Perkins, Mr. and Mrs. P. F. Phillips, Mr. and Mrs A. D. Shepard, Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Timpson, Mr. and Mrs. R. Cox, Mr. and Mrs. Clifton Wharton, jr., Mr. and Mrs. A. Kielnecke, the Misses Van Boskerck, Streuli, Corlies, Fahyrman, Yates, Waring, Walz McKinney, Tracy, Hyde and Shepard, and Messrs. Borden, Moore, Van Boskerck, Murphy, Waring, Munn, Van Buren and Carter.

Delicate and Rare Instruments.

The harpist, H. C. Mecklem, and the saxophonist, Miss Bessie Mecklem, form a combination of peculiar interest and are attracting the attention of concert goers. They play well, and the two instruments in conjunction are a genuine novelty. Miss Mecklem is a pupil of Lefebre, and her father is an accomplished harpist and their selections are of a popular order, and their success as a new feature in an old field is assured.

Mr. and Miss Mecklem will render harp and saxophone solos and duets on Sunday at the men's meeting in the First Baptist church at 4:15 p. m., and at the boys' meeting in the M. E. church, at 4 p. m.

—A novel scheme of advertising devised by Doane & VanArsdale the shoe merchants, of 22 West Front street, commences to-day. They will number every cash sale of leather shoes from 1 to 25. No. 25 gets his or her shoes for nothing, no matter if it is a 50 cent infant's shoe or a man's $7 shoe. See their advertisement in Monday's issue.

Dr. Lewis's Book to Generate a Sensation.

[From The New York Journalist.]

The Rev. Dr. A. H. Lewis, editor of various Seventh-day Baptist publications, and whose home is in Plainfield, has completed, and will soon publish, a book on which he has been at work several years, and which is destined to generate something of a sensation among the students of religious literature. The general title is to be "The Pagan Residuum in Christianity", and there are many interesting subdivisions. Dr. Lewis has made considerable personal research into the subject of phallic worship, and will give some highly interesting details concerning that singular branch of idolatry. The main purpose of his forthcoming book, however, is to show not only that Sunday observance (as opposed to Seventh-day) is the product of paganism, but that popular methods of interpreting the Bible, the changes in the form of baptism, the doctrine of "Baptismal Regeneration", the union of Christianity and the State, together with many minor points, are all the product of pagan influence. It is believed that the book will exert a strong influence in showing that the Protestant Reformation, that is, the work of eliminating Paganism from Christianity, is only fairly begun. It will also strive to show that the pagan elements were introduced into Christianity before the time of the Papacy, and that the Roman Catholic church was the product of paganized Christianity, rather than the source of it.

Mr. Wyckoff of the Jersey Central Arrested.

Peter H. Wyckoff, the general freight agent of the Central railroad of New Jersey, was arrested in his office in the Central building Wednesday by Deputy United States Marshals VanBuskirk and Grant on an indictment drawn up against him on Oct. 31 by the United States Grand Jury of the Eastern Judicial district of Missouri. The grounds for the indictment, as stated by the Federal authorities are these:

On July, 2, 1890, the Wabash, the New York, Chicago and St. Louis, the Central of New Jersey, the Philadelphia and Reading, and the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western railroads entered into an agreement for the continuous carriage and shipment of property over a continuous line operated by them jointly from East St. Louis to Philadelphia. They arranged joint tariff rates and charges and filed copies with the Inter-State Commerce Commission, as required by law. The rate fixed by the roads on locomotive brakes from East St. Louis to Philadelphia was 38½ cents per 100 pounds. It appears that the American Brake company was permitted to ship at 31½ cents per 100 pounds, a direct violation of the Inter-State Commerce law.

Mr. Wyckoff gave $500 bail for his appearance before United States Commissioner Shields and was released. Mr. Wyckoff said that he knew nothing of the particular shipment on which the indictment had been framed. His road, he said, could not be held responsible for the rate allowed, as it had not made it. The initial road would be the one on whom the responsibility should be placed. This is said to be the Wabash.

Silver Wedding in the Borough.

Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Crosley, of 62 Duer street, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage last evening, and entertained a house full of guests. Mrs. Edward Cook, of Rahway, who was Mrs. Crosley's bridesmaid 25 years ago, stood at their side and assisted in receiving. Many handsome silver gifts were received, and displayed. Abundant refreshments were served. Mr. Crosley is borough magistrate and justice of the peace, and makes an excellent official. The happy couple were also assisted in receiving by their lovely daughter, Miss Jennie.

The Finest Things on Wheels.

The elegant assortment of carriages, robes, etc., exhibited at L. M. French's elegant repository, 16-22 Somerset street, is admired by all who pass by. And when the people come to go inside and inspect the stock more critically they cannot resist leaving an order. The quality of workmanship on Mr. French's goods is unsurpassed, and the things he manufactures always stand the test of thorough satisfaction.

A Candid Pastor.

The Rev. Mr. Mitchell says in his paper, The Visitor, to-day, "The pastor and Rev C. Schenck will exchange pulpits to-morrow (Nov. 29) morning. If you want to hear a good sermon be in your place Sabbath morning. If you are out of your place and in a seat in Trinity church Sabbath morning you will hear an old sermon."

In the days of the past, people had to suffer much pain; now they have Salvation Oil, and they get cured in less than no time. Price 25 cents.

THE PRESS Only Indorses What's Right.

An esteemed citizen writes: "Please tell us just how THE PRESS feels about the action of the 'Big 6' in extending the saloon hours from eleven o'clock to twelve."

THE PRESS feels just as it felt eight months ago, when it published the following in its issue of March 13:

Mayor Gilbert's veto of the ordinance permitting the barrooms to keep open until midnight, was perfectly just and proper. If the saloon keepers continue in their demands for more privileges than are now tolerated by the people, there will be a no-license council elected the next time the citizens get an opportunity of voting.

A Disclaimer from Mr. Pond.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—If correctly informed, my name was read at the citizens' meeting held last evening as a signer of the call for the meeting or as a supporter of the movement. This must have been done by mistake, for although in favor of surface railways to allow residents of the suburbs to quickly reach the centre of the city, I always vote for the regular Republican nominee, believing that differences of opinion should be settled in the primaries.

Plainfield, Nov. 28, 1891.

Its Own Scenery and the New York Company.

At Music Hall, this evening, will be given "A Fair Rebel," by the original New York company and their own special scenery. The play has hit the popular fancy, and the fine scenery will be displayed with splendid effect on the stage of Music Hall. The picture of "Monteith Manor" is alone worth making a long journey to see. The company presenting the play is a strong one, Edward R. Mawson and Fanny Gillette winning universal praise, while Miss Bucklin's banjo solos are a pleasant and diverting feature.

—Philadelphia scrapple at J. W. VanSickle's market, 10 North avenue.

—The weather probabilities are: Rain to-night and clear up colder to-morrow.

—A. J. Winckler, L. E. Barkalew and Jacob Long are the North Plainfield Commissioners selected in the Peace street extension project.

—A big wagon load of straw fell over on Park avenue near the railroad bridge, this afternoon, and afforded amusement for a crowd of bystanders.

—The people are invited to be present at the Council room this evening, when Councilman Hetfield says he will show them how they have been robbed for months past.

All are cordially invited.

At the First Baptist church, corner of Grove and Front streets, to-morrow, these services will be held: 9:30 a. m., special season of prayer, for God's blessing upon the services of the day. 10:30 a. m. and 7:30 p. m., preaching by the Rev. Dr. D. J. Yerkes. 2:30 p. m., the Sunday-school and young men's Bible classes meet. A special invitation is extended to the young, and all strangers are cordially welcome.

Happenings in Dunellen.

On Wednesday night some thieves broke into Stites's blacksmith shop and carried away a number of tools. They also broke up Mr. Stites's pump and destroyed other articles which they could not carry away. This seems like malicious mischief, but the fact of their having taken such tools as would aid them in breaking open doors or windows, looks as though some burglaries in the near future, might be expected.

George Giles has been spending a few days with relatives at Stockton, N. J.

While reparing a gun last Wednesday, Pax VanArsdale ran a small iron rod through his thumb, making a very severe wound.

Thanksgiving services were held in the Seventh Day Baptist church at New Market, Thursday, it being a union service of the four churches. The Rev. A. I. Martine addressed the large congregation very ably, touching on nearly every point of interest during the past year. The choir, which was selected from the four churches and led by Mr. Burdick of New York, rendered very excellent music, and received many flattering comments from the audience.

TO THE VOTERS OF PLAINFIELD!

The attention of the voters of Plainfield is respectfully directed to the present condition of municipal affairs and to the importance of the approaching election.

Until recently every common council that has governed the city of Plainfield has enjoyed the confidence of our citizens. The present council does not. On the contrary, its acts have excited the apprehensions of many of our citizens, who have instituted legal proceedings to prevent the execution of ordinances which seem to them to seriously endanger the interests of the city. And we think that any impartial observer will see that there are good reasons for these proceedings and for the existence of the apprehensions which have led to their institution.

It is proposed by a majority of the council to make a contract which contemplates the introduction of a second system of water-works. Such a course seems to us to admit of no possible justification. It has been suggested that it will create competition. Exactly the reverse is the fact. The Plainfield Water Supply company has obtained a charter which cannot be set aside by the courts. If the second contract is made, the question then presented will be whether the party who owns it will put in a second plant or sell his contract to the company already in possession. It is obvious that no capitalist would furnish funds to put in a duplicate plant, and the result will be that the contract will be sold to the Water Supply company. And, as the proposed second contract provides for the payment of twenty-five dollars a hydrant for flushing the sewers, and the Water Supply company has already agreed to perform the same duty for six dollars less, the execution of a second contract will inevitably destroy all competition and fasten upon the city a permanent and wholly unnecessary tax of six dollars a hydrant.

Is there any conceivable reason why the city should pay $25 a hydrant when the desired service can be secured for $19 a hydrant?

The injury to our streets if another water company is to take possession of them is a contingency of a serious character. The complications which would result if two plans were laid down in our city would be of the most serious character.

The introduction of sewers in the manner proposed by the ordinance which has been recently passed, seems to us to be a startling proposition. Every impartial person must recognize the fact that there are many systems which are highly objectionable. Some of the methods have been condemned in unqualified terms by competent authorities; an unwise selection would result in the permanent injury to the public health, and an irreparable depreciation of values. And yet the citizens of Plainfield are kept in entire ignorance of the plans which are favored by the common council. We are told that we are to have a system of sewers, but what system, we are not informed, and our efforts to ascertain come to nothing.

Is it not contrary to all reason to ask intelligent people to approve of legislation so blind, unreasonable and dangerous? Certainly we have a right to know what is to be done with our streets and property, particularly in a matter which involves directly the health of our families and the community.

Feeling that we can, with propriety, ask the co-operation of all who desire to promote the interests of our city, in securing an intelligent and business-like administration of public affairs, we respectfully solicit your serious consideration of the questions which are at issue in the approaching election. The Republican candidates are men of character who represent an element which is antagonistic to the methods of the present Common Council, and as no political question is involved in the election, let party affiliations be lost sight of and all unite in giving Plainfield such a council as ought to be chosen.

TAKING CARE OF BABY.

Great Invention of a Young Philadelphia Father.

He Designs a Couch Which Is Cradle, Swing and Carriage Combined and Does Away with Nocturnal Promenading.

In West Philadelphia lives a young lady who has passed the greater part of her life in a basket. She is Miss Madelina Ellinger and is a daughter of Dr. Z. J. Ellinger. To be sure, Miss Ellinger has only resided on this mundane sphere less than twelve months, having been born last spring. The fact of her having lived in a basket, says the Philadelphia Record, is probably not so remarkable as the basket itself, which is a combined cradle, swing and carriage, the invention of the genial doctor's fertile brain.

But now that the weather is too cold to remain out of doors the swing has been adjusted in the doctor's office. What proves Dr. Ellinger to be a man who realizes the blessing of labor-saving machinery is a device which he has rigged out in his bedroom. Like all other babies Miss Madelina is not averse to indulging in a nocturnal concert. On more than one occasion has her paternal relative walked the floor in the dead watches of the night, amid an atmosphere of mingled prayers, anathemas and lullabies. But now he is relieved of this, thanks to the basket.

Should he be aroused from a dream, perchance of some fat fee, by that shrill voice which he knows so well, instead of walking the floor for an hour or two all he is obliged to do is to lazily reach for a cord by his bedside, give it a smart tug, and the machinery is set in motion. Baby goes to sleep immediately and the doctor returns to his dream.

The invention is really an ingenious one and Dr. Ellinger has been strongly advised to have it patented.

Miss Madelina is the doctor's first baby, and is, of course, the finest baby in the land. No commonplace cradle would do for her; so the doctor set his wits to work, with the result that Miss Madelina now occupies the most novel cradle in existence. The body is an ordinary wicker basket, oblong in shape, upon which can be attached rockers, converting it into an ordinary cradle, or, with the aid of wheels, into a carriage. But it has rendered its greatest service as a swing, suspended by a spring from the ceiling of Dr. Ellinger's porch, where little Miss Ellinger has passed the greater part of the summer.

The spring, which is an ordinary spiral arrangement, with quite a strong tension, is attached by a cord to the handles of the basket and suspended from a hook in the ceiling. Baby is then placed in the basket, which has previously been made comfortable by the aid of pillows. The basket is pulled down and allowed to fly back, thereby setting the spring in motion, and away we go. It requires but one pull and the novel spring vibrates for hours, much to the delight and satisfaction of Miss Baby.

How to Select a Turkey.

In this country only is the turkey found in a wild state. It is very fitting, therefore, that in the Thanksgiving dinner it should be the principal dish, writes Maria Parloa in her department in the Ladies' Home Journal. The turkey must be wisely chosen, well cooked and properly served. It should be short and plump, the meat white, with some fat, the legs black and smooth, and if there be spurs they should be short. The end of the breastbone should be flexible, more like gristle than bone. A turkey that is long in proportion to its size, and has dark or blueish flesh, may be tender, but certainly will not be finely flavored and juicy. A dry-picked turkey will be found to have a much better flavor than a scalded one. All poultry that is dry-picked costs a few cents a pound more than the scalded, but is well worth the extra price.

NERVOUS AND SICK HEADACHE.

How to Perfectly Cure Them.

All forms of headache are of a nervous character, and are caused by a weakness, irritation or disease of nerves of the head; and to cure such cases it is absolutely necessary to use Dr. Greene's Nervura. Many persons who suffer from headache have, by repeated failure to find relief, despaired of cure. To such we would say, by all means secure a bottle of this wonderful remedy, and watch its marvelous effect. It is the most perfect cure known for headache.

"For over twenty years my life was made miserable by frequent and terrible headaches. At times they were so severe I feared I would go insane.

No one could suffer worse than I did. I bought Dr. Greene's Nervura, and the very first bottle stopped the headaches, and I never had any trouble with my head since that time. After suffering twenty years I was cured by Dr. Greene's Nervura.

DR. HALL'S ESCAPE

A Crazy German Fires Three Shots at Him.

NARROWLY MISSED THE DIVINE.

He Took Deliberate Aim, but His Weak Eyesight Prevented a Murder.

John George Roth, Who Imagines Dr. Hall Has Ruined His Business, Attempts to Kill the Preacher as He Was Coming from Church—The Would-be Murderer Arrested—Story of His Hallucination.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—John George Roth, a crazy German of middle age, attempted to kill the Rev. John Hall, D. D., pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, after the morning service yesterday. None of the shots took effect. The would-be assassin was immediately arrested and lodged in jail.

Dr. Hall had just reached the steps of his house when Roth, who was close behind, fired the first shot. The Doctor turned round, and then, seeing his danger, quickened his pace up the steps. He had just reached the landing when the man fired again. The Doctor then hurriedly opened the door and entered the house. He was not a moment too soon, for, as the door closed, a third shot rang out and a bullet entered the casement of the door.

There were but few persons on the avenue during the shooting and the unusual spectacle they were witnesses of seemed to paralyze their powers for a time. When Dr. Hall had, however, safely escaped inside the house, several gentlemen sprang forward and quickly disarmed the would-be murderer. He offered no resistance.

Roth was undoubtedly a man of more than ordinary intelligence before his misfortunes drove him insane. In his insanity he has attributed these misfortunes to the machinations of powerful enemies, among whom he counted the Rev. John Hall.

He has busied himself in writing out his grievances, real and fancied, and in his pockets was found a printed "Appeal to the Public."

After delivering himself of the text: "Oh, Human Justice, tear the bandage from your eyes and cover your face for shame," Roth begins:

"Agents in the service of wealthy and influential people who do all in their power to prevent me from rising again in business are continually watching all my steps and make it impossible for me to obtain justice.

"Furthermore, day and night I am bodily and mentally tormented; my persecutors used to mix my victuals with some obnoxious stuff, causing me the severest distress; to keep a watch on me, and to molest me with mean, immoral talk. It is conspiracy which was inaugurated against me in 1879, and has no equal in human history.

"The most sacred rights of an American citizen who never harmed anybody are trodden down. My business has been ruined, and efforts are being made to ruin my health and drive me mad by tampering with my meals and drink."

The writer then says that through the machinations of these unseen and unknown enemies he was forced to flee the country and return to Germany. Here also the hallucination bothered him and he determined to return to New York and publish a book exposing the acts of the conspirators. He worked his way back on the steamship Denmark in 1885.

According to his printed circular he then spent some years in writing his book and substantiating his allegations as to the acts of the conspirators. He professes to have had many interviews with Judge Hilton and Mrs. A. T. Stewart, both of whom, he declares, took an interest in his case. He also says that his appeals to the members of Grace Church and the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church were not futile.

Many of the members were in favor of appropriating various sums of money for his immediate necessities and to produce his book. Others, however, the appeal says, objected to such appropriation being made. He mentions Bishop Potter, Dr. Hall, Judge Hilton, Mrs. Stewart, Mrs. Bowdoin, Trustee S. B. Sherman, Sexton Gilman and many others.

According to the appeal it was suggested in the first place that he should receive $1,500 for the publication of his book, but certain churchmen objected to this. Then he declares other meetings were held, at which it was voted to give him $5,000, $25,000, $50,000, and finally $500,000, but there were always objectors, of whom the chief was the Rev. Dr. John Hall.

THE TUNNEL ACCIDENT.

Six Now Dead and Several More Seriously Hurt—Investigation Begun.

TOLEDO, O., Nov. 30—The wreck at the Union depot Saturday night, caused by the collision of a Lake Shore express and a Flint & Marquette passenger train, was more serious than at first reported. The following is believed to be a correct list of the killed and hurt:

DEAD.

MRS. SUSAN MCCOY, Ransom, Ill.
INFANT daughter of Mrs. McCoy.
SON of Mrs. McCoy, aged 8 years.
JAMES MCQUEEN, Elkhart, Ind.
ELLEN MEYER, Cleveland, O.
HOWELL VAUGN, San Fernandine, Cal.

INJURED.

Warren L. Potter, residence not given; badly scalded.
H. Vaughn, Auburn, N. Y., on way to Cambridge, Mass., badly scalded.
Tom McQueen, Elkhart, Ind., seriously burned and arm broken.
John Conway, scalded.
Miss Ellen Meyer, Cleveland, scalded and mangled, will probably die.
Mrs. Nelson, Toledo, scalded, not seriously.
Miss Dolly Fisher, Toledo, scalded badly.
A. L. Walker, Goshen, Ind., scalded.
C. J. Anderson, Riverside, Ill., scalded.
D. Taylor, Hyde Park, Boston, scalded and mangled.
Joseph Ladwig, Peoria, Ill., hurt in abdomen.
Mrs. E. J. Galloway, Toledo, scalded.
Lewis, the Flint & Pere Marquette engineer, will say but little concerning the wreck. The Lake Shore engineer, Boyle, an old-timer, says he picked up the red light beyond the tunnel easily, and that Lewis, of the Flint & Pere Marquette, ought to have done the same. The coroner begins his investigation to-day, and there will be no effort spared to find who is to blame.

CANNOT VOTE FOR SPEAKER.

New York Congressmen Whose Names Will Not be Upon the Roll.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—At least three of the Democratic members from New York will not have their names upon the roll of the House when that body is called to order by the clerk a week from to-day. These three members are Representatives Bourke Cochran, Joseph J. Little and Alfred C. Chapin, who were voted for on the 4th inst. to fill vacancies.

There is no question of their election, but they can not be put on the rolls until their certificates arrive, and these will not be forthcoming until the State Board of Canvassers meet some time during December and canvasses the vote. It is possible that, by the grace of their party, the trio will be allowed to enter the caucus, but they certainly cannot vote for Speaker in the House.

At the assembling of the last House Amos J. Cummings was in a similar predicament, and his name was put on the rolls on the production of the County certificate. Clerk McPherson does not think that this action was legal, and will not follow it. A New York Republican, N. Martin Curtis, of the Twenty-second District, will also be deprived of his seat until the certificate is received from the State Board.

Three Killed by Train Wreckers.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Nov. 30.—The south-bound passenger train on the South Carolina Railway with 300 passengers aboard, which was wrecked 20 miles north of this city at 10 o'clock Saturday night, was deliberately derailed. One man, the fireman, named Parks, was buried under the tender and crushed to death. Baggagemaster Anderson, Express-messenger Pierson and three passengers were seriously injured. The wreck was skillfully planned by train wreckers. One of the fish-bars joining the rails was loosened, the bolts having been drawn, and the spikes that held the rail were also drawn. All evidence points to the fact that this was the work of an experienced railroad hand.

PENNSYLVANIA BRIEFS.

The robbers who made such rich strikes at Alden, Nanticoke and Plymouth Friday night are still at large.

Mayor Wyman, of Allegheny, has been arrested on charges of embezzlement and extortion. He has given $2,000 bail and will be given a hearing next Friday.

The discovery of the coat and hat belonging to William Roberts proves beyond doubt that he and his cousins, William and John Graham, were drowned in the lake near Erie Thanksgiving Day.

The four prisoners who for many months had been digging a tunnel beneath the Western Penitentiary at Pittsburg have been put in solitary confinement. They had dug from a packing house in the prison yard to within five feet of liberty.

William Nibsch, aged 73 years, of Ironton, who was shot at his home by William Keck last week, died from the effects of his injuries Saturday. Nibsch's wife was also shot and instantly killed, at the same time. Nibsch made an ante-mortem statement charging Keck with the crime.

MR. NOBLE'S REPORT

The Secretary of the Interior on His Department.

AFFAIRS OF PENSION OFFICE.

There Were 138,216 Claims Added to the Rolls During the Past Year.

Sixteen Thousand Indians Have Already Become United States Citizens, and There Are More to Follow—The Official Population—Nicaragua Canal Declared to be in a Forward State.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—The annual report of John W. Noble, Secretary of the Interior, has been made public. It is a bulky volume of 171 pages, giving abundance of detail.

The Secretary announces that the years of the present administration have been marked to a notable degree by the expansion of the public domain for private settlement.

On the Pension question he says that there were on June 31, 1891, 676,160 pensioners borne upon the rolls, being 188,216 more than were carried on the rolls at the close of the last fiscal year. There were pending on July 1, 1891, 928,474 claims, of which 559,627 were claims of persons who were not on the pension rolls. The remaining 369,446 were claims for increases of pensions and duplicate claims under different laws. There are also in the files of the Pension Office 146,536 rejected claims.

There were 322,531 first payments of every description made during the last fiscal year, requiring $88,553,274.31.

Over 16,000 Indians have already become citizens of the United States, and about 4,000 more by taking their allotments have signified their desire to become citizens. To these numbers should be added the 7,619 Indians in Oklahoma who have taken or agreed to take allotments. A total of 27,616 Indians naturalized, and total of acres acquired for settlement of about 32,000,000 during the present administration alone.

Including the agents the Secretary remarks that the announcement of the official population Nov. 26, 1890, as 62,622,250 has never been changed, and upon that announcement the apportionment law was passed nearly two years sooner than at previous censuses.

The Maritime Canal of Nicaragua is reported to be in a forward state. The railroad from the Atlantic port to the divide has been completed, equipped, and is now in operation for a distance of 11 miles, with good culverts and roadbed and track in first-class condition.

The jetty or breakwater, which is to protect the harbor entrance on the Atlantic coast from the effects of shifting sand, has been extended 1,000 feet or more into the ocean, and a second breakwater against northerly storms has been commenced.

About three thousand feet of actual excavation along the canal has been made and a channel formed from 150 to 230 feet wide and about 17 feet deep. Important work has been done on the Machuca Rapids and in the bed of the San Juan River at that point.

The Murder of Mrs. Leonard.

ATLANTIC HIGHLANDS, N. J., Nov. 30.—Public Prosecutor Ivins, accompanied by Drs. Vanmater and Field, went to Chas. H. Leonard's house yesterday where the physicians made a very thorough autopsy of the remains of Mrs. Leonard, who was so brutally murdered Friday afternoon by Louis Harlot, Mr. Leonard's hired man who is now in jail. They decline to give the result of their examination but it will be made known at the adjourned coroner's inquest next Friday. The funeral services over the remains of the murdered woman will be held this afternoon at the Baptist Church. The excitement among residents over the cowardly murder is unabated.

See Line Transfer Elevator Burned.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Nov. 30.—A special from Gladstone, Mich., says that yesterday morning the Soo line transfer elevator caught fire from sparks and together with its contents, 150,000 bushels of wheat, was totally destroyed. The fire extended to the flour sheds and consumed 10,000 barrels of flour. From there it was communicated to the coal docks upon which were 40,000 tons of coal belonging to the Lehigh Coal & Iron Company and the Pioneer Fuel Company, of Minneapolis. The damage will be at least $250,000, partly covered by insurance.

Twenty-five Killed, Not Two.

TACOMA, Wash., Nov. 30.—Three laborers on the Northern Pacific road have made affidavit that 25 or more men were killed by the landslide at Canton Station, on the line of the Northern Pacific, Wednesday. The statement was published that only two men were killed.

Is the Melba Divorce Suit Off?

PARIS, Nov. 30.—The rumor that the Duke de Orleans' father had succeeded in stopping the Armstrong divorce suit by paying the opera singer's husband $50,000 to "let up" on the Duke is not credited here.

STOPPED THE FUNERAL.

The Coroner to Make an Investigation as to the Death of Miss Bishop.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Nov. 30.—Coroner Van Dyke, of Long Branch, yesterday, on complaint of a number of people of West Asbury Park, stopped the funeral of Miss Mamie Bishop, the 18-year-old daughter of Mrs. John Rowland, who died very suddenly on Thanksgiving night. The neighbors claim that Miss Bishop's death was due to poisoning, while others heard that her death was from a more serious cause and that the coroner has a good case to work on.

Miss Bishop was in apparent good health up to Wednesday evening, when, while out shopping, she was suddenly taken ill and fainted. She was taken home in a carriage and Thursday night she died. Her physician declared that death was due to heart failure. At the funeral service held at the house Saturday afternoon the neighbors noticed that the corpse had become badly discolored and had swollen to twice its original size. These facts, together with her sudden death, aroused their suspicions and caused them to notify the coroner.

Mrs. Rowland claims that the girl's death was due to heart trouble. The coroner will hold an autopsy this afternoon and the inquest the next day.

The young lady was very popular and well connected. The greatest excitement prevails in the vicinity of the girl's late home over her alleged mysterious death.

"LAND BILL" ALLEN.

Death of the Famous Benefactor in an Ohio Poorhouse.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 30.—A dispatch from Columbus, O., says that the great public benefactor, known in history as "Land Bill" Allen, ended his days in the Franklin County Infirmary yesterday morning, after suffering one week from paralysis. Mr. Allen was born in Windom, Conn., May 23, 1810. In early years his father moved to Rhode Island and he was given an education. He also learned the tailor trade.

"Land Bill" Allen also entered the journalistic arena, running the "Rhode Islander." He married Zena Weaver, and sold his paper and went to Columbus in 1829. He edited the "Ohio State Journal" and the Cincinnati "Gazette" for a number of years. Having the Homestead idea, that of giving 160 acres of land to every man who would guarantee to settle on it in the West, he spent $60,000 introducing his plans.

In 1863 the bill passed in Congress, but Allen never took any land. He moved to Sharon township, Ohio, and began farming.

Sickness came on the old benefactor and little by little his property passed out of his possession, being sold for taxes, leaving him at last penniless and helpless in his advanced years. A few weeks ago he was admitted to the Franklin County Infirmary. A monument fund is already proposed.

Kidnappers Narrowly Escape Lynching

KANSAS CITY, MO., Nov. 30—Excitement still exists over the arrest of the two kidnappers of Bank President D. T. Beales' two-year-old son, who was stolen from his home Thanksgiving Eve and returned Friday night by a masked man, who received the $5,000 reward offered by Mr. Beales, and had it not been for the thoughtful and quick action of County Marshal Stewart in slipping the prisoners out of the city there is no doubt that a double lynching would have been recorded with this despatch. Mr. Beale and his wife are too much overjoyed over the return of their child to give any attention to the prosecution of the human fiends who carried the boy off. In fact, Mr. Beale says that the offer he made of $5,000 for the return of the boy and not for the apprehension of the abductors, was made in good faith and he fully believes that he has not violated his promise.

But One State Dinner a Week.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—The present week will be marked by the influx of a large number of strangers into the city, as well as the return of the many familiar faces annually drawn to Washington by the opening of Congress. The official season this year will be a long one, in consequence of which President and Mrs. Harrison will endeavor to effect a departure from the usual order by arranging the State dinners so that there will be but one a week. In this way the entertainments will be more equally distributed, the demands upon their time less arduously exacting, and better opportunity afforded the various members of the Cabinet to satisfactorily arrange dates for the official dinners and card receptions which must be given.

Archbishop Kenrick's Jubilee.

ST LOUIS, Nov. 30.—The celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the ordination to the priesthood of Archbishop Kenrick, began this morning, with the singing of a pontifical high mass by Cardinal Gibbons. Ecclesiastics from all parts of the United States are present. The ceremonies will last four days.

NEW YORK NEWS IN BRIEF.

The lower Saranac Lake is frozen over for the first time this winter.

Dr. Cross, who is engaged to marry Miss Florence Griswold in New York, lies dangerously ill of typhoid fever in London.

Edward M. Field, of the defunct firm of Field, Lindley, Welches & Co., was taken to the Bloomingdale Insane Asylum on Saturday.

Gov. Hill has ordered a special election for member of Assembly in the Third Albany district to fill vacancy caused by the death of William E. Murphy.

The disappearance of Supervisor Thomas J. Welch, with his original and the County Clerk's duplicate copies of the election returns for five out of the seven districts of the Third Ward, is still the sensation in connection with the Munro-Ryan election case. Welch has not been found, but has been seen in Auburn.

CHINESE ATROCITIES

The Massacre of the Belgian Missionaries.

FATE OF NATIVE CHRISTIANS.

Children Roasted Alive and Hacked to Pieces Before Their Parents.

The Mandarins Powerless to Act or in League With the Fiends—Indignation of Foreigners Along the Coast—The Chinese Rebels Make an Important Capture—The Inland Trade Now in Possession of the Insurgents.

SHANGHAI, Nov. 30.—The Northern rebels are steadily pursuing their march in a southerly direction, and the Chinese troops appear unwilling or unable to stop their career. The rebels have captured the important walled city of Leao-Yang in Manchuria, and compelled the inhabitants to furnish them with abundant supplies.

It is not reported that any serious outrages were committed at Leao-Yang, and this goes to confirm the prevalent impression that the Mongolian insurgents are not merely a predatory band, but have a definite design in their undertaking. The possession of Leao-Yang gives the rebels the control of an extensive trade both inland and with the Gulf of Leao-Tong. Troops are being hurried from Pekin to oppose the rebel advance.

Horrible details have been received of the massacre of Belgian missionaries and native Christians at Tayou and Sanchi by the Chinese. The Christians were attacked without warning, and had no chance to escape. The rioters first seized the nuns, all of whom were subjected to indignities and outrage before being relieved by death. A Belgian priest was brained at a blow.

The fiends then seized his body, and tore out the tongue and heart and burned them. The native Christians were treated even more horribly. They were not permitted to die a swift death. The miscreants seized the wretched converts, who had fled in vain to the mission, and subjected them to fearful tortures.

Their children were seized, and some hacked to pieces, and others roasted alive before the agonized parents. Then the parents were taken and treated with a refinement of cruelty that only Chinese understand. After suffering various tortures, such as still lived were slaughtered.

The mandarins seem either to have favored the rioters, or to have been overcome with fear. Instead of attempting to suppress their violence, or protesting against it, they welcomed the murderers redhanded from the slaughter, and spread a feast, and held a fete in their honor.

It would be hard to depict the feelings of Europeans in Shanghai and other places at the relation of these horrors. They are not angry simply; they are furious, and there is a loud and universal demand from all foreigners for a punishment that will bring the Chinese to their senses and impress a never-to-be-forgotten lesson.

Can They be Extradited?

OTTAWA, Nov. 30:—The impression prevails among the officers of the Department of Justice that R. H. McGreevy and O. E. Murphy can be extradited for the offenses with which they are charged, viz., conspiracy and false pretences. In the extradition treaty between Great Britain and the United States, passed July 12, 1889, and proclaimed on March 25, 1890, there is one paragraph which is thought to be applicable to the case of either of the accused, but it is considered unlikely that the United States would grant the extradition, as the plea would be set up that the parties were wanted for political offenses.

A Thief and an Eloper.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 30.—Samuel Largman, who was arrested here Friday night on a telegram from Philadelphia, was taken to that city last night to answer to the charge of larceny in stealing 334 pairs of trousers from a Philadelphia clothing dealer and afterward pawning them. Largman was the manager of a Hebrew dramatic company, which is now stranded here. He eloped from Philadelphia with Etta Doerfinkle, 16 years old. The girl's father came here for her and will take her home to-day.

A New Witness in Dr. Graves' Case.

CHICAGO, Nov. 30.—The opinion of the Denver public was about evenly divided a week ago as regards the guilt or innocence of Dr. Graves, but the belief in his guilt is growing. John H. Conrad last night remarked that much of the important evidence in the case is yet unknown to the public, and that it will cause a great sensation when published. From the tenor of his remarks it is believed that the Pinkertons have secured a new witness, who will testify as to having prepared the fatal dose.

Pugilist Baker Will Recover.

BUFFALO, Nov. 30.—Pugilist Billy Baker, the victim of Saturday night's shooting affray is being cared for at the hospital. His physicians say he is doing nicely, and his chances of recovery are good. There is a possibility of his dying but not a probability. Patrick O'Brien, the man who did the shooting has been arrested and locked up here.

Cannibalism Among Russian Peasants.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 30.—A number of peasants, driven desperate by starvation, murdered a farmer named Abramovich and his family of twelve persons, at Antopol near Vilna. After slaughtering the inmates, they plundered the dwelling, and feasted on the farmer's larder. Horrible crimes of a similar character are becoming common, and attest the desperation of the famine-stricken populace.

THE CASE OF ALMY.

Senator Chandler's Letter Causing Considerable Excitement in Concord.

CONCORD, N. H., Nov. 30.—There is not a little excitement here over Senator Chandler's letter from Washington, in the case of Murderer Almy, now awaiting the death penalty here. The Senator's opinion that Almy has a fairly good chance to cheat the gallows is causing much discussion. In his letter he says:

"Our State has had two memorable murder trials, those of Sawtell and Almy, which have attracted attention throughout the world. On the first, the doors and windows were set wide open and the lives of all the persons in attendance were endangered as much as was Sawtell's. The two judges took severe colds and narrowly escaped pneumonia, although they bought horse blankets for themselves and the jury.

"The exposure to universal sickness ordered by the Court was cruel and disgraceful. In the Almy trial the same was repeated. Everybody's life was perilled by opening the doors and windows. I am informed that the windows were entirely removed. To cap the climax of absurdity, the prisoner was removed to the State prison without the sentence of death being announced to him, and waited in prison a week before he knew it.

"Consider, O ye jurists, the spectacle presented by New Hampshire. A criminal under sentence of death for murder, yet ignorant of the fact. The lawyers of the nation have looked on with amazement, and nothing but the execration in which Almy is universally held prevents an outcry of the same from any part of the Union. New Hampshire, by statute, or the arbitrary fiat of honorable judges, may have altered a fundamental principal of criminal law. I have not examined the books. But unless Almy's sentence is publicly announced to him I do not see how, lawfully, he can be hanged, or even much longer imprisoned. The warden cannot hold him for trial, because he has already been tried. He cannot hold him to hang him, because he has not been sentenced. After awhile he will be entitled to release or habeas corpus and can go free.

"To prevent all questions he should be taken back into the court-room, the doors should be closed against the winds and frost and snow of winter, and he should be sentenced to death as the finding of the judges and law and decency requires, and the people of New Hampshire should consider how to prevent such judicial anomalies hereafter as the State has exhibited twice in her recent history."

ALL LOST AT SEA.

The Brig Tahiti With 300 Gilbert Islanders Believed to Have Foundered.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 30.—A private dispatch received from Manzanillo, Mexico, gives pretty good proof that the brig Tahiti and the 270 Gilbert Islanders on board, who were under contract for the coffee plantations of San Benito, Mexico, have been lost at sea.

The brig touched at Drake's Bay, near San Francisco, in September last, and though the islanders were seen to be virtually slaves, no action was taken to stop the traffic. The American steamer Roseville arrived at Manzanillo on Friday from Islapa, and her captain reported that the Roseville passed the wreck of the Tahiti eleven miles southwest of Lizard Point.

She was floating bottom up, with rudder gone and ballast badly shifted. It was evident that the brig had capsized while on the starboard tack, as all the port rigging had been cut away in an attempt to prevent her going over.

Blaine is a Well Man.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 30.—To consult his medical adviser, Dr. Madison Taylor, was the prime reason for Mr. Blaine's trip to Philadelphia. Mr. Blaine learned that he was in better health and strength now than he was four years ago, and that six months and a year hence he would be stronger than he is now. He learned further that he is as good a man physically at 61, Mr. Blaine's age, as anybody else of like age.

To Inquire Into Riggins' Death.

VALPARAISO, Nov. 30.—The Judge of Crimes has appointed a commission to inquire into the cause of Riggins' death. The commission will also undertake to ascertain whether the bullet-hole in Johnson's neckerchief was caused by a rifle ball or a bullet from a revolver. If it was made by a rifle ball, then Riggins was killed by the police; otherwise by a member of the mob.

VOTE FOR THEM.

The Democratic candidates for councilmen in each ward of the city who ask for the suffrages of the people at to-morrow's election on the "Citizens' Ticket" are in every way worthy and capable, and should receive the support of their party as well as friends of opposite politics. Three of them have faithfully served the people of Plainfield in the past and other years, while the new candidates for councilmanic honors in the Third and Fourth wards are not unknown as respected citizens and who will make good city fathers. We allude to councilmen Hetfield and Spangenberg in the First and Second wards and Messrs. Miller in the Third and Frazee in the Fourth ward. It is the duty of every Democrat to vote for these ward officers as well as for councilman Moffett who is a candidate for re-election as councilman-at-large. The two Republican members on the "Citizens' Ticket" who are nominated for re-election, Messrs. Smith and Roberts, have made good representatives for the city the past year, and will undoubtedly command a large number of votes from their own party and the people generally. They are gentlemen well known in the city as good business men. Having the interests of Plainfield at heart, the intelligent voter cannot make any mistake in voting for all the above mentioned candidates to-morrow. All the other nominees on the "Citizens' Ticket" are Democrats, and the fact should not be lost sight of that the nominee for school trustee, the Rev. J. P. Taylor, is one most fitting for the position, and should be elected.

EARLY INTELLIGENCE.

—Reserved seats for "Mr. Wilkinson's Widows" are selling rapidly.

—A regular meeting of the McAll Auxiliary will be held at the library, to-morrow morning, at 11 o'clock.

—The regular meeting of the Young Ladies' Mission Band of the Presbyterian churches, will be held in the parlors of the Crescent Avenue church, to-morrow, at 4 p. m.

—There will be no paper issued from this office to-morrow. But on your way to the train Wednesday morning you can buy an extra edition of THE PRESS with the complete result of to-morrow's city election.

—Miss Mary Moore of 11 Crescent avenue, was the first fortunate one on Saturday to be presented with a pair of shoes by Doane and VanArsdale. She was the twenty-fifth person who, according to their advertisement, gets a pair of shoes for nothing.

—Citizens, do not allow the Republican managers to intimidate you! All citizens that are registered are entitled to vote. Be sure and vote. Members of the citizens' committee will be at the various polls to see that you are not interfered with, and to see that your rights are protected.

Happy and content is a home with "The Rochester;" a lamp with the light of the morning. Call on Rochester Lamp Co., 42 Park Place, N. Y.

EX-MAYOR RANDOLPH SAYS THIS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—In answer to your inquiry, I beg to state that I did not know of my name being used as one of the vice presidents of the Citizens' meeting last Friday evening, until after the meeting was over. I was not consulted in that matter. I was invited to address the meeting, but declined the invitation.

CANNOT FORGIVE THE POPE-COWARD DEAL.

So far as the gentlemen in the Citizens' movement are sincerely opposed to the old Ring, they have my cordial sympathy; but I have frankly called the attention of their leaders to the fact that one of their first official acts was to make a deal with the Ring. For that act they seem penitent, and it is not for me to prophesy whether or not they would repeat it. Indeed, even there the responsibility was divided, for Republican and "Big Six" councilmen were both responsible for suppressing or burying in committee the charges openly made against Mr. Coward in Mr. Serrell's letter to the Common Council.

NEITHER KEAN NOR LOW, WATER-WORKS.

I am in sympathy with the professed faith of the "Citizens", that a monopoly of our water supply and other public works should not be given to the Ring. I am in favor of the city of Plainfield's owning her own public works. Every word of the mayor's objection to private control of the sewerage system applies with equal force to the water system. I prefer, as one taxpayer, (and having considerable interest in the matter, and no jobs to foster), that the taxpayers (that is, THE CITY) should own the public works rather than Mr. Kean, or Mr. Pope, or Mr. Low. If after reflection, and opportunity given, the city refuses to take this position, then the next best thing is to throw open the providing of these improvements to the free bids of responsible contractors.

LET THE CITY KNOW ITS RIGHTS.

I do not consider that the Water Supply company, now claiming rights superior to our charter, has any rights whatever, or that it has even any valid or legal existence; and, at this point, I claim that our municipal officers and councilmen are all derelict in not bringing the matter to a legal decision. This point has never yet been distinctly presented to a court for adjudication. The expense of doing so would be trifling, and easily borne by twelve thousand people. If the city cannot afford this small expense, I will be one of twelve persons to bear it. Let us be free. Let us know our rights, and maintain them fearlessly.

PLAINFIELD IS ALREADY BONDED.

For one, I am not to be scared by the bug-a-boo of "bonds" on either side. We are a bonded city now—though most of us do not seem to know it. Without any permission from the citizens, the school board has run us into debt, and every tax bill paid includes a charge for school board bonds.

THE BIG 6 GOING OUT OF POWER.

My hope is that the Republican Council, which to me seems likely to have control of the city for the next two years, will guard it from monopolies and from jobs and deals of all sorts. If it should not do so, then a larger and more important "Citizens' movement" will doubtless rebuke its infidelity.

L. V. F. RANDOLPH.

November 28, 1891.

Dr. Titsworth Injured.

Saturday evening, while driving from Plainfield, Dr. Titsworth ran into C. A. Coriell's lumber wagon, throwing himself and daughter out of the carriage.

The horse ran away, breaking the vehicle and harness and leaving them a few yards from where the accident occurred.

Mr. Titsworth dislocated his right arm, and injured three of his fingers very badly. His daughter was not injured.

Dr. Brakely took Dr. Titsworth to his home, and attended to his injuries.

The Borough Water Service Completed.

The laying of the water mains throughout the borough, was completed Saturday. The pipes are now full and the hydrants ready for use. President Bergen promised the service by the first of December, so the contractors, Doud & Rice, are to be given unusual credit for finishing before the time set. It took over 200 men and they were kept moving, yet there was not a row among them, and there is not a leaky joint along the miles of couplings.

—A cordial invitation is extended to anyone in the city, interested in Bible study, to join the normal class, which meets every Monday evening in the First Baptist church. The subject to-night will be "A Review of the Book of Genesis". A Bible reading will also be given.

The power of imagination is certainly very strong, but it takes something with more of a body and base to cure a cold or cough. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is now the great national remedy.

Voters of the Second Ward, Read This.

AN ORDINANCE.

Concerning the use and repair of streets.

The inhabitants of the City of Plainfield, by their Common Council do enact as follows:

Section 1. That in case the surface of any of the streets or sidewalks of said city shall have been disturbed or shall be disturbed by any person or persons or corporation, it shall be the duty of such person or persons or corporation respectively within ten days after such disturbance, or in case the same shall have already been made before the date on which this ordinance shall go into effect, then within ten days from the date last referred to, to cause said streets or sidewalks to be put as nearly as practicable in as good condition as the same were in before being disturbed as aforesaid, so that the same shall be hard, smooth and even on the surface and of the same grade and level as before said disturbance was begun.

And it shall further be the duty of any such person or persons or corporation in case any such disturbance as aforesaid or any work done in connection therewith by such person or persons or corporation has caused or shall at any time or times cause any depression or elevation in any street or sidewalk so disturbed to remedy said defect within ten days after being notified by the street commissioner in writing so to do.

Any person or persons who or any corporation which shall violate any of the provisions of this ordinance shall on conviction thereof be punished by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars for each and every offence.

Adopted by the common council September 14, 1891.

Approved by the mayor September 15, 1891.

A. GILBERT, Mayor.

Attest: J. B. COWARD, City Clerk.

Who voted against this ordinance?

John Johnston, Stephen A. Ginna, Ernest R. Ackerman, W. G. E. See, Townsend Rushmore.

You will see, this ordinance is solely in the city's interest!

Why did these five gentlemen vote against this ordinance on August 3? Simply because it would compel the Plainfield Water Supply company to restore the streets in good condition.

What has John Johnston done for the second ward?

Absolutely nothing!

AN ANTI-RING REPUBLICAN.

PARTICULAR MENTION.

The Rev. B. Fay Mills begins his evangelistic work at Elizabeth to-day.

Harry C. Runyon of this city will give a number of banjo selections at the West End minstrel show, Somerville, December 8.

Peter Vandeventer, of East Fourth street, for a long time in the employ of T. B. Shoaff & Co., carpet manufacturers at Twenty-second street and Fifth avenue, New York, has gone to Chicago, to take charge of the firm's western branch, at 190-192 Fifth avenue.

Sarah Graham, wife of John G. Musgrave, died at her home, 97 Mercer avenue, yesterday, after years of illness during which a daughter's devotion and self-sacrifice had comforted her heart and brightened her life even in her hours of suffering. Funeral services will be held at the house on Wednesday afternoon at three o'clock.

Cards of invitation have been issued by the Hillside Tennis club for an evening reception to be held at the club-house, 181 Broadway, Monday evening, December 7. Mrs. Irving H. Brown of Ninth street will receive the guests. The club rooms being rather small, it has been found necessary to limit the invitations to club members and their ladies, and one extra invitation to be extended by each member to friends.

Several friends of W. G. Hockridge in this city, have received mysterious communications recently from that gentleman, dated Yokobama, Japan, where Mr. Hockridge has been sojourning for some time on business for the firm with which he is engaged in New York. Whether or not his short residence in Japan has changed Mr. H.'s handwriting, the boys are unable to determine, but as he is expected home this week, they will await patiently his translation of the epistle.

Firemen Get a Still Alarm.

Some of the firemen were called out by a still alarm, at 10:30 Sunday morning, to the residence of W. W. Knickerbocker, 108 West Front street. Sweepings of dust, accumulated in the hot-air pipes, had caught fire, and a furnace of flame shot up through one of the registers. The fire was extinguished, and the pipes were cleaned out, without damage.

BY THE WAY.

—The game season closes Dec. 15.

—Hear F. X. Schoonmaker at the Citizens' meeting in Music Hall, to-night.

—A self-registering thermometer at 120 Central avenue marked only 10 degrees above zero, last night. Can this be beat?

—Last night the Rev. T. Logan Murphy, rector of Holy Cross church, preached a very eloquent sermon at Monroe Avenue chapel.

—There is every assurance from the way the tickets are going, that there won't be an empty seat in Music Hall Wednesday evening.

—One of the theater parties that has engaged a box for "Mr. Wilkinson's Widows", at Music Hall, Wednesday evening, will have supper at the Country club afterwards.

—The valve in the whistle of the Scott Press works got fast, at 6 o'clock last night, and the whistle screeched alarmingly for 15 minutes. Everybody who heard it wondered what it meant.

—The arrests that have been made for illegal registering, are merely for the purpose of intimidating voters. A man can register in any ward in the city even if he has only lived there five minutes, provided he has not registered in some other ward.

—Black bass fishing ends Dec. 1.

—There is good skating to-day on the pond at Mr. Martine's place between Broadway and Prospect avenue.

—The Scott printing press works at Plainfield, N. J., are running overtime to keep up with orders.—Press and Printer.

—Call at the office of the Postal Telegraph company, 4 Park avenue, and get one of their neat and convenient books of blanks.

—All boys over fourteen years of age, whether members of the Plainfield Young Men's Auxiliary or not, are invited to a meeting, to be addressed by George M. Ellison, of Rahway, next Tuesday evening at 8, at the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association.

—One of the most valuable pieces of property ever offered at public sale in Plainfield is the Jennings estate, corner of Madison avenue and West Front street, which, as advertised in another column, will be sold at auction, to close the estate, on Monday, Dec. 28, 1891.

Dr. Deane's Dyspepsia Pills are unquestionably good. They are, in my opinion, all they claim to be. I have tried them and found in them what I needed. I believe they will cure Dyspepsia, and that is saying much for any medicine. I am glad, therefore, to give my testimony. The REV. DANIEL F. WARRAN, D. D., Rector Holy Trinity, Jersey City Heights.

Fire broke out in the Walsh building, at Railroad avenue and Hamilton, Newark, at midnight Saturday. It was after 2 o'clock yesterday before the flames were got under control. Losses will amount to $40,000.

During a fight between Hungarians at a birthday party in the notorious "Blue Row" near Elizabethport last night, Andrew Garko was stabbed with a butchers knife in the neck. His injuries are not considered serious.

James Dillon, who claims to be a New Yorker, and who was arrested in Newark while trying to dispose of some jewelry, has been identified as the burglar who robbed Mrs. Martin's houses. He is believed to have commited other burglaries in Essex County.

Shiloh's Cough Cure

This is beyon question the most successful Cough Medicine we have ever sold; a few doses invariably cure the worst cases of Cough, Croup and Bronchitis, while its wonderful success in the cure of Consumption is without a parallel in the history of medicine. Since its first discovery it has been sold on a guarantee, a test which no other medicine can stand. If you have a cough we earnestly ask you to try it. Price 10c., 50c. and $1. If your lungs are sore, chest, or back lame, use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Sold by J. G. Miller, No. 10 East Front street, Plainfield N.J.

FOUND FAULT WITH THE LIGHTS.

Councilmen Allege Fraud in the Matter of Street Lamps.

At 8:45 Saturday night president Smith of the common council took the chair in the council chamber, and called to order the special meeting that had been called. Those present besides Mr. Smith were councilmen Ackerman, Gallup, Hetfield, Johnston, Roberts, Moffett and Spangenberg.

Mr. Smith said that the subject that was to have been brought up was that of electric lights on the streets. The lights were not what they should be—not what the contract called for. Numerous complaints had been made, and an investigation was made, the result of which was the discovery that the people were getting just about one half the service they were paying for. But—he added—no official action could be taken at the present meeting, as it was a legal half-holiday.

Mr. Hetfield said that the street-lighting contract called for 25-candle-power lamps, but that the best electrical experts in the world had tested all the circuits and had found that only from 12 to 17 candle-power was being furnished.

Mr. Spangenberg said that furthermore after 12 o'clock the lamps burned very dimly. The company had been notified of all complaints, but had paid no attention to them. Since the electric light plant had changed hands—he said—things had been very different from what they were under the Westinghouse management. The house lights as well as the street lights were much poorer than they used to be.

Mr. Ackerman thought that there was a good deal of post-legislation about the present complaint, and inquired why the councilmen had not reported the company's deficiencies months ago, when they first knew about them, instead of keeping them secret until after the street lighting contract had been renewed for a year. Mr. Smith responded that no positive proof was had until that very afternoon; that the matter was only under investigation when the contract was renewed. Mr. Spangenberg said that they had supposed the company would do better.

The meeting adjourned at 8:54. At a future meeting official action will be taken. It is probable that competition will be established by permitting the Edison company of North Plainfield to extend its line into Plainfield city.

ANOTHER PLAINFIELD ENTERPRISE.

This City Will Furnish the Country Round With Natural and Artificial Ice.

Readers of THE PRESS will remember that some weeks ago there was announced in these columns, the purchase by A. D. Thompson of a large lot adjoining the oil-cloth works, and the prophecy that another enterprise would soon be inaugurated which would be a credit to the city.

Friday was announced the incorporation of the Plainfield Ice and Cold-Storage company, with a capital stock of $50,000, in which Mr. Thompson is a large stockholder, and other well known citizens are interested. This company will at once build an ice-house on the lot mentioned, capable of holding 5,000 tons, and will fill it with ice from the Pennsylvania mountains—the purest spring-water ice obtainable. Later on, machinery for the manufacture of artificial ice will be procured, and rooms for cold-storage of meats, vegetables and provisions, added. The enterprise will meet a growing demand, and seems sure of success.

Mr. Moffett Paid His Taxes in Advance on the Battle Field.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—In the Courier of Friday evening last, appeared an article under the heading "Mr. Moffett Pays no Taxes", etc.

I desire to say that the statement is a lie. I have been a resident of the city of Plainfield for over 28 years, and, until the last ten years, in business here, and have always paid my taxes. While owning no real estate, I am in the same position as hundreds of others, the deed of the property being in the name of their wife or some other member of their family. In this I speak whereof I know—having been employed for the last ten years in the county clerk's office where the records are kept. I do not think you will have to go very far down the tickets to find others in the same position as I. Therefore I am as interested in keeping down the tax rate as any other citizen.

In reference to the poll tax, the law exempts all old soldiers, and, if lucky enough to own real estate, $500 besides. While the editor of the Courier was too young at the time of the Rebellion to bear arms (except to be carried in arms) he now enjoys the blessings of a free country at the cost of millions of lives and money. I would ask the editor of the Courier how much tax he pays on real estate and personal property into the city treasury! My tax bill for 1891 is $24 42, and will be paid before the day it is due—December 20. ELMORE D. MOFFETT.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

Another Mountain of Smoke Cleared Away.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PRESS:—I notice that the Courier has no reply to make to the questions published in last Tuesday's PRESS, therefore the inference is that they were unanswerable. The pretense that they were not seen, will not wash, because the Courier's article anent the Big six not having a patent right on the street railway question, shows that the article was both seen and noted. Therefore as silence on the other questions implies consent, the taxpayers (both poll and otherwise) can judge for themselves.

Admitting the fact that all the Republicans of the Vatican Five—save one—voted for the railway; why was it? After fighting it at every step, with delays, quibbles and all sorts of obstacles, they at length found that popular sentiment was against them, and they finally did vote—save one only—for it; never dreaming (of course not) that an injunction would be issued from the Vatican, which would effectually offset their little sop to public credulity.

The fact is susceptible of proof by hundreds of witnesses, that the Ring which has had possession of the city government (by divine right) until the past 2 years, have said repeatedly—they and their organs—that they were opposed to any kind of a street railway for Plainfield, (Trolleys are healthy for Brooklyn though); and only because popular sentiment became so strong did they pretend a change of heart, at the eleventh hour. But "Scratch a Chinaman, and you'll find a Tartar".

Messrs. Marsh and Erickson affect silence, and only notice "official" communications; but "officials" do not elect! Taxpayers (both "poll" and "bloated") elect.

The mountain of smoke, regarding the purchase by the city of Mr. Low's sewerage contract—after a lapse of 12 years—seems to have produced this little mouse that could possibly gnaw away the "bonds" that imprison the spirit of the Courier in gloom, and cause it to feel perfect peace if it will only look up. The little mouse is this, and the quotation is from the Courier: "In case the said CITY of Plainfield shall become desirous of purchasing, etc."

Now if it read: "If the 'Big Six,' or the 'Combine,' or even the council shall become desirous, etc.," why, there might be some grounds for getting in "A state of mind," but it says distinctly: "If the CITY wants to purchase, etc."; and without wasting a lot of words—trying to prove what any sensible man can see for himself—the sum and substance is simply this: The voice or will of the City in this case will be just as powerful, as when the Pickwick club submits its proposition to the people (printed with a very small "p") to ratify the Kean-Sewell sewerage system; to be built and paid for by bonds which are not bonds, and which any city ought to be proud to stagger under.

The City—with a big big "C"—will have a voice in saying whether it wants to buy or not; and the people will see that their arbitrators do not betray them; if they do, they will do that for which Plainfield is justly famous: GIT OUT AN INJUNCTION. There's plenty more left.

TAXPAYER.

Harvest Home at Warren Mission.

One of the most pleasing of entertainments, under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor society of Warren mission, was held in the chapel Friday evening. The large platform was covered with hay and leaves; in the rear stood two large shocks of corn surrounded with large bundles of rye straw; in the front most all of the vegetables and fruits of the season were very prominent, and resting upon a rustic seat were the sickle, forks and rakes, as though having done their work were laid aside. It was a beautiful effect and most appropriate for this season of the year. The following was the programme:

PART FIRST.

Singing—Coronation.....Congregation
Scripture Reading and Prayer.
Singing—"Blest be the tie".....Congregation

PART SECOND.

Tableau in two scenes—Old-Fashioned Courtship.
Banjo Solo.....William Force
Singing—"Farewell Mother".....Choir
Reading.....Philip Zimmer
Singing—"Only a Homeless and Wandering Child".....Choir
Recitation—"In the Tombs".....Mr. J. Vegiard
Tableau—The Milk Maid.
Recitation—"Dot Baby of Ming".....P. Zimmer
Banjo Solo.....William Force
Recitation.....Mr. James Vegiard
Recitation—"The Blue and the Gray".....Mrs. Vegiard
Solo and Chorus—Miss Ida Dunham and Choir
Tableau—The Bridal scene.

For this last scene, the congregation had their anticipations excited, expecting something grand. Just before the time for the curtain to be drawn, many rose from their seats. Their curiosity was eventually satisfied by seeing a large new bridle suspended on a hay fork. Particular mention should be made of the recitations by Mr. and Mrs. Vegiard. A social time followed.

From Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher.

"40 ORANGE ST., BROOKLYN, N. Y., Feb. 11, 1890.

"I have used ALLCOCK'S PLASTERS for some years, for myself and family, and as far as able, for the many sufferers who came to us for assistance, and have found them a genuine relief for most of the aches and pains which flesh is heir to. I have used ALLCOCK'S PLASTERS for all kind of lameness and acute pain, and, by frequent experiments, find that they can control many cases not noticed in your circulars.

"The above is the only testimonial I have ever given in favor of any plaster, and if my name has been used to recommend any other it is without my authority or sanction."

MRS. HENRY WARD BEECHER.

The Rev. Mr. Richards Cannot Forget Nor Forgive the Licensing of the Elkwood.

Following is an extract from yesterday morning's sermon in the Crescent Avenue church, by the Rev. W. R. Richards:

"There are important issues before our city this week, involving the interests and rights of the people of this city. So far as these issues touch merely what we call political questions, or differences of judgment about practical measures, I do not think this is the best place, or the best day, to discuss them. But that it is the duty of every good citizen, and every Christian man, to concern himself to see that somewhere these issues are set before the whole people fairly, and then settled by the will of the whole people, according to the best judgment that God may give them,—it does not change a preacher into a stump speaker to say as much as that.

"And I feel to-day that my duty as a Christian minister compels me to say something more than that;—to refresh your memory on certain chapters of not very ancient Plainfield history. On the 25th day of January last I was led to say certain things here about certain bills that were to be offered in the State Legislature to legalize race-track gambling, and Sunday saloon-opening. The subject was one of such general interest that the sermon was afterwards published; as were many other addresses on the same subject elsewhere. You know what an interest was shown by the good people through the State,—the petitions and remonstrances without number that flowed in toward Trenton; and you know the result, that those iniquitous bills did not even get out of committee. It was an encouraging indication of what a people can do in the way of defeating unrighteous legislation, when they are enough aroused to their responsibility, and have a mind to work. I do not suppose that fight is ended yet: there may be reverses ahead of us: but at least it is something to have gained one battle in the war.

"But I mention that old sermon now because of one paragraph in it that referred to matters nearer home. Inasmuch as the paragraph has been already published, and circulated, no one can complain that it should be quoted. It reads as follows:

"'I feel constrained to speak of one other matter here in our own city. It has come to me merely as newspaper rumor, and may be incorrect; but the rumor is that an application will be made to our city council for a license to open a saloon, or a hotel bar, almost next door to the Trinity Reformed church on Second street. I believe the sentiment of most communities has decided that a drinking place so near either a church or a school is a nuisance. I suppose that is the common sentiment in Plainfield. If such an application is to be made, and if there is any danger that a majority of our representatives in the city council will vote to grant it, I do wish there might be some way of so declaring our adverse sentiment in advance that they will be constrained to heed it.'

"I have quoted the words just as they were spoken and printed not quite a year ago. No doubt you remember the subsequent history. It soon became known that such an application had been made. Protests, representing, I suppose, a very large part of all the Christian people in this place, irrespective of denomination or party, were sent in to the council. The pastor of the church chiefly interested entered his earnest plea. But our city council did not show itself so considerate of public sentiment as did the Legislature at Trenton. That drinking place was licensed, and opened. It has had a checkered history since—such a history that men of all parties to-day seem reluctant to be publicly quoted as friendly to it. But you remember how that place was licensed by our city council. I am not here to inquire who were responsible for that action. You as citizens will do well to find out. We pray for the interests of temperance and good morals and religion of this town. If an opportunity comes knocking at your door to show what you think of that sort of treatment of the moral sentiment of the place, by those who were chosen to enforce that sentiment, open the door at once, and make the most of such opportunity. I think it will do little good for us to go on praying for the coming of Christ's kingdom here, unless we do our best to condemn, and render impossible forever after, that way of administering our city's affairs."

In Memoriam.

A very impressive memorial service to Mrs. Sarah J. C. Downs was held in the W. C. T. U. rooms yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Tomlinson conducted the exercises, and tenderly and lovingly paid tribute of respect and affection to the memory of the departed. The twenty-third Psalm, which Mrs. Downs loved so well, was repeated, and her favorite hymns were sung.

In the death of this remarkable woman New Jersey women have lost a brave leader, a fearless advocate of temperance; a writer whose thoughts, belief and utterances, though somewhat perhaps in advance of the age, were yet so charitable, and forcible and convincing as to win men and women both to her views of justice and truth and right.

Her last words to all at her bedside—so characteristic, and beautiful, and inspiriting—will long be remembered by all who knew and loved her:

"Good-night here; but good-morning in the light of eternity."

You cannot deny facts, and it is a fact that Salvation Oil is the greatest pain-cure. 25 cents.

VIEWS OF THE VISITOR.

Matters of General Interest in This Month's Issue of the Rev. Mr. Mitchell's Paper.

Mr. Firman A. Long has moved into his own beautiful home at 37 Summit avenue.

Mrs. S. O. Doane is still in very feeble health, but much better than during August.

Mr. J. H. Howell and family, 19 Craig place, have recently moved here from Jersey City.

Mrs. W. H. Lyon enjoyed a recent visit from her parents who reside in White Plains, N. Y.

Mrs. K. G. Emerson, 42 Central avenue, is home again after several months' absence in Iowa.

Two of Mrs. Mitchell's sisters, from Pittsburg, have been visiting at the parsonage for several weeks.

November 18, at the parsonage, were married Howard S. Thompson to Sophia Mielestki, and Walter H. Coriell to Lulu Woolley.

Mrs. Ashbrook, of Philadelphia, the second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James McGee, is now slowly recovering from an illness which caused her family and friends much anxiety.

Bishop Ninde, who is regarded throughout the church as the "John, the beloved disciple" of the Episcopal Board, has been secured by the pastor to dedicate the North Plainfield chapel. The Bishop has never preached in Plainfield, but a great treat is promised to all who may hear him.

The response to the call made by the ladies of the Home Missionary society for clothing to send to the superintendent of our Indian Territory Mission, was very liberal and hearty. A large box was filled with excellent clothing for the missionaries and their families. The value of the things was estimated to be $294.50.

Mr. Chas. H. McBride's father spent a recent Sabbath with him here. The father, who has been for many years superintendent of our Sunday-school in Kingston, N. Y., was greatly pleased with our school. He thinks it is a model school, and surely it is. Mr. James W. Jackson is a model superintendent, lacking in no essential qualification, and possessing a rare combination of excellencies which peculiarly fit him for his responsible office.

DUNELLEN DOINGS.

Interesting Items from a Thriving Borough, by Our Own Correspondent.

Mrs. Henry VanMiddlesworth died at her late residence on Washington avenue, last Saturday afternoon, after an illness of two weeks. Mrs. VanMiddlesworth was one of Dunellen's oldest inhabitants, and last May celebrated her 40th wedding anniversary.

Last Wednesday night thieves entered the butcher shop of W. H. Carman and stole a large turkey weighing 22 pounds. They effected an entrance through a side door, and if it had not been for a savage dog chained to the ice box the would have probably taken more.

The W. C. T. U. held a memorial meeting to Mrs. Downs, yesterday afternoon, in their rooms.

The Y. P. S. C. E. held their prayer meeting after the church service last evening. If that hour proves successful they will continue to do so during the winter months.

A series of revival meetings are being held in the M. E. church.

Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Reynolds, who were married a short time ago, returned from their wedding trip last Friday night, and Dunellen's band of serenaders turned out in full force to receive them. Mr. Reynolds treated the boys so well that they thought they would pay their respects to Al. Wilson, who was married over a month ago, but managed to keep it quiet for some time. Mr. Wilson entertained his guests royally.

A Great Comedy at Music Hall Wednesday Evening.

This week at Music Hall, the managers will take great pleasure in presenting two of the greatest of New York theatrical successes with the original stock companies.

The first will be "Mr. Wilkinson's Widows" by manager Charles Frohman's comedy organization. It has just closed a very long and profitable run in New York, and a proof of its genuine success may be found in the fact that it will return to the metropolis for a run after the close of its present trip. The comedy is said to be in many particulars the best play of its kind the stage has ever shown.

The company which appears at Music Hall, Wednesday evening, is the same that presented the play in New York. It is admitted on all sides that it is one of the strongest comedy organizations ever formed in the country. There is not an individual in the cast who has not been warmly praised by metropolitan critics, and most of them have made distinguished successes. They are nearly all familiar to Plainfield people as clever and experienced artists.

J. B. COWARD, City Clerk.

Plainfield N. J., November 24, 1891.

AN ORDINANCE

For the repairing and permanent improvement of a part of Westervelt avenue extension.

The Inhabitants of the city of Plainfield by their Common Council do enact as follows:

Sec. 1. That the roadbed of Westervelt avenue extension from the northwest side of East Front street to a point opposite the centre line of Orange street, be forthwith repaired and spread with broken stone for a width of eight feet on each side of the centre line of said street, and for a depth of six inches, at the general expense of the city, to be paid for after first applying the direct contribution of property owners out of the money raised by tax for the improvement of streets, as provided by the act of the Legislature entitled, "an act to authorize cities to make permanent improvements in the roadbeds of the streets at the general expense," approved May 13, 1884.
